Letter from Major-General
St. Leger.

It did not appear that any exertion or movement of any kind had been made during ten days. The Vizier's officer shewed me no attention or instance of civility; and I was informed by Captain Mockler, had the insolence to say he supposed I was going to attack Bhurtpore.

I also went by Buddree, which appeared to me, as I passed it, a strong place, more so than many I have seen, and to require a proper body of troops, officers of experience, and formidable artillery for its reduction.

The Aumil, I am told, was at a little distance, though I saw nothing of him or any of his people. The officer in command of a company from Pertaubghur was posted at a distance of about four miles, where I saw him before I reached Buddree. The fort and country round it appeared in a state of most perfect tranquillity.

But I think it right to observe (if I may credit the accounts I collected on the spot), the oppressions and exaction of the Aumils are very great, and such as may have a tendency to provoke resistance and put the country in arms.

I shall be happy, Sir, to co-operate in any wish of yours where my duty will permit; but when I consider the nature of the service you propose, how late the season is, and what appeared to me an almost total want of preparation on the part of those who are principally concerned, I cannot act better, in my own judgment, than submit the decision to superior power.

Letter from

to Government.

To Captain J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch under date the 22d ultimo, reporting your proceedings in consequence of a requisition from his Excellency the Vizier for the assistance of a battering train for the reduction of certain forts within his Excellency's dominions, and to signify to you the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council's approbation of the measures which you adopted on that occasion.

The Governor-General in Council is of opinion, that as, by the stipulations of the subsisting treaty with the Nawaub Vizier, his Excellency is entitled to expect that the military aid which is demanded on his part shall be furnished, it is very desirable that such additional force as may be requisite for the purpose of the service on which the troops are to be employed should be detached from Elahabad without any delay, provided that the adoption of the measure shall not appear to the officer commanding in the field to be liable to objection, as likely to be productive of considerable inconvenience, with reference to the probable effect on the health of the troops from the employment of them on the proposed duty at the period of the year to which these operations may be unavoidably protracted. As, however, in the advanced state of the season, some apprehensions may justly be entertained on that point, the request of his Lordship in Council has been signified to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that a discretion may be left with the officer commanding in the field to furnish the additional force immediately or not until after the close of the rainy season, as under this consideration circumstances shall appear to him to render it expedient to adopt the one or the other of those alternatives. This communication of the resolutions of Government on the subject of your despatch will enable you, in the event of the reinforcement not being immediately supplied supplied agreeably to the requisition of the Vizier, to satisfy his Excellency with respect to the causes of the delay.

Extract from the proceedings of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in the Military Department, under date the 4th April 1808.

To Major-General St. Leger, commanding the Troops in the Field, Cawnpore.

Sir:

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you the enclosed copy of a letter which I have this day received from the Commanding Officer at Pertaubghur, together with a translation of a letter addressed to that officer by Rajah Newaz Sing, Aumil of Pertaubghur.

2. I am sorry to observe in the enclosed documents a statement of the conduct of Zalim Sing, so opposite to that which was conveyed to me by his Excellency the Vizier on a very recent occasion, and so demonstrative of the serious necessity of adopting rigorous measures against that rebellious Zemindar.

3. As I presume that the result of your reference to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief on the subject of my letter, under date the 17th March, must be known by this time, and must authorize your compliance with the requisition of his Excellency the Vizier, it is unnecessary for me to offer any remarks in addition to the detailed information which will be conveyed to you by the enclosed despatch from Major Knox.

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,

Lucknow,
19th March 1808.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you, that in consequence of a representation from the Aumil, Rajah Newaz Sing, stating that Zalim Sing, Talookdar of Buddree, and Dan Sing, Talookdar of Gowra, had withheld the payment of the Kista due on their lands from the beginning of Koor to the end of Phaugin, and applying for British troops to enforce the discharge of the arrears, or eventually for the reduction of the forts of the above refractory Zemindars, I despatched perwannahs addressed to those persons, copies of which, and of the answers thereto, are herewith transmitted for your information.

2. Having communicated to Rajah Newaz Sing the substance of the answer returned by Zalim Sing, he was desirous of a personal conference with me on the subject; and for that purpose came yesterday twice to my quarters. During his last visit I received Dan Sing's reply, which was immediately made known to the Rajah.

3. The assertions made by the Aumil in his observations on Zalim Sing's answer were now repeated in his remarks upon that of Dan Sing; to wit, that there was not a word of truth in it. He insisted that neither of those Talookdars could be brought to pay the revenues by any means short of the employment of our troops for the reduction of their forts, or at least of one of them; that they were old incorrigible rebels; and that, if an immediate example should not be made of them, nearly the whole of the renters in his districts would

Consultations,

would be emboldened to withhold payment of their assessments, to the almost total loss of the revenue for the current year.

4. In my reply I told the Aumil that, from the information he had given me on former occasions, the inference he had now drawn could not be well admitted: that if the chastisement of three or four refractory Talookdars possessed of forts should be postponed, on account of the excessive and growing heat of the season, it did not necessarily follow that it would be impossible, or even difficult, to enforce payment of the revenues from all those who had not the same means of resistance. To this the Rajah replied, that if the fort of Zalim Sing were not reduced, not a man would give him a rupee, and that he should lose twenty lacs. He added, that provided a sufficient force were sent against Zalim Sing, he would submit on its appearance before his fort. I asked him what force he would consider adequate to this service; and he gave his opinion, that there ought not to be less than two battalions of infantry, six battering guns, and five hundred cavalry. This opinion I requested him to put in writing; which, after a short consultation with his people, and reducing the number of infantry and guns, he assented to, and presented me a letter, of which a transcript is inserted in the accompanying paper. Upon the number of troops stated by him as necessary for this service, I remarked that they could not be furnished from this post: to which he made answer, that the district of Sooltanpore was now so well managed, that the whole of the battalion stationed there might be ordered against Buddree without prejudice to the revenue of that quarter.

I have now laid before you the substance of what passed between me and the Aumil on the great object of his visit. He urged and reurged the necessity of the immediate reduction of Buddree, and maintained that any postponement of this measure would occasion the loss of nearly the whole revenue of the country under his management. This statement will, I imagine, appear to you to be extravagantly exaggerated. Admitting a delay in chastising Zalim Sing may encourage one or two more in the possession of forts to delay payment of their assessments, it seems not at all credible that the great majority of landholders, who have no place of strength for the security of their persons and property, can be excited by such temporary conformity to a conduct that would bring on themselves immediate and unavoidable punishment. Newaz Sing, in a precipitate eagerness to exact the collections, overlooks every other consideration; and for the most trifling portion of the revenue would expose our troops to service of that nature, which at this season would be highly destructive to the Europeans employed on it.

With respect to the force recommended by the Aumil for the reduction of Buddree, though I have no doubt that one considerably less would, at a proper time of the year, be adequate to the service, yet if this measure should be judged by you to demand immediate execution, I beg leave to offer my opinion of its being advisable to employ the whole of the force specified by the Aumil, with the addition of two howitzers. A force of that strength would possibly intimidate Zalim Sing to immediate submission; or, in the event of resistance, expedite the fall of his fort.

Translation of a Letter from Rajah Newaz Sing to Major Knox, dated 15th Mohurram, or 14th March 1808.

(After the usual compliments.)

A force, consisting of a battalion and a half of Sepoys, five hundred cavalry, and four battering guns, is judged to be requisite for the subjection of Zalim Sing, the Talookdar of Buddree, purgunnah Behar, and for the purpose of destroying his forts. If such a force be employed he will speedily be brought to a proper sense of his duty. Your own judgment, however, respecting the extent extent of the force, must be far more correct than mine, and ought to be the rule of your conduct; but it is necessary to be expeditious in this affair, otherwise a great loss of revenue must be sustained, and all will be disorder and confusion. I have written this for your information.

Major-General St. Leger, commanding in the field, having determined, in concert with the Resident at Lucknow, upon the necessity of adopting rigorous measures against Zalim Sing, the rebellious Talookdar of Buddree purgunnah, and of reducing the fort in his possession, I have it in command to acquaint you, that the following detail of troops, in addition to the battering train published in Field Army Orders of this day, are to be employed on that service :

Letter from Assistant Deputy Adjutant-General.

Two squadrons of the 7th Regiment of Native Cavalry with one galloper.

Seven companies of the first battalion of the 12th Regiment, including the five companies now at Pertaubghur.

Eight companies of the second battalion of the 12th Regiment, with their field pieces.

The whole under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory.

I am further directed to express the Major-General's desire, that ~~five~~ companies from Pertaubghur may be detached to Elahabad without loss of time, to receive charge of, and proceed from thence as an escort with the battering train to Buddree, in the vicinity of which fort the remainder of the troops destined for the subjection of Zalim Sing are to be assembled forthwith, and to put themselves under the orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory.

Sir :

I have the honour to enclose you a copy of my despatch of yesterday's date to the Resident at Lucknow, for the purpose of being laid before the Major-General commanding in the field. In addition to its contents, I beg leave to report that the fortress of Buddree is an oblong square, with six circular bastions, and a rampart from twenty to twenty-five feet high, about eighteen feet thick, surrounded by a ditch about eighteen feet broad and nearly as much in depth: round the fort is a renny wall of the same form, about ten feet high, with a ditch from eight to ten feet broad. There are two embrasures in the north face of this wall, but no guns.

The fort is accessible to the north and west : the other two sides are covered with thick jungle.

It appears to me that there is great oppression carried on by the native collectors, as, from the respectable force with me, the Zemindars are daily coming in to me for protection.

I take the liberty of enclosing the Talookdar's, Zalim Sing, statement of the circumstances between him and the Aumil, not having a person here that can translate it.

I am endeavouring all I can to bring their affairs to a settlement ; as, if I should be compelled to open trenches, I am apprehensive I should lose half of my men from the unfavourableness of the season.

To J. Baillic, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you of my arrival at this place, and two miles from the fortress of Buddree. I yesterday, accompanied by Lieutenant Robertson of the Engineers, rode down to reconnoitre the fortress. The Talookdar, Zalim Sing, on hearing of my being near, sent out a message to me, to say I need not reconnoitre, but go in and take a view of it, which I did : and on my approach he threw himself at my feet imploring for mercy, and declared it was never his wish to rebel against his sovereign, and he had agreed to pay his revenue.

At the same time he observed that he had been oppressed by the Aumil, who, from certain causes, wishes to dispossess him of the land revenue that has been held for ages by his family, in favour of Mohun Loll, a turbulent, troublesome man of some consequence, and owner of several forts, the principal of which is Putgawah with seventeen guns in it, and it is daily undergoing repairs for its better defence.

I beg leave to suggest to you my opinion of the propriety of insisting on this man, Mohun Loll, giving up his guns, from his being already in the continual habit of endeavouring to promote rebellion ; and I have not the smallest doubt, if he is allowed to go on in his career, but that he will, from his power in the district, throw it altogether into rebellion and discontent, from the oppressive measures he has adopted.

He is now in camp, and if I am allowed I will seize him, and make him give up his guns, or send him to his Excellency the Vizier. It was only the day before yesterday that he sent two hundred matchlockmen and twenty-five horsemen to the brother of Zalim Sing, who is at variance with his brother ; and even further, he advised Zalim Sing to fire on my force, in order to gain his object of dispossessing him.

As for Rajah Newaz Sing, I have repeatedly written for his attendance on me, but to no effect. Indeed, he has now had fifteen days' notice from me, and is putting me off from day to day.

The Dewan at this place is always in a state of intoxication, and my detachment is in great distress for provisions, none having been provided previous to my arrival : so much so, that my tent was surrounded all day yesterday by sepoys, and none has come in this morning.

I beg leave to transmit you the enclosed statements from Zalim Sing and the Aumil, for your consideration ; and I hope you will obtain an order from his Highness the Vizier, so as to prevent the effusion of innocent blood.

Translation

Translation of an Arzee from Zalim Sing, Proprietor of the District of Buddree, to Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, dated 2d April 1808.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
18 April 1808;

from Zalim Sing:

Having performed the ceremonies of humble salutations, it is represented to you that the state of affairs is this: that my Vakeel, Deena Sing, having waited upon you and learnt how matters were, has come to me, and informed me that Rajah Newaz Sing, at the instigation of Mohun Loll Oopudhea, has caused an English battalion and artillery to march against me. What power does your servant possess, and what is my fort, that the British troops should march against it; for I am obedient to your commands, and will perform whatever you wish? My preparing a house is for my protection from my brethren in the neighbourhood, and not to oppose the British troops. I am in every way ready to obey your orders and pay the revenue of Government.

The circumstances attending the settlement of the revenue for the present year are these: that Rajah Newaz Sing, in the commencement of his government, authorized his brother, Jya Sing, Aumil of the purgunnah of Nuhar, to settle the revenue to be paid by me. The said Aumil, by the directions of Government, voluntarily agreed that I should pay my revenue directly to Government. Your servant caused the Zemindars and Ryots of the district to submit to authority, and was content with the allowance agreed to be given me by Government for my subsistence. The written agreement of this settlement, with the seal of the Aumil, is in the possession of Doorga Persaud, Kanoongoe of the said purgunnah: procure it and do justice. To that settlement I also agree.

The circumstances of the settlement of the last year are, that Captain Jalun was on command here, and I settled the revenue I was to pay, and for the payment of it procured a receipt from Meerza Beechoo Beg, commandant. The said Meerza is in the Rajah's camp: inquire of him how I paid my revenue. According to that settlement, also, I am ready to pay my revenue.

The statement of the settlement of the revenue paid by me for the year before last is this: that Mr. (Lieutenant-Colonel) D'Auvergne was in command here, and I settled my revenue, and agreeably to the orders of the English Buhadoors, gave up possession of my house to Government. Two or three days afterwards, the English Buhadoors, from my conduct as a Ryot, took compassion on me, and by their taking me by the hand again put me in possession of my house. The said Oopudhea, to obtain payment of the revenue of Government, from animosity placed my family in Shunpoor, in a small fort belonging to one of my adversaries, Ajoodheea Bukhsh, to be released when I paid the revenue of Government. I, from helplessness, ~~agreed to this~~ also, and paid the revenue justly due to Government, and ~~obtained relief from~~ further demands. Inquire into this from my adversaries. I am ready to pay my revenue according to that settlement also.

Your servant is in every respect ready (to pay his revenue) according to the three settlements, and to obey the English Buhadoors. Rajah Newaz Sing, at the instigation of Oopudhea, obstructs the settlement of your servant's revenue. The account of the animosity between me and Oopudhea is this: that he has taken possession of the fort of Audhea by force, which belonged to the zemindar of your servant's ancestors. With this I am dissatisfied; wherefore Oopudhea is hostile to me to such a height, that when I was going with my family to bathe in the month of October, the said Oopudhea and men belonging to my adversaries waited treacherously for me with a piece of artillery loaded with grape, at a rivulet near the river Ganges; but the Subadar of the Sircar (meaning probably a Subadar of the battalion commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory) has seen that place. God is beneficent, and acquainted me beforehand; and having proceeded in another direction, I bathed and returned to my house. He (Oopudhea) was ashamed, and having hatred in his heart, from enmity injured me in my right as Zemindar of that fort, and has given four villages belonging to it to my adversaries; and by confirming them in the possession, has made me every way despair of my right as Zemindar. In this manner he has marked my liver with the scar of regret.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

regret. Being helpless I have been patient. God will give your servant the reward of his patience; or you, who are the most just of the age, and his Highness (the Nawaub Vizier) will do me justice. He (Oopudhea) by his instigation, has brought the British and his Highness's force upon me, who am weak, that he may ruin me. What power have I to be saucy to my patron. I am in every way obedient to the orders of Government, and ready to pay my revenue. I hope you will do me justice, and allow me to inhabit my house, for it is better that I should shew my loyalty; if not, favour me with my dismissal from Government, and by your high auspices, wherever it may be, I will obtain a livelihood, and your good name will remain to eternity.

Secondly. I represent that it happened lately, when you arrived in the purgunnah of Nuhar, that Dewan Ajoodhea Persaud and Jya Sing, Aumil of the said purgunnah, and Subadar Sumer Sing, a servant of the Sircar, were sitting near your tent, when, in the mean time, Oopudhea Mohun Loll came; Deena Sing and Mookum Sing, my Vakeels, were also there; when, in the interim, the Dewan and the said Aumil waited upon you by your desire, and Oopudhea and the said Subadar remained sitting, when Oopudhea said to my Vakeels, "Look now, what a calamity I have brought upon you." My Vakeels replied, by mentioning what a calamity Seetulabukhsh, the Rajah's brother, brought upon me at the bathing time in October, and said, "You have given a bribe of twenty thousand rupees, now, to the Rajah, and brought him here." He (Oopudhea) replied, "What is twenty thousand rupees to punish you: I will expend fifty thousand rupees, even to fifty lacs of rupees, to ruin you." My Vakeels answered, "Why do you pursue me so much to extirpate me, for my master, on Government giving him his dismissal, will retire from his chiefship and zemindaree." He (Oopudhea) said, "How far will you go, for I will pursue you from the sea-shore at Jagurnauth to the west? We are eight men in our house, and in opposing you until seven out of eight be killed, we will not be neglectful of our designs against you." This conversation between the parties happened near your tent, before the Subadar of the Sircar: if you do not credit it, inquire about it from the Subadar of your own Sircar. O! most just of the age, it appears impossible there should be any room for me to escape from so violent an enemy. I hope that I may be favoured with my dismissal from the Sircar (of the Nawaub), that I may live wherever it may be requisite to obtain a livelihood. It was incumbent on me to make this representation. May the sun of your prosperity continue shining and resplendent.

Statement of the Amount of the Revenue of my District, which Oopudhea, from many years of Enmity, has caused to be written down in the Papers of the Sircar (of the Nawaub) at thirty-five thousand Rupees.

In the preceding year I procured a receipt from Meerza Beechoo Beg, commandant, for twenty-five thousand rupees. In the year before last, when my family, until I should pay my revenue, were in a small fort belonging to my adversaries, for twenty-four thousand rupees, which you may ascertain from them.

Oopudhea has given a bad name to my house, even in the presence (of the Nawaub); but there is no account taken of a large fort which he has built at Bhugwan and mounted guns upon it.

I have fully represented to you the whole of my obedient conduct as a subject, and the enmity of Oopudhea to me; and I hope, from your favour and kindness, that you will by every means cause me, undisturbed, to inhabit my house. More would be transgressing the bounds of respect.

Ordered, That in consequence of the foregoing extract from the Military Department, the following instructions be addressed to the Resident at Lucknow :

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

Letter
from Secretary to
Government

1. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has received a copy of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory's letter to your address, under date the 4th instant.

2. His Lordship in Council deems it highly probable that the representation of the Talookdar of Buddree, Zalim Sing, is well founded, and is extremely anxious to avoid the necessity of prosecuting measures of coercion against the Talookdar, which, under such circumstances, might bear the character of measures directed to the support and encouragement of injustice and oppression. It is to be feared, that the employment of the British troops for the suppression of disorders within the territories of the Vizier, has too frequently been occasioned by the misconduct of his Excellency's Aumils in exciting these disorders by their injustice and rapacity ; at the same time Government is aware that requisitions for the employment of our troops on such occasions could not be rejected, consistently with the obligations of the engagements subsisting between the British Government and the State of Oude. The origin of the evil is the vicious system of his Excellency's administration. But although no remedy for this evil appears to be immediately practicable, it is extremely desirable that the necessity of coercive measures should, in all practicable cases, be superseded by the adoption of a system of proceeding, which would bring to light any acts of oppression and injustice on the part of those public officers, whose authority the British arms are required to support, and would subject the perpetrators to punishment, or to the legitimate restraints of the local Government.

3. In the present case, the Governor-General in Council desires that you will suggest to his Excellency, the absolute necessity of instituting an investigation into the circumstances stated by Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, representing to his Excellency the impropriety of employing the British troops in arduous military operations, without previously ascertaining the justice of the cause in which they are to be engaged, and the importance of avoiding, if possible, the necessity of undertaking them, by endeavouring to effect an adjustment of the disputes which have occasioned the late application for the service of the British troops. At the same time, it will be highly expedient that you should satisfy yourself of the efficiency and impartiality of the means which his Excellency may adopt for the purposes above described ; and, with this view, it might be advisable that a proper person should be despatched on the part of the Vizier, in the capacity of an Ameen, to investigate the circumstances stated by Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, and that he should be accompanied by a person on your part to be joined in the commission. This measure, however, is merely suggested for your consideration, leaving it to your discretion, regulated by local circumstances, to propose it to his Excellency.

4. The Governor-General in Council has no doubt that your immediate attention will have been directed to that part of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory's letter to your address, which relates to the deficiency of supplies for the subsistence of the troops under his command, and that you will have urged the

The 16th May 1808.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to Government, &c.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 18th ultimo, conveying the sentiments and commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council on the subject of a despatch to my address from Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, commanding a detachment of the British troops employed within the district of Behar.

2. Of the frequent misconduct and oppression of a great majority, if not the whole of the Vizier's Aumils, and of the radical vices and defects of the general system of his Excellency's administration, no person can be more sensible than I am; and hence the employment of the British troops in support of the authority of his Excellency's Aumils, without a careful and minute investigation of all the circumstances of the case (although the necessity for this measure has but rarely occurred since my appointment to the Residency) has been constantly the subject of my peculiar anxiety and concern.

3. With a reference, however, to the particular case of Zalim Sing, Talookdar of Buddree, I have great satisfaction in assuring you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that the measures which have been adopted against that person, were, in my opinion, unquestionably just and expedient, and such as I should have thought it my duty to pursue, having already frequently adopted them, under the orders of the British Government, with a reference to our own Zemindars.

4. The known bad character of Rajah Newaz Sing, Aumil of Behar, and the circumstances, under my immediate observation, which attended his emancipation from a gaol to take the management of an extensive and populous province, had rendered me extremely desirous to postpone, and had even induced me to evade, for a time, the employment of the British troops in operations of any consequence for the support of that Aumil's authority, in the hope that the early failure of his engagements to the Vizier would have tended to convince his sovereign of the impropriety of the appointment of such a person to an office of high trust and importance, and would have operated to produce his recall.

5. Accordingly, it was not until a period of several weeks had elapsed from the date of the Vizier's requisition, until a correspondence of considerable extent had taken place with his Excellency, and with the Commanding Officer at Pertaubghur, and until a minute inquiry from several other persons had convinced me of the necessity for the reduction of Buddree, independently of the truth or falsehood of the Aumil's statement, that I at length considered it to be my duty to recommend those measures of coercion with a reference to the Talookdar, Zalim Sing, which have terminated in so satisfactory a manner.

6. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copy of my reply to Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory's despatch, under date the 4th ultimo, together with copies of three other letters which I have more recently addressed to that officer; and I have further the satisfaction of reporting to you, for the Governor-General's information, that according to accounts received last night from the Vizier, the Talookdar, Zalim Sing, has been reinstated in the possession of his villages at a more moderate than the former assessment.

7. Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory's representations on the important subject of his supplies have, of course, been most regularly attended to, and my repeated remonstrances on this subject to the Vizier, if his Excellency's written assurances and those of his Aumil can be credited, have produced the desired effect; although the mutual complaints of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory and Rajah Newaz Sing against each other have continued without intermission since the commencement of the military operations, and have lately formed the principal subject of discussion between his Excellency the Vizier and me.

8. An inquiry into the conduct of the Aumil has appeared to us both to be indispensable, owing to some accusations of a very serious nature which Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory has recently preferred; and I shall use my best endeavours to ensure the impartiality of this investigation, and the exemplary punishment of the Aumil, if the charges against him shall be proved.

9. At the same time, it is my duty to remark to you the extreme jealousy of his Excellency the Vizier with regard to all investigations of this nature, and to every degree of interference between him and his courtiers and Aumils on my part, or between his Aumils and Zemindars, or other subjects, on the part of the commanding officers of the troops who are employed in the support of his authority and in preserving the peace of his dominions.

10. It is generally reported and believed, and I have no reason to doubt the information which I possess on this subject, that all his Excellency's Aumils and Zemindars, and indeed his subjects at large, have been prohibited, under severe penalties, from holding any intercourse with British officers, and that they are encouraged and excited by his Excellency's news-writers and agents in the several districts of the interior to prefer false or frivolous complaints against the British officers and soldiers.

11. A few striking instances of the latter nature have been brought to my immediate notice by one of his Excellency's Aumils, Meerza Mehdi Alee Khan, whom I have reason to consider as now suffering the effects of his sovereign's resentment for his supposed attachment to our Government.

12. The general system of his Excellency's conduct and manners to all those of his courtiers and others around him, who have been in the habit of visiting at the British Residency and are supposed to look up to the British Government for support, affords a melancholy but unquestionable proof of the disposition to which I have alluded, which has been ascribed to him by all my predecessors in office since his Excellency's accession to the Musnud, and which I have laboured by every conciliatory method, though hitherto unsuccessfully, to correct.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 4th instant, the substance of which, with copies of its Persian enclosures, have been duly submitted for the consideration of his Excellency the Vizier.

2. As no complaints of disaffection or rebellion on the part of Oopudhea Mohun Loll have hitherto been preferred to his Excellency by the Aumil of Pertanbghur, his Excellency was averse to authorizing the measures of rigour against that person which are suggested in your letter to my address, on the ground of Zalim Sing's representation alone, which, as his Excellency very justly observed, might be attributed to personal motives; but, on a further and more mature consideration of the remarks which I offered on this occasion,

Bengal Political

sion, his Excellency has been induced to concur in opinion with you, regarding the expediency of reducing the power of Mohun Loll, by requiring the surrender of his several fortresses and guns, and by eventually depriving him of the means of exciting commotion or rebellion.

3. His Excellency has accordingly authorized and directed his Aumil to make the necessary requisition to Mohun Loll for the surrender of his fortresses and guns without any delay; and in the case of his failure to comply with this requisition, the Aumil has been directed to apply for your aid to enforce the surrender and to insure the demolition of the forts.

4. The enclosed mandate from his Excellency to Rajah Newaz Sing is transmitted open for your perusal and guidance; and you will be pleased to transmit the letter to Newaz Sing, and subsequently to adopt such measures, in concert with that Aumil, for the reduction of the power of Mohun Loll, as may appear to you to be advisable.

5. With a reference to the recent statements and professions of Zalim Sing, his Excellency the Vizier has with great justice observed, that the existence of the fortress of Buddree in its present condition, after having been formerly razed to the ground, and the repeated complaints, not only of the present and every former Aumil of the district, but also of the several Zemindars and Talookdars in the neighbourhood of Buddree, whose villages and lands have been constantly the scene of Zalim Sing's depredations and extortions, afford the clearest and most satisfactory proof of the utter falsehood of his statements and of the insincerity of his present professions.

6. That, if it had never been the wish of Zalim Sing to rebel against the authority of his sovereign, to withhold the payment of his revenue, or to oppress the neighbouring Zemindars, there could be no occasion for the original construction of so strong a fortress as that of Buddree, nor more particularly for the repairs and increased strength of that fortress, subsequent to its reduction and dismantlement by the assistance of the British troops.

7. That, if the professions of Zalim Sing on the present occasion be sincere, he can have no hesitation in surrendering his fortress into your hands for the purpose of its demolition, in common with all the other strong holds in the district, not one of which should, in his Excellency's judgment, be permitted to remain; and that, on the condition of his surrendering his fortress and giving security for the payment of his balances of revenue and for his future submission and good conduct, he may still continue to inhabit his village, and to enjoy all the legal rights and privileges of a Zemindar, in common with the rest of his Excellency's peaceable subjects.

8. That, on the whole, there appears to be no ground of justice in favour of, and every ground of expedience against, an arrangement, on this occasion, with Zalim Sing, which shall leave him in the possession of Buddree; and accordingly his Excellency desires that you will consider the evacuation and demolition of the fortress of Buddree to be the first and most important object of the operations of the detachment under your command.

9. I indulge a confident hope, founded on the report of your conversation with Zalim Sing, that he will be induced to surrender the fortress of Buddree without any effusion of blood, and that the surrender of that fortress will lead to the evacuation of those possessed by Ajoodheah Bukhsh and Mohun Loll, and to the satisfactory settlement of the district.

10. His Excellency the Vizier has repeated his orders to Rajah Newaz Sing for the immediate attendance of that Aumil in your camp, and has censured him in severe terms for his delay, as well as for his inattention to the object of ensuring your regular supplies. His Excellency's mandate upon this subject to the Aumil is also enclosed, for your perusal and transmission to Newaz Sing.

To Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, commanding the Troops before Buddree.

Sir :

1. In transmitting to you the enclosed translations of documents which I have recently received from his Excellency the Vizier, I cannot avoid expressing my confident hope and belief, that the statements which they contain are either totally unfounded or have been very greatly exaggerated.

2. That an officer of your approved judgement and discretion, employed in the reduction of a fortress and suppression of a refractory Zemindar, should have encouraged that Zemindar to hope for your support in resisting the authority of the Aumil, or should have had any friendly intercourse with the Zemindar in question, till security for the surrender of his fortress and the payment of his revenues had been obtained, to your own satisfaction and to that of the Aumil, are circumstances in my mind totally incredible, and which I have no doubt of your being able to refute in the most satisfactory manner.

3. The object of your personal visit to Zalim Sing in the fortress of Buddree, as reported in your letter of the 4th instant, was doubtless the laudable purpose of inducing him to surrender his fort, and to conduct himself as a peaceable subject of the Vizier's Government, without requiring, on your own part, the measures of coercion and rigour which you were instructed ultimately to adopt ; and the conversation between you and Zalim Sing which is reported by his Excellency's news-writer, must, I conclude, have been subsequent to a promise of the immediate surrender of Buddree, or must have no foundation in truth.

4. The reported violence of your treatment of the Hircarrahs of Rajah Newaz Sing must also be destitute of foundation, or must have proceeded on satisfactory proof of a degree of treacherous conduct on their part, which rendered their immediate punishment indispensable to the success of the operations under your guidance.

5. I solicit the favour of an early communication from you of all the circumstances which have led to the statement of the Vizier's news-writer, with the view of enabling me to satisfy his Excellency of the inaccuracy of those statements, and to require from his justice the severe censure, or punishment, of the author of such injurious reports.

Translation of a Paper of Intelligence from Rajah Newaz Sing's Camp, in the Pergunnah of Issoulie, dated 9th Suffer, 1223 Hijeree ; received from the Vizier the 11th April 1808.

Intelligence from Rajah Newaz Sing's
Camp.

A letter directed to Rajah Newaz Sing arrived from his Dewan, Adjoodea Persaud, in Behar, stating that Colonel Gregory with another English gentleman went to the gate of the fort of Buddree, belonging to Zalim Sing, and were met by a man named Mohkum (the Vakeel of Zalim Sing), who presented five rupees as a nuzzer, which the Colonel refused, and said that his master was ready to pay his kists to the Sircar ; that the Colonel then leaving his horse at the gate went into the fort, and was met by Zalim Sing with a nuzzer ; that he embraced Zalim Sing and seated him upon a chair. Zalim Sing presented a horse which the Colonel declined to accept. Zalim Sing then presented a Persian paper which the Colonel put into his pocket, after which two gold mohurs were sent as a nuzzer from the zenanah, which the Colonel accepted. Zalim Sing then represented that he was occupied in the marriage of one of his daughters, and begged the Colonel would give him a berah paun, which the Colonel did, and told him to celebrate the marriage in security, for that the designs of the Aumil should not be permitted to succeed. After this the Colonel got up, when Zalim Sing fell at his feet. The Colonel consoled him, and told him to make known his wishes to Summer Sing, the Subadar, who had been with him before, and that the said Subadar would make the Colonel acquainted with them. The writer further observed, that this being the state of things, the Rajah's early presence was necessary. In answer the Rajah wrote that he would quickly arrive, and that the Dewan must continue to furnish all supplies which might be wanted, so that no inconvenience should be experienced by the British troops.

Translation of another Paper of Intelligence, dated the 10th.

A letter arrived from Ajoodhea Persaud, stating that Sheo Loll, Jemmadar of the Rajah's Hircarrahs, went towards Buddree in search of wells, and was informed by an Aheer of Buddree that the Rajah Zalim Sing had caused them all to be filled up upon hearing of the approach of the English troops. Mohkum Sing and Duneah Sing, Vakeels of Zalim Sing, represented to Colonel Gregory that the abovementioned Hircarrah was inquiring into the state of the fort, &c. : upon this the Colonel was very angry, and sent a message to Ajoodhea Persaud to discharge him. Afterwards the Vakeels represented that four Hircarrahs of Newaz Sing who were with the Colonel carried information of their coming to camp, and of other occurrences, to Ajoodhea Persaud, the Rajah's Dewan. Upon hearing this the Colonel beat them very much and turned them away. The letter also stated, that Zalim Sing had sent his family with four elephants and his goods, under a guard of a hundred and fifty foot and fifteen horse, towards the Jumna, in the English territory; in consequence of which circumstances an advantageous settlement of the district did not appear to be probable, unless the Rajah should speedily arrive, when possibly something might be done.

In answer the Rajah wrote that he would come quickly.

To Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, commanding the Detachment at Behar.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your several despatches noted in the margin,* the contents of which have been submitted to his Excellency the Vizier.

2. The evacuation of the fortress of Buddree is highly satisfactory to his Excellency, who approves of the terms which were granted by you to Zalim Sing, presuming of course, that you have obtained ample security for the liquidation of the balances of revenue which were due by that person, and for his future submissive conduct.

3. I solicit your acceptance of my congratulations on the surrender of the fortress of Buddree in a manner so satisfactory, with a reference to the public concerns, and so creditable to your own management; and I augur from this success, the speedy evacuation of all the other forts in the district, in an equally satisfactory manner.

4. The Vizier's positive orders have been issued to the Aumil of Pertaubghur for the immediate destruction of Buddree, and of every other fortress or ghurry which may hereafter be surrendered to, or taken by, the troops under your command, and made over to the Aumil; and I suggest the propriety of your adopting every measure in your power, to ensure the complete execution of his Excellency's orders on this point.

5. With a reference to the vague and unfounded reports of your proceedings in the fortress of Buddree, and of your violence towards the Vizier's Hircarrahs, which were stated in the akhbars from Pertaubghur, I have not failed to represent in strong terms to his Excellency the improper conduct of his newswriters, and to suggest the necessity for their punishment in an exemplary manner, to deter others from inventing or circulating similar injurious reports.

6. The disavowal of the truth of those reports by a written instrument under the seal of Rajah Newaz Sing or his Dewan, which was promised in your despatch of the 19th instant, will serve to remove any doubt or hesitation in the mind of his Excellency, regarding the justice of the punishment which I have suggested; but for the present, I am sorry to observe that the unaccountable persistance of the Aumil, his Dewan, and of the news-writers, in asserting the circumstances of Zalim Sing's having removed, not only the whole of his private property, but also the crops recently cut in his farms, and even the guns and stores in his fortress, for the purpose of evading the payment of his revenues and exciting future disturbances, and of his being generally supported in those measures of opposition to the Aumil's authority by a Subadar of the detachment under your command, affords some ground of hesitation, on the part of his Excellency, in complying with my suggestions, till a fuller investigation shall take place.

7. In reply to the arzee of Zalim Sing, which was conveyed by your despatch of the 19th instant and presented by me to the Vizier, his Excellency requests you to inform him, that after the payment of his just balances of revenue, for the liquidation of which his security must have been given to you, and after the destruction of the fortress of Buddree and the surrender of his guns and military stores, he is at liberty to reside in the district, and to retain the possession of his villages at a reasonable yearly assessment, and that all future complaints of oppression or exorbitant demands by the Aumil shall be regularly and strictly redressed.

8. On the subject of your despatch of the 21st instant, which I received only this day, and immediately submitted to the Vizier, I have not hitherto obtained a communication of his Excellency's sentiments; but I have no hesitation in assuring you, that the object of the reported sale of Buddree by the Aumil to Oopudhea Mohun Loll, if that circumstance be true, has been anticipated, by the positive orders of the Vizier for the destruction of the fortress in question, and that the adoption of similar measures, with a reference to all the other forts in the district, must necessarily frustrate the improper views of the Aumil, if he really entertain the views which are assigned to him in your despatch.

9. In consideration of the advanced period of the season and of the circumstances which are stated in your letter, I have suggested to his Excellency the necessity of limiting the further services of your detachment, for the present, to the capture or evacuation of the forts of Sumunpore and Corah, in the districts of Behar and Dalamow; and having every reason to expect the Vizier's acquiescence in my suggestions, I request that you will be pleased to consider the possession of those forts as the only remaining object of your operations.

2. The Aumil has been further instructed to require and obtain the surrender of all the forts in the possession of Oopudhea Mohun Loll, who is supposed to be submissive to his authority, and the forts of Buddree, Sumunpore, and Corah, as well as those of Mohun Loll, are directed to be immediately destroyed.

1. I have the honour of transmitting for your information, the enclosed copies of letters which I have received from Major O'Donnell, commanding the troops at Pertaubghur.

2. Applications, in the terms suggested by Major O'Donnell, have been made to his Excellency the Vizier and to the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad; and though I regret the necessity of again employing a train of artillery in the neighbourhood of the district of Pertaubghur, I am satisfied of the expedience of that measure, and I have every reason to believe that it will be productive of the most salutary effects.

3. The strength of the mud forts in the district of Kewae, and the force of the insurgents and defaulters in that quarter, are reported to me to be very inconsiderable; and I indulge a well-grounded hope, that the appearance of the intended reinforcement from the post of Pertaubghur, attended by a battering train from Elahabad, will preclude any further resistance on the part of the rebellious Zemindars, and be productive of the permanent tranquillity of that portion of the Vizier's dominions.

1. In continuation of the information conveyed in my letter to you, under date the 25th ultimo, I am extremely sorry to inform you that Captain Harriott has failed in his endeavours to settle matters amicably between the Aumil, Sir-must Khan, and the refractory Zemindars, as will appear by the enclosed copy of a letter received from that officer last night ; in consequence of which I have this day made application to the commanding officer in the field for battering guns and mortars, to enable me to move out with all the troops that can be spared from the duties of this post, for the purpose of levelling the whole of the small forts in the Handeeah district, said to amount to fourteen in number ; and I trust, Sir, you will use your influence with his Excellency the Vizier to issue such orders as may ensure the effectual destruction of them without delay, as it is my intention not to remain a moment longer at any of them than what may be absolutely necessary. I beg leave to mention here, that when my corps was against Buddree a few months ago, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, the men were three complete days without grain of any sort, which caused great distress to them, as well as to the small detachment of cavalry then in camp, owing to the shameful neglect of the Aumil. I must, therefore, intreat your taking effectual steps, on the present occasion, to ensure that attention from the Aumil of Handeeah which is directed towards us in every instance by his Excellency the Nawaub, but rarely attended to. It might also be attended with convenience to the troops to have an order sent to Newaz Sing, the Aumil of this district, to supply our camp, in the event of Sirmust Khan not being able to do so amply.

2. By the accompanying extract from a letter of Captain Harriott's, you will perceive that the rebels have houses, &c. within the boundary of the Company's territory, where they retire with their families, property, &c. whenever a force marches against them, which they may not deem themselves able to hold out against : and no doubt this will be the case if I move out against them, for they will come back again, to a certainty, on the return of my detachment into cantonments, unless you will have the goodness to address the Magistrate at Elahabad upon the subject, and by that means have the persons and property of such people seized and made over to the Nabob's Aumil.

Letter from Captain Harriott.

Sir :

In my last letter, dated the 5th instant, I expressed the most sanguine hopes that every dispute between the Zemindars, Seetul Persaud and Noreith Sing, with the Aumil, would have been speedily and amicably adjusted ; but I am now sorry to be under the necessity of informing you that there is no chance of these people submitting without strong coercive measures.

From the 5th to the 8th, Seetul Persaud attended the Cutcherry of the Aumil, and also at my tent, when every encouragement was held out to him by the Aumil and myself to settle matters amicably, and he continued to promise every thing ; but on the evening of that day he took himself off, and sent a message to the Aumil, saying he would not pay his arrears or give up his ghurry. On this open declaration I proposed to the Aumil to march on next morning and encamp close to his ghurry ; but the Aumil wishing to try what another day would do, sent the day before yesterday an Hircarrah with a message ; but on the approach of the Hircarrah to the ghurry they threatened to fire on him.

In the evening, at the request of the Aumil, I sent a company, under the command of Lieutenant Randall, to take post opposite the gateway, but without the reach of their matchlocks, with orders to plant as many sentries as he could to his right and left, and to intercept all people coming from or going to the ghurry. As soon as the people in the ghurry perceived Lieutenant Randall's party they fired several matchlocks at them. About an hour before day-break I joined Lieutenant Randall with the remainder of the detachment, and at day-break the Aumil's troops and guns arrived and took post opposite the gateway, the door of which is of planks and was fully exposed to our view, and appeared so slight as to be easily demolished. Nine shots were accordingly fired from the Aumil's guns, but they went so wide of the mark that I made them desist.

The Aumil is now collecting materials to erect a battery, or rather to form some cover for the men from the matchlocks, and intends to-night to advance his guns to within a couple of hundred yards of the ghurry, and has stationed parties of his troops round the place to prevent any supplies going into it. The ghurry is very small and nearly square, with a bastion at each angle, and has only a single wall, and that apparently very thin; but the Aumil's guns being only six-pounders, and very ill supplied with ammunition, they would not be able to effect a breach in the wall, and therefore I intend, if possible, to demolish the gate and open around that way, though I have very little dependance on the Aumil's troops storming the place, even should they be so fortunate as to knock down the gate. Eight or ten fellows from the ghurry came out about an hour ago, and attacked a party of nujeebs belonging to the Aumil posted near the ghurry: they were, however, beat back; but one of the Aumil's men, I am sorry to say, received a severe wound in his foot from a matchlock ball. The Aumil having represented to me that there are three or four ghurries in the district which it will be impossible to reduce without the aid of battering guns and a couple of howitzers, I think it my duty to report it to you; and if I may judge from the resistance making by about fifty men in the small ghurry we are now before, and from the little dependance to be placed in the Aumil's troops, I conceive that a reinforcement, accompanied by some guns, or a couple of howitzers, will be absolutely necessary to restore the peace of the district.

Extract of a Letter received from Captain Harriott, dated the 3d October 1808.

I think it necessary to mention here, that one cause of the difficulty attending the collections of this district (Handeeah) is its being entirely surrounded by the Company's territory, where, upon any alarm, the Zemindars send their families, &c. and retire themselves; and I am informed that, should I shew any determination to use force, they will instantly fly into the Company's territory, and by that means evade paying their rents, as they leave their ghurries to be defended by their adherents: I should, therefore, think that a representation to the Magistrate of the district would remedy the evil complained of, and might be the means of securing the persons of the defaulters. The district above alluded to is in the collection of Elahabad. The family of Seetul Persaud is now in the village of Murdapore, about a coss from this, in the district of Elahabad; and that of Noreith Sing is at a village called Mowyah, in the same district, where he himself flies on any alarm.

I have the honour to inform you, that marching from Bulleepore this morning, I found the small fort of Seeadee, which I intended to attack, had been evacuated in the course of the night, and the garrison had reinforced that of Pathur Surree. I proceeded immediately to invest the latter. I opened the battery at nine A. M., and finding the breach practicable, at one P. M. I ordered three companies to storm the place, in which I have the pleasure to say I was completely successful. Every man found in the garrison was put to death, and those that attempted to escape were cut up by the cavalry who surrounded the enemy. It is so late that I am prevented from sending a more particular account of the business, but will inform you of the casualties, &c. &c. to-morrow.

Having received intelligence, on my late march, that the fort of Seeadee, which was the first object of my attention, had been evacuated during the night, I proceeded at once to the next gurry, Pathur Surree, distant about a mile and a half, and to which the garrison of Seeadee had retired. On reconnoitering it I found sufficient cover to justify an immediate attack, without waiting to erect a regular battery, as there were no cannon in the place: and it being also the opinion of the officer commanding the artillery that a practicable breach breach might be made in the course of the day, I determined to lose no time in commencing the attack by breaching at the gateway. This determination I formed, from having constantly observed that these refractory Zemindars, although without prospect of effectual resistance, generally wait in their forts until the assault is about to take place, and then, under cover of the night, make their escape with impunity. I therefore set out with an intention of making a prompt and serious example in the first instance, as likely to be not only most effectual, but also to tend to the security of the detachment in the end. Besides, I conceived all negotiation to be at an end, when the garrison had not only refused a recent summons from Captain Harriott's party, but also fired upon them, and would not admit me to proceed near the ghurry on my arrival.

As the two eighteen-pounders, supported by four companies of Sepoys and the advanced guard, were proceeding to occupy the spot from whence the breaching was to take place, a part of the garrison made their escape from the ghurry. The remainder shewed an appearance of resistance; and within a short time two squadrons of the Seventh Native Cavalry were stationed at the south and west faces of the fort, together with two sniping parties, which had considerable effect, by distracting the attention of the enemy in securing the battering party.

After three hours the breach being considered practicable, three companies of Sepoys proceeded to the assault, two of which were desired to pass forward into the ghurry, while the third, in two divisions, scoured the ditch on each side. The resistance was obstinate, and an attempt was made by a part of the garrison to escape towards a jungle about half a mile distant, immediately on the storming party having arrived at the breach; but the cavalry closing up at the moment, cut off completely the escape of those who ventured on the plain, and I have the pleasure to acquaint you that the result was fully equal to my wishes. By all I can learn, very few escaped, and about eighty of the rebels (including Budloo Sing, the head man of this ghurry, and who is said by the Aumil to be the most refractory Zemindar among them) were killed in the ghurry, or on the surrounding plain. This example, I have every reason to hope, will be attended with the best consequences, having just now been informed by the Aumil that Dobar, one of the strongest gurrries in the district, was evacuated during last night. Should this prove to be the case, I hope the detachment will not long be detained on the present service.

It is a pleasing part of my duty to report my obligations to Captain Sealy and Lieutenants Tennant and Graham, of the Artillery detachment, for their promptness and execution in the management of the guns, and to notice the good conduct of the artillerymen, in their cheerful steadiness under a very heavy fire of matchlocks, at a distance of four hundred yards from the fort and not above two hundred yards from a redoubt in front of the gateway. My best thanks are due to Captain Harriott, to Lieutenants Randall, Young, and Hamilton, and Ensign Campbell, and to the native officers and men composing the storming party. In the execution of this duty, Lieutenant Hamilton has been severely wounded; and I have also to mention with thanks the gallantry and zeal of Lieutenant Jeremie, commanding the Pioneers, who, I am sorry to add, received a dangerous wound while advancing with the ladders. I am greatly indebted to Major Knox, commanding the seventh Regiment of Cavalry, for his aid and advice during this service, as well as for the judicious disposition of his regiment yesterday, and to the officers and men of that corps, for their decisive and active execution of his orders.

I have halted to-day, and directed that one of the bastions in Pathur Surrae shall be blown up with powder which has been found in the ghurry. A party of the Pioneers has also been sent to recover as many eighteen-pounder shot as possible, and a small reward offered for such as may be brought in.

It is my intention to proceed to-morrow against Jorawn, a fort which, from all accounts, is surrounded by jungle, and only accessible at one angle. It is considered among the strongest in the district.

Letter from
Major O'Donnell.

In continuation of my despatch of yesterday, I have the pleasure to acquaint you that the detachment under my command marched this morning to Jorawn. On my arrival there, I found that the enemy had evacuated it in the course of the night. It is a compact fort and strongly situated in a close thick jungle of babool trees. From thence I marched on to Dobar, about a coss further, and this ghurree also has been evacuated. It is not so strong as the former, but is also surrounded by jungle, and appears to have been the principal residence of Sungram Sing, the chief man among the rebels. There are furnaces and apparatus in it for casting cannon; and I have just now received intelligence that Sungram Sing, Setul Pursaud, and Noreith Sing, with two guns and about thirty adherents, were seen yesterday at the village of Shorajepore, in the zillah of Mandah, soubah of Elahabad. This information is further confirmed by the circumstance that two guns with an elephant passed two days ago with the encampment of the light companies of the 26th Regiment, proceeding to Benares.

The example recently made appears to have struck terror throughout this district; and I am convinced no further resistance will be made, although I have not yet ascertained that all the ghurries are in the Aumil's possession. I propose to march to-morrow towards Lutchaghur, a fort on the banks of the Ganges from whence the rebels have frequently plundered boats in their passage on the river; and so soon as I have delivered to the Aumil the remaining ghurries, it is my intention to return with the detachment to cantonments, because the Aumil has received positive orders from his Highness the Nawaub Vizier to level the different ghurries, and it would occupy too much time, without any adequate advantage, if the detachment remained to see them destroyed.

Extract from a Letter from Major O'Donnell, dated the 5th November 1808.

Letter from
Major O'Donnell.

Having completed the service for which I was ordered to march with the detachment, by delivering over the refractory ghurries in the district of Kewae to the Aumil of his Highness the Nawaub Vizier, I have now the honour to acquaint you, that it is my intention to march towards cantonments to-morrow morning. I have desired Captain Sealy to return to Elahabad at the same time with a sufficient party to escort the train, and directed him, after his arrival in garrison, to despatch the company of Pioneers to Cawnpore. Lieutenant Jeremie being unable to travel, will remain at Elahabad until sufficiently recovered to rejoin his corps.

Before concluding this despatch, I am anxious to submit the particular reasons which induced me to adopt prompt and decisive measures in the commencement, instead of proceeding by an attempt at a negociation between each Zemindar and the Aumil of the district, and I trust they will meet with his Excellency's approbation. However unpleasant it was to my feelings to have determined on putting the garrison of Pathur Surree to the sword, and by disposing of the cavalry around the fort to prevent the possibility of any man escaping, yet it struck me forcibly that it was absolutely necessary to make an example in the first instance, not only to prevent this frequent recurrence of disturbance and rebellion, but also because it would ultimately be the means of saving many lives on our own part. On these ideas I formed my plans, and determined to effect the business, if possible, in the course of the day, being convinced from much experience in the customs and ideas of these people, that they would do all the mischief in their power until we were ready to storm, and then expect to escape under cover of the night. Our success at Pathur Surree has, I am thoroughly convinced, tended to the saving of lives in the detachment, because the garrisons of the smaller forts would have collected in the others (many of which we have found on inspecting them capable of serious resistance), without our being able, on account of the jungle about them, to prevent the escape of the garrison, and might consequently have occasioned great loss.

Major O'Donnell.

Previously to my arrival, Captain Harriott, by my orders, had made the tour of the district, and summoned the different refractory Zemindars to deliver up their forts to the Aumil; but instead of paying any attention to this summons, Captain Harriott's party was treated with insult and defiance. He was not permitted to go close to any of the ghurries, but was frequently fired at, and in one instance was attacked near Jorawn by a party who, on his arrival at the ground of encampment, attempted to rush on the companies with drawn swords, and desisted only when the sepoys collected on the alarm being given and prepared to charge them. At Pathur Surree, more especially, the Zemindar, after receiving a written assurance that he might come into camp with safety, for the purpose of settling matters with the Aumil, refused, under the most frivolous pretences, to conclude any terms whatever.

I have now the satisfaction to report, that the whole of the ghurries are delivered over to the Aumil, who has placed a party of his troops in each and is beginning to destroy them. I have ordered Captain Ryan to remain with two companies for a short time to see this business effected, to support the authority of the Aumil, and to maintain tranquillity in the district; and I return to cantonments with the remainder of the troops, because the season is now commencing in which their exercise is to be particularly attended to. On this subject I am unusually anxious, because my battalion has, with very little intermission, been divided into detached parties for a long time past, and therefore been deprived of the advantage of regular exercise and discipline.

Herewith I enclose an acknowledgment from the Aumil of the number of ghurries delivered to him, together with a list of them.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, reporting the progress of the troops employed under the command of Major O'Donnell, for the suppression of the disturbances, and the complete success which has attended them.

2. The Governor-General in Council desires you will signify to Major O'Donnell his Lordship's high sense of the spirit and military skill evinced by himself and the officers and men under his command, and the concern with which his Lordship has learned that Lieutenants Jeremie and Hamilton have been severely wounded on this service.

3. The surrender of the several ghurries held by the refractory Zemindars of Kewae is very satisfactory to the Governor-General in Council; but his Lordship cannot but lament the necessity (which has no doubt existed) of making so severe an example of the garrison in this species of warfare, when the degree of guilt on the part of the rebels is so uncertain and ill-defined. It is always with reluctance that the troops of the Company are employed on this kind of service, when, from the known defects of the Vizier's Government, it is often highly probable that the disturbance has been occasioned by the oppression and exactions of his Excellency's officers, as much as by the turbulent and seditious spirit of the Zemindars; and it would certainly be a satisfaction to Government to know that the service could be performed without having recourse to measures of such extremity, as appear to have been necessary in the instance which has given rise to these remarks.

4. The confidence which Government has in the character of Major O'Donnell, precludes the admission of the slightest idea, that any thing but an entire conviction of the necessity of the measure would have induced him to adopt it; and these observations are by no means intended to convey any censure on that respectable officer.

Letter
from Resident at

1. The state of certain jagiers in the reserved territory of his Excellency the Vizier, and the repeated applications which I have received from the holders of those jagiers, suggest the necessity of a reference to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

2. Among the Jagierdars under the Vizier's Government, her Highness the Bhow Begum of Fyzabad, her Highness the younger Begum, Shums-oon Nissa, the Nawaub Mudar-ood Dowla, Tuhseen Alee Khan, and Tujum-ool Hooseyn Khan, consider themselves as the dependants of the British Government, and as entitled to its protection and support.

3. Disturbances have frequently arisen in the jagiers of both the Begums, and in those of Mudar-ood Dowla and Tuhseen Alee Khan, whose revenues have been withholden by their landholders, and who, in applying for my support, have not hesitated to express their conviction that the Vizier was disposed to encourage, rather than to suppress, the disturbances in their jagiers, and that no advantage could arise from their applications for assistance to his Excellency, unless supported by the influence and authority of the British Government at his court.

4. On two very recent occasions I have deemed it to be my duty to call the Vizier's attention to the state of the elder Begum's, and the Nawaub Mudar-ood Dowla's jagier, and to point out to his Excellency the justice and necessity of his considering those lands in the same point of view with the other districts of his dominions, from which his own revenue is derived, since the assignment of lands in jagier could not affect the paramount authority of the sovereign over the lands which were so assigned, and consequently the resistance of the landholder to the legal authority or just demands of the Jagierdar could be viewed in no other light, with propriety, than as rebellion against the sovereign of the country and paramount ruler of the jagier.

5. His Excellency the Vizier has invariably admitted the force of my arguments on this subject, and has frequently promised to take measures for supporting the authority of the Jagierdars and punishing the refractory landholders. But the adoption of these measures has been protracted from time to time, to the great injury of her Highness the Bhow Begum and of the Nawaub Mudar-ood Dowla, whose complaints in consequence to me have been so frequent, and apparently so just, that I deemed it proper to intimate to the Vizier my intention of employing a small portion of the British troops in his country for the suppression of the disturbances in those jagiers.

6. His Excellency seemed entirely averse to the adoption of this latter measure, and would appear to be impressed with an idea that the employment, or even the movement of any portion of the British troops in his dominions, must be dependant on his own will or requisition exclusively, and cannot proceed under the authority of the Resident at his court without his previous concurrence and sanction.

7. My conception of the nature of the alliance subsisting between the two states, and of the spirit of the third article of the Treaty of Cession, induces me to consider this question in a very different light from that in which his Excellency has viewed it; and as the sacrifice or preservation of the rights of the several Jagierdars whom I have noticed may depend on the decision of the question, I have thought it my duty to submit it for the consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whose sentiments and commands upon the subject I am solicitous to be apprized of at the earliest practicable period of time.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 20th ultimo, on the subject of the disturbances occasionally arising in the lands composing the jagiers of their Highnesses the Bhow Begum and the younger Begum, and other persons considered to be under the immediate protection of the British Government, and the disinclination of His Excellency the Vizier to permit the employment of the British troops for the purpose of quelling such disturbances ; submitting, at the same time, to the consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whether under the provisions of the third article of the Treaty of Cession, the British Government is not authorized to employ its troops for that purpose without his Excellency's previous sanction.
2. The Governor-General in Council has received with great concern this report of the Vizier's disinclination to admit the adoption of the same measures for the suppression of disturbances in the lands of the Jagierdars that are pursued in the rest of the territories under his dominion, and entirely approves the representations which you had occasion to address to his Excellency on that subject.
3. The Governor-General in Council, however, doubts the right of the British Government to employ its troops in the cases which you have stated without the concurrence of the Vizier, and apprehends that the provisions of the third article of the Treaty of November 1801 are inapplicable to cases of that nature, because the occurrence of such cases could not be supposed without injury to the character and credit of the Vizier, and could not, therefore, have been contemplated in forming that article.
4. The article in question provides that with a view to the effectual defence of the territories of the Vizier against foreign or domestic enemies, it shall be in the power of the Company's Government to station the British troops in such parts of his Excellency's dominions as shall appear to the said Government to be most expedient ; and consequently, in the execution of any service requiring a system of military operations, to regulate the movement of the troops according to the exigency of the occasion.
5. The terms of this article presuppose some external attack, or some internal commotion which may eventually take place, is expected, or has actually occurred ; and the object of that article could not have been to provide against any disinclination on the part of the Vizier to authorize the employment of troops for the protection of his own dominions, since it would have been absurd to suppose that his Excellency could, under any circumstances, desire to encourage external attack or internal insurrection, without imputing to him a spirit of hostility and treachery towards his ally. The object of that article was to secure to the troops a latitude of action, applicable to any emergency of danger, unimpeded by the embarrassments which would probably arise, if his Excellency were allowed to regulate or influence the system of defensive arrangements or of military operations.
6. Entertaining this construction of the third article of the treaty, the Governor-General in Council is reluctantly compelled to determine that, in the cases in question, no other measures are admissible than those of remonstrance. You will, therefore, be pleased to renew your representations to his Excellency in the name of the Governor-General, and endeavour to convince his Excellency of the impolicy, as well as injustice, of countenancing disturbances within the lands of his Jagierdars, and of the danger to which the general tranquility of his country is exposed, and the injury which his reputation must sustain, by tolerating the prevalence of commotion within the limits of his own territories.

Arzee
from the Ameen of Nandparra.

At this time Roshun Khan, the Chaila of Mudar Buksh, has commenced his hostile preparations. The repairs of the fortress and ditch are proceeding rapidly by his orders, and he is entertaining men every day. A thousand men from the hills have been called to his assistance, and the manufacture of powder and cannon, and musket-shot, as well as the purchase and deposit of grain in the fort, are proceeding with remarkable zeal. Outposts and videttes have been established in all directions round the fort, the Ranee's property has been removed from it, and every thing looks like preparation for defence.

On my receiving the first intelligence of these proceedings, I summoned Heera Loll, the agent of Roshun Khan, and cautioned him against the dangers of such proceedings, which must ultimately tend to their destruction. Heera Loll pretended that the preparations were merely against surrounding Zemindars, who are always troublesome at this season ; but all this I know to be false, and have therefore deemed it to be my duty to represent the matter to the presence.

1. Since the despatch of my letter to your address, under date the 3d instant, authentic accounts have been received of the rebellious conduct of Roshun Khan, possessor of the fortress of Nandparra, and have induced me to concur with his Excellency the Vizier in the propriety of expelling Roshun Khan from the fortress in question, and dispossessing him of all the lands which he has recently usurped in that quarter.

2. With this view, the whole of the disposable force of his Excellency the Vizier, consisting of a regular battalion of sepoy and six guns, with a considerable number of irregular cavalry and matchlock-men, under the control of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, Aumil of Khyrabad, has been ordered to march without delay, and to cross the Gogra at the point nearest to the frontier of Nandparra, where the Aumil has been directed to halt, for the purpose of communicating with you, and of receiving your instructions and commands on the subject of his future operations.

3. Hukeem Mehdi has been instructed to procure and convey to you the most accurate information regarding the situation and strength of the fortress of Nandparra, the nature of the access towards it, the most practicable mode of attacking it, and the number and efficiency of the garrison, as well as of the troops and adherents of Roshun Khan in the district at large. He has been further instructed, with the view of securing the person of Roshun Khan and suppressing the disorders in Nandparra at once, if you deem this measure to be practicable, to advance to the attack of Nandparra with the Vizier's battalion and artillery alone, in the hope of inducing Roshun Khan to hazard a general action, which the appearance of the British troops might prevent, and thus protract the accomplishment of the object.

4. You will be pleased to receive and consider the communications of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, and to report the result of your deliberation on the subject of them with the least practicable delay, conveying at the same time your opinion regarding the practicability of the capture of Nandparra, and suppression of the rebel Roshun Khan by the force of Hukeem Mehdi, with or without the assistance of the British troops under your command, and holding the whole of the disposable force at Buhrangauth and Secrora in readiness to proceed to the support of the Vizier's troops if circumstances render this measure advisable.

2. Major Bird's zeal for the public service, and his imperfect information regarding the strength of the fortress of Nandparra, would appear to have induced him to depart from the spirit of my instructions under date the 16th ultimo, by advancing with an inadequate force, and authorizing the commencement of hostile operations against the fort before the means of success were at his disposal.

3. It does not, however, appear that any unpleasant effects can result from the advance of the detachment to Nandparra; and on the contrary, the occupation of a position so near to the fort by the troops of his Excellency the Vizier and by the detachment under the command of Major Bird, will serve, at least, to keep the rebels in check, and to preclude their reinforcement, or the admission of supplies into the fortress, till effectual measures can be adopted for its reduction.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that I have this morning taken up a position before the fortress of Nandparra, and, in the act of reconnoitring, the guns of the fort opened upon us. From the most correct local information that I can obtain, Roshun Khan has between four and five thousand rebels armed in the fort, and nine guns of different calibre mounted on the walls. From his commencing hostilities, his determination to oppose is obvious; I conceive it therefore advisable to make regular approaches against the fort, and have ordered Hukeem Mehdi Alee to procure the requisite materials for the construction of gabions, &c.

I am sorry to inform you, that the only gun in camp that could make any impression on the fort at present, and belonging to Hukeem Mehdi Alee, burst this morning, and I understand that several of his people have been severely wounded by the fire from the fort.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 26th instant.

2. The information which you have now conveyed to me, regarding the strength of the fortress of Nandparra and the number of the rebel Roshun's adherents in arms, is extremely different from the reports of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to his Excellency the Vizier, and seems further to be at variance with the statements which are contained in your own despatches of the 3d and 17th instant to my address.

3. The reduction of the fortress of Nandparra by the troops of his Highness the Vizier and the detachment under your command, without the aid of a battering train, seems to me to be totally impracticable; and from a consideration of the repeated orders of the government with a reference to the employment of British troops against forts or other places of strength, I deem it to be my duty to desire that you will suspend all operations of a nature calculated to endanger the credit or safety of the troops under your command, until effectual measures shall be adopted for ensuring the success of those operations, maintaining, at the same time, your present position in the neighbourhood of Nandparra, with the view of precluding the reinforcement of the garrison or the admission of supplies into the fortress.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

Since my despatch of the 26th instant to your address, I thought it advisable, on the 27th, to move from the position I had taken up, in consequence of the great scarcity of water for the supply of my detachment and the contiguity of an extensive jungle, which must have rendered our situation hazardous, on account of the numerous rebels who, I was informed, had been dispersed there for the purpose of annoying our camp. I consequently took up my ground to the right of Hukeem Mehdi's encampment, where I had scarcely arrived when I was informed of the Hukeem's intention of moving to another position; I therefore judged it expedient to direct that Aumil to remain where he was till my further advice. To my infinite surprise, however, I found that he paid so little attention to it, though my motives had been fully explained to him, that he moved his encampment considerably in my rear this morning. On expostulating with him on the irregularity of such a proceeding, he could assign no satisfactory reason for such conduct. The consequence was, that the whole of the encampment accompanied him, Soorul Sing excepted, who alone remained on his ground until this evening, when that Rajah (whom I have to express my satisfaction of, for the vigorous and active measures pursued by him since his arrival in camp, and who, in fact, was the only chief, in my opinion, that appeared zealous in the cause) was compelled, from being abandoned, to join Hukeem Mehdi's camp, withdrawing his guns from a most important position, where a well directed fire had been kept up and a check given to the audacious rebels in their various sallies from the fort, and which position being thus deserted was immediately seized and destroyed by them. All of these circumstances I was allowed to remain ignorant of by the Hukeem, who when called upon for an explanation, declared that he neither had a control or command over any description of people out of his own immediate camp, and that little reliance or confidence could be reposed or expected from the others.

It is therefore painful to me, Sir, to represent to you the present situation of my detachment, which, thus circumstanced, is unavoidably harassed every night, by the rigorous necessity of being constantly on the alert, in order to maintain its present position, by guarding against the meditated attacks of the numerous and surrounding rebels. You will be pleased to communicate to me your further directions and orders on the occasion with convenient despatch.

In drawing to a conclusion, I consider it of importance to state to you, that considerable detachments from the irregulars in camp have been sent away for various purposes, without my knowledge of the circumstance from Hukeem Mehdi Alee, by which the main body that I first formed a junction with has been considerably diminished.

P.S. It has just now come to my knowledge, that a quantity of supplies for our camp from Baraitch has been cut off by the rebels from Rodarghur fort, at Jumoonia, who have threatened destruction to all the country about Baraitch. The apprehension, therefore, of want, and the distressing situation of my small detachment laying on their arms without the prospect of coming to some determination either one way or other, induces me to solicit your serious attention on the occasion.

Sir:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 26th instant, and, with reference to the second paragraph, on the subject of the information I had the pleasure to transmit you, under date the 3d and 17th instant, respecting Nandparra, and what I had communicated in my despatch of the 26th instant, I am perfectly aware of the statements regarding the fortress and the number of the rebel Roshun Khan's adherents in arms to be undoubtedly at variance, which can alone be accounted for, from my being deceived into a belief that the accounts received at the former periods, both from Muhmood, the Ameen, and the Hirkarrahs I had despatched from Secrora for the purpose of information, might have been correct, nor had I reason to entertain a different opinion on the subject till my arrival before the fortress.

The orders specified in your third paragraph, desiring me to suspend all operations that might endanger the credit or safety of the troops under my command, shall be implicitly complied with. The utmost exertions on my part shall not be wanting, to maintain the present position of my detachment in the neighbourhood of Nandparra: and as it would not be advisable to separate any part of it, for the purpose of preventing reinforcements in the garrison or supplies into the fortress, I have directed Hukeem Mehdi Alee to detach an adequate force on the occasion from his camp, and which he has promised to do, observing that during the day the measure might succeed, but at night is impracticable, on account of the secret bye-ways and footpaths leading to the fort from the jungles. From the general information, however, it would appear manifest that the rebels have immense supplies of all descriptions established within the fort; but any further late reinforcements have not, I believe, been clearly ascertained.

2. My letter of the 28th ultimo, and the orders of the general officer commanding in the field, under date the 30th ultimo, must have reached you ere this can arrive, and will supersede the necessity of any further instructions for your guidance.

3. Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, with the whole of the force under his command, will march from Seetapore on the evening of the 2d instant; and five companies of sepoy, from the regiment on duty at this station, will proceed on the 4th instant in charge of the battering train.

4. A squadron of cavalry has further been directed to join you from Pertaubghur with the least practicable delay; and it only remains for you to maintain a position, either before or in the neighbourhood of Nandparra, and to confine yourself to defensive operations until reinforcements and the battering train shall arrive.

I have understood from Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, that Major Bird had stated to him that people from the hills have repaired to the fortress of Nandparra to reinforce the garrison. The Major desired Hukeem Mehdi to be on the alert and watchful. I request that you will adopt such measures, with a reference to this report, as may appear to you to be advisable.

Arzee from the Kutwal of Baraitch.

It is reported that yesterday several villages in the vicinity of Baraitch were plundered by the rebels of Nandparra, and that they intended to make an attack on Baraitch: this report has greatly alarmed the inhabitants. I have comforted the Ryots, and out of the hundred people I have with me, I have placed fifty at the nakas, or entrances into the town, and with the remaining fifty have patrolled round the city the whole night. If your Excellency be pleased to allow me a gun for the defence of the city it will ensure greater safety.

Intelligence from the Baraitch
Akhbar.

Several persons from the village of Mullapoor, in the district of Baraitch, repaired to Ram Sing, Tehsildar of Baraitch, and stated to him that last night (30th November) several of the followers of Roshun Khan, Chelah of Nuwaub Mudar Bukhsh deceased, late Talookdar of Nandparra, attacked the above village, killed two cow-herds, set fire to the village, burnt four children and fifteen bullocks, and took away the property of the inhabitants. The Tehsildar consoled these people, and said that the rebels should shortly be punished.

I am happy to inform you that in the course of my march through the Vizier's country, since my last report, I have not experienced the smallest difficulty. Supplies of every description were amply furnished at my daily places of encampment.

From the state of forwardness in which I found the preparations for the reduction of the fort, I have reason to be satisfied with the useful assistance Major Bird must have experienced from Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan's exertions to forward the public service: a circumstance, I hope, you will do me the favour of communicating to his Excellency the Vizier.

With respect to the disturbance which was reported to have existed in the neighbourhood of Baraitch, I made every inquiry, and I have reason to believe that nothing of an alarming nature occurred to entertain apprehensions for the safety of that town. Two or three villages, intermediately situated between this this place and Baraitch, in the Nandparra district, have been burnt, which I believe to be the extent of the damage that has been sustained.

2. I have every reason to expect that the march of the British troops, after the reduction of the fortress of Churdela, in the direction of the several places which are described in the accompanying list, will be sufficient to accomplish the object without any military operations; and that the recall of the battering train will not be materially delayed by the service which is now required from it.

3. Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, and Balik Ram, Aumil of Baraitch, have been commanded by his Excellency the Vizier to give you every degree of local information and all the assistance in their power in the execution of the service committed to you; and I rely with confidence on your approved judgment and zeal, for the speedy and successful accomplishment of the objects of that service.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 26th December 1809.)

Although the rebel, Roshun Khan, be now expelled from Nandparra, and most of his forts have been evacuated, yet the tranquillity of the district at large can never be permanently established, until many other refractory Zemindars be suppressed; for there are still several fortresses in Baraitch, and every Zemindar in the district has a gun or two in his possession. It has, indeed, been fully ascertained, that there are no less than sixty pieces of ordnance now in the district of Baraitch, and until the Zemindars be deprived of their guns, and their strongholds be levelled to the ground, it is impossible to expect the establishment of public authority, or the maintainance of tranquillity in the country.

It appears to me to be advisable, in the present favourable season for military operations, while so numerous and so efficient an army with a battering train is on the spot, that the same effectual measures which were so judiciously adopted by you last year, with a reference to the district of Kewae, should now be carried into effect with a reference to the district of Baraitch; and I am satisfied that, in this event, the Zemindars of the district in question, from the terror of the British arms, would speedily surrender their guns and evacuate the forts in their possession, and the entire tranquillity of the district being thus restored and established, the aid of the British troops could never again be required. If this suggestion be approved, I request that you will carry it into effect.

2. General St. Leger, however, is extremely desirous, and it is indeed of the greatest importance, under existing circumstances, in every point of view, that the services of a large proportion of the British troops, and more particularly of the battering train, in Baraitch, should be dispensed with at the earliest possible period, and nothing but the high consideration with which it is my duty, on every occasion, to receive your Excellency's commands, added to the lively interest which the British Government must ever feel in the establishment and maintainance of your authority, could have induced either the commanding officer of the troops in the field or myself to wave the important considerations which suggest the immediate recall of the battering train and artillery to the head quarters of the army in the field.

3. I trust, however, that the remaining objects of the present armament in Baraitch will not only be speedily accomplished, but will lead, as your Excellency has remarked, by their speedy and successful accomplishment, to the establishment of the public authority in that district, on such a basis as will preclude the employment of the British troops on any future occasion.

4. With this view, I suggest to your Excellency the propriety of your instructing your Aumil to lose no time in submitting, in person, to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, a detailed statement of all the forts to be reduced, with every information which he can obtain respecting those forts and their possessors; and it is further my duty to represent to you the obvious and urgent necessity of the immediate and entire demolition of every fortress, or strong hold, of whatever description, which may be reduced, on the present occasion, by the operations or the presence of the British troops on the right bank of the Gogra.

I am not aware of any other objection to the establishment of a military post in the neighbourhood of the fortress of Nandparra, than its tendency to frustrate the object which your Excellency had in view by the junction of the two detachments formerly stationed at Buhramgauth and Secrora ; and this objection might perhaps be obviated by the removal of the head-quarters of the battalion in Baraitch from the post of Secrora to Nandparra, and the occupation of the latter post by a detachment of two or three companies of Sepoys, to be relieved monthly, as in the case of Seetapore and Buhramgauth.

I solicit the favour of your attention to the enclosed copies of documents which have passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, on the subject of a general arrangement for the protection of the district of Nandparra, and on the expediency of destroying or preserving the fortresses which have recently been reduced in that district.

2. When you shall have considered the general subject of those documents with that attention which its importance suggests, and shall have applied to the discussion of each of the points at issue that degree of local information which you have obtained by a personal inspection of all the forts in the district, you will be pleased to report your opinion on the several questions which are mentioned in his Excellency's letter, and particularly on the expediency of maintaining the fortress of Nandparra as a post for a British detachment, as well as the strength of the detachment which might be required in that position with a view to the protection of the district.

3. Respecting the forts of Hyderghur and Roderghur, and every other strong hold in the province of Baraitch, it is my decided opinion that they ought to be immediately destroyed ; and I shall be happy to learn that the local knowledge which you have recently obtained does not preclude you from concurring in this opinion.

From his Excellency the Vizier, dated 17th Zecaud 1224.

I have received your letter of the 13th instant, acquainting me of advices having reached you from Colonel MacGrath of the surrender of Roderghur, &c. and suggesting the demolition of all the forts in Nandparra.

Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan represents the works of the fort of Nandparra to be so extensive as to require a garrison of at least three hundred men. He suggests the addition of two hundred more to the party of one hundred already there under Meer Mahmood Alee; and he remarks that, if a force of less strength be left there, the rebel Roshun Khan may be induced to commit disturbances when the army now assembled shall march away. For Roderghur he requires a garrison of one hundred men, which will also afford protection to the villages of the districts of Gurga Gunge, &c.; and for the fort of Hyderghur, which lies on the frontier of Nepaul, a hundred men will be indispensable, otherwise the Rajahs of the Terai and the dependants of the Goorkha Government will seize upon those places. It will be requisite, in the Hukeem's opinion, to keep a detachment of two hundred horse and four hundred foot continually in the field for the space of a year, in order to preserve the tranquillity of the country and to protect it from his depredations, which might otherwise preclude the realization of any part of the revenues. In consequence of this representation on the part of the Hukeem, I have been induced to issue orders to him, directing him to level the defences of the fort of Nandparra and to destroy the jungle which surrounds it, but to preserve the circumvallation and the buildings. As to razing the forts of Roderghur and Hyderghur, which lie on the Goorkha frontier, it appears to me to be rather more expedient to maintain them; I accordingly request your advice respecting the garrisons which they may require, that I may issue the necessary instructions. If you think it right that a detachment of British troops should be stationed in that quarter, the fort of Nandparra with its buildings shall be given up for their accommodation, if you desire it.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of the 17th instant, informing me of the representation made by Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan of the extensiveness of the fort of Nandparra, &c. &c. (recapitulate it). Your Excellency has already been apprized of the recent arrangement for uniting at Secrora the two detachments of British troops which were formerly posted there and at Buhramgauth, by which means the force at the former station will consist of a complete battalion; and this arrangement, it is not to be doubted, will effectually control the designs of the mountaineers and of all other insurgents, in any attempts which they might otherwise be disposed to make against the peace of your Excellency's possessions. The entire demolition, therefore, of all the forts which have been taken, seems to me to be highly expedient and unobjectionable in every point of view. I think it also expedient, however, for the present, that a party of sufficient strength, consisting of horse and foot, from the force now under Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, should remain for the protection of Nandparra and the towns in its vicinity, and be posted near the site of the fortress, for which purpose the circumvallation may be preserved; and if hereafter it be found necessary to employ a more efficient detachment in that quarter, it can be furnished with ease and despatch by the corps stationed at Secrora, in the same manner as detachments have occasionally been sent from Seetapore to Mohumdy and other places. On the subject of the other points suggested by your Excellency, as no satisfactory arrangement can be formed for the general defence and protection of any portion of a country without actual observation, and as I have never had an opportunity of visiting the district in question, it is my intention to make a reference to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, whose local knowledge of the country will enable him to convey to me the information required. Your Excellency shall be informed of the result of this reference, and of my own sentiments on the general subject of it, with the least practicable delay.

To Captain J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 29th ultimo, with its enclosures, being copies of a correspondence which has recently passed between you and his Excellency the Vizier, on the subject of an arrangement for the future protection of the district of Nandparra.

In delivering my sentiments on the subject in question, I feel the greater confidence in the justice of my opinion, as it is founded on personal inquiry and local observation, which I have had a favourable opportunity of acquiring in the course of the service I am now employed upon.

With regard to the fort of Hyderghur, which was the most advanced northerly position in the Nandparra district, I have still the same opinion that its destruction was unavoidable. Its situation is in the midst of the saul forest, and could only serve as a strong hold for a marauding party or a repository for plunder, to which latter purpose I am informed it was generally appropriated by the late possessor, Roshun Khan. The effectual manner I caused it to be destroyed must render it in future totally useless. The ground on which it stood was cleared of trees and jungle for the space of fifty yards round the ditch, beyond which the forest is not less than six miles deep in any direction.

The fortified village of Cherdah, situated about seven miles north-east of Nandparra, is no longer formidable since the guns have been taken from it. Any strength it now possesses is very trifling; and if the defences are to be entirely demolished, it would deprive the inhabitants of the only protection they had for their cattle, &c., against thieves. I am decidedly of opinion that any further notice of this place is unnecessary.

Roderghur is a small but strong ghurry, about ten miles south-east of Nandparra, and has been in possession of Balek Ram since the enemy were dispossessed of it. Its situation would serve as an advanced intermediate post between Nandparra and Baraitch; or in case it was found necessary to establish a post for the occupation of a police thannah, or accommodation of the Chuckludar's people. Under any of these considerations, I would recommend it to be kept up; otherwise I am not aware of any reason why it should not be destroyed.

I make no hesitation in repeating what I have already recommended, that the establishment of a military post at Nandparra is the only effectual mode for ensuring the security and tranquillity of the district. The longer I reflect on the expediency of this measure, the more forcibly I am convinced of its propriety. It may be looked upon as the frontier of the district, and its position commands the most vulnerable point from whence attack is to be dreaded. The establishment of a British force in this quarter would give confidence to the inhabitants, and perhaps be the means of inducing the principal Zemindars to discharge the greater proportion of their armed men, which they are now necessitated to keep up, in defence of themselves and property against the formidable attacks of the Nepaulese and Goorkha tribes, who frequently infest this part of the country.

If a military cantonment should be established here, I consider the destruction of the fort immaterial. The works are now in a very unfinished state. One-half of the northern, southern, and the whole western faces, have no other defences of consequence besides thick thorny bamboo fences. The new works are certainly strong, and very extensive, the demolition of which will be tedious and expensive. The country, particularly to the south and westward of the fort, is high, dry, perfectly open, and from what I can learn, has always been considered a healthy spot.

In stating the force that might eventually be fixed here, I conceive that a complete battalion and a few cavalry, if they can be spared, would be necessary until the district was perfectly settled, after which the detachment might with safety be reduced to five companies and a gun.

As you have required my opinion on such points as have come under my immediate observation, I have confined my remarks to the Nandparra division of the district. As I advance in the execution of my duty, I shall be particular in continuing my reports on the expediency of destroying or maintaining such places as I shall have occasion to proceed against.

Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan having reported that the business which has hitherto delayed him here is completed, I shall consequently march, accompanied by the first battalion of the Ninth Regiment and squadron of cavalry.

Major Bird's detachment will continue stationary at this post until the receipt of further instructions from you, or the Major-General commanding in the field.

To Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, commanding a Detachment in Baraitch.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your two separate despatches, dated the 5th and 6th instant.

2. On the subject of the first of those despatches a reference has been made to the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, whose commands shall be made known to you hereafter.

3. The substance of your letter, dated the 6th instant, has been communicated to his Excellency the Vizier, who will issue the necessary orders to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan for the supply of a sufficient number of Bildars to demolish the fortress of Peagpoor with all practicable expedition.

4. Regarding the request of the Rajah of Gungrole to be permitted to retain his fort in its present condition, both his Excellency the Vizier and myself are decidedly of opinion that it is inexpedient in the highest degree to acquiesce in such a proposition, and that the only security which can be had for the future allegiance or fidelity of any Zemindar in Baraitch, is the unconditional surrender and entire demolition of every fortress and strong hold, of whatever description, in the district.

5. We

5. We have already, in the instance of Peagpoor, a melancholy example of the means of resistance to authority, and destructive opposition even to regular troops, which the protection of a fortress, however small, affords to a handful of desperate men with only matchlocks in their hands; and the recurrence of such an example as this can be prevented alone by those measures which you are instructed to execute and superintend, namely, the capture and entire demolition of all the forts in the district.

6. A departure from the usual mode of communication with this office having occurred in one or two of your recent despatches, I deem it to be my duty to inform you, that the reports of all military operations in the Vizier's dominions should be addressed, in the first instance, directly to the Resident at Lucknow, and that the manner which you have adopted on this occasion, namely, that of transmitting copies of your reports to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army, for my information, is inconsistent with established observances.

Letters from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

In the list of places situated in the Baraitch district, with which you furnished me, wherein guns are stated to be mounted, I beg leave to notice the forts of Bingah and Hunnoomanpore, both of which I understand are within the Bhow Begum's country; and as I do not think it would be proper to interfere with either of these places without particular instructions, I request you will inform me how I am to act.

I am happy to inform you, that I have succeeded in gaining possession of eight guns in the course of the present service. I expect four more to day, and I hope the remainder will be delivered up without further trouble.

I entertain sanguine hopes of being in possession of every piece of ordnance in this part of the district, subject to the Vizier's authority, by the time I am favoured with your reply to this letter.

I have been favoured with your letter of the 9th instant. However satisfied I must remain with your decision on the expediency of demolishing every place coming under the denomination of a fort, ghurry, or stronghold in the district, indiscriminately, I cannot avoid noticing the dissatisfaction which a step of this nature will unavoidably be productive of. There are many places in the district wherein a line of distinction ought to be drawn: for instance, villages, whose only defence consists in a small ditch and perhaps an indifferent bamboo fence, which sort of defences only afford protection to the inhabitants against thieves or small banditties who infest the district. Such places, if occupied by people whose fidelity and obedience have hitherto been unimpeachable, should, in my opinion, merit a partial consideration, before the offensive resolution of depriving them of all protection is resorted to.

That all forts or ghurries expressly built for supporting the independence of any particular Zemindar, or occupied by people who on any former occasion have displayed a spirit of resistance to his Excellency's authority, I perfectly agree with you in the necessity, as well as the propriety, of destroying them; but before I persist in the execution of this duty, I am decidedly of opinion it will be advisable first to obtain the surrender of all guns in the possession of such Zemindars as have expressed their acquiescence to deliver them up.

You must be sensible of the absolute necessity which exists, of causing as many Bildars as can be procured to be sent out for carrying into execution the destruction of those places; and I beg leave to remark, that it would materially accelerate the performance of the service, if forty or fifty maunds of gunpowder could be provided to blow up such places as this, where the effect of one mine would be more than equal to the work of a hundred Bildars in one day.

The demolition of Peagpoor will be completely effected to-day, and I shall move with my detachment towards Gungrole to-morrow morning, the proprietor of which I am in hopes will not hesitate delivering up the remainder of his guns, two of which I have already received. I shall not commence on the destruction of that place, until I can obtain a compliance with my requisition from the remainder of the Zemindars on the subject of surrendering their guns, on the delivery of which they conceive their ghurries will be spared.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant.

I have made particular inquiries respecting the strength and resources of Hunnoomanpore, situated in her Highness the Bhow Begum's jagier; and if my information should prove correct, I apprehend it will be necessary to call for the aid of a reinforcement of troops. I mention this circumstance, that you may be prepared to make the necessary arrangements should its reduction be unavoidable. At all events, I hope you will agree with me in the propriety of deferring the employment of this detachment in the Begum's jagier until the service in his Excellency the Vizier's country is completed.

The Rajahs of Gungrole and Ikanah have surrendered part of their guns, and I expect the remainder in the course of this day or to-morrow. The destruction of those places must unavoidably lay over until the arrival of the establishment of Bildars, &c. I requested might be furnished in my letter of the 11th instant. To avoid delay I shall march towards Bulrampore to-morrow, where I am in hopes the Rajah will not persist in holding out against this detachment.

The place of greatest consequence to be attacked is Toolseepore, which is represented as a very strong fort, situated about six coss north-east of Bulrampore, in which seven guns are stated to be mounted, and garrisoned by a formidable body of troops, who I understand are not inclined to surrender their fort or guns without compulsion. Before this fort is attacked, I deem it would be advisable to apprise the Magistrate of the zillah of Goruckpore, in order that the troops at that station, or Captain Gunge, may be in readiness to act as circumstances might require.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 13th instant.

2. On a reference to her Highness the Bhow Begum, I find that the recent conduct of the present possessor of Hunnoomanpore renders the reduction of that fortress an object of the greatest importance, not only to the realization of her Highness's revenue, but also to the tranquillity of the district of Goonda at large, and of the Vizier's possessions which are contiguous; but I concur entirely with you, in the expediency of concluding the service in Baraitch before you proceed to the district of Goonda, when I trust that the appearance of your detachment with the battering train will be sufficient to induce the Zemindars to surrender their fortresses and guns.

3. Rajah Sheo Sing, Zemindar of Bingah, in the Begum's jagier, has recently afforded so many proofs of submission and attachment to the Government, that some indulgence with regard to the demolition of his small fortress might, in my opinion, with propriety be shewn to him; on the condition of his surrendering his guns, and engaging for the surrender of all disaffected and rebellious subjects of the Vizier's Government, who may hereafter take refuge in his zemindary.

4. Regarding the supply of Bildars and of gunpowder for the demolition of the forts in Baraitch, I have made a second and more earnest application to his Excellency the Vizier, who will, I doubt not, adopt the necessary measures with the least practicable delay. With the view, however, of precluding any unnecessary detention of your detachment in the superintendence of the destruction of the forts, I request that you will be pleased to deliver over every fort, as it may come into your possession, to the Vizier's Aumil, Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, whose receipt you will be pleased to demand for it, and transmit that receipt to me, for the purpose of being delivered to his Excellency, as a proof that his Aumil alone is responsible for any further delay which may occur, as well as for the consequences which that delay may hereafter occasion.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

On my arrival at Bulrampore, I found that the ghurries had been destroyed for some time past, and the Rajah now resides in a small village named Bellah, about two coss from hence. His guns have been demanded, but he denies being possessed of any. I have summoned the Zemindar of Toolseepore to surrender all the guns in his possession, two of which he has given up. His place of residence does not prove to be of any strength, although I was given to understand the contrary at first; it is merely a village surrounded by a small ruinous wall, situated in a waste part of the district under the hills, where no water is procurable except from the wells inside the village, and forage is very scarce: I am consequently of opinion, if the Zemindar gives up the remainder of his guns, there will be no necessity for removing the detachment to that place, particularly as the rivers Rapti and Boree Rapti intersect the road thither, the former of which must be crossed on rafts.

I have communicated your wish to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan on the subject of taking charge of the gurries in the district; but he informs me that he cannot become personally responsible, without he is furnished with a force to garrison them. At the same time he states, what I know to be the case, that the Zemindars who now hold possession of them will always be found ready to obey any summons for their surrender. The Zemindars of Ikanah and Gungrole have both declared, on giving up their guns, that they do not now, nor ever have entertained any idea of resisting the authority of his Excellency the Vizier: they merely wish to keep their ghurries for the protection of their families, and whatever little property they are possessed of. The Zemindars in the vicinity of Secrora have sent intimation that their guns will be given up as soon as I think proper to demand them; and except for the reduction of Hunnoomanpore in the Begum's country, I am not aware of any further service that can be required from this detachment.

Bengal Political

I shall give notice to Rajah Sheo Sing of Bingah that his guns are required ; and until his reply is received, I propose remaining at Bulrampore, after which I intend moving towards Secrora.

Sir :

In reporting to you the service in this district, I have to inform you that I have collected eighteen pieces of cannon, all of which I have given in charge to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, to be disposed of as may hereafter be considered expedient.

On receipt of your letter directing the guns of the Bingah Zemindar to be taken, I sent a summons to that effect, to which I this day received an indirect reply. I have accordingly thought it advisable to detach five companies to Bingah, with orders to the officer commanding, that, in case the smallest hesitation is made for the immediate delivery of the guns, to inform me by express, and I will move with the battering train and the remainder of the detachment against the fort. In the mean time preparations are going forward to cross the park over the Rapti, in case of necessity.

The Bulrampore Rajah has at length thought proper to give up his two guns, but not until threats of severity were used.

The Toolseepore Zemindar has sent in two of his guns, and I hope to obtain the remainder without further delay.

As the service in this quarter of the district will be concluded when I receive the guns from Bingah, I propose moving towards Hunnoomanpore, as that place lies on my route towards Secrora.

I am in hopes that as the Bildars have not yet arrived, the idea of destroying Ikanah and Gungrole is given up. The Aumil agrees with me in the propriety of sparing not only those, but all such places as are occupied by peaceable and well-disposed Zemindars, and that those only should suffer that belong to suspicious or rebellious owners.

As I am informed that the Zemindar of Bumowrah (situated six coss southwest of Secrora) is willing to surrender his guns, I think it would be advisable to authorize Lieutenant-Colonel Mabert to detach a small party to receive charge of them, instead of carrying the whole of this detachment so much out of the road.

3. Regarding Ikanah and Gungrole, as well as every other fortress in Baraitch, my letter of the 9th instant, to your address, and the repeated orders of his Excellency cellency the Vizier to his Aumil, were so entirely explicit and express, that his Excellency and myself have both felt surprize and concern at your persisting in the suggestion of preserving those fortresses on any footing whatever; far less in the possession of the Zemindars. 5. As the detachment of any part of the force under Lieutenant-Colonel Mabert's command at Secrora, against a fort or Zemindar from whom the smallest degree of resistance can be apprehended, is in direct and manifest opposition to the repeated orders of the Government, I am precluded from adopting your suggestion with regard to the Zemindar of Bumowrah, and I request that you will adopt the necessary measures with a reference to that person, when the other more important objects of the service of your detachment shall be brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 22d instant.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

My letter of the 20th will have acquainted you that I had sent a detachment of five companies towards Bingah, for the purpose of receiving the Rajah's guns. Captain Vaughan, who commanded the party, reports his having gained possession of three of the number, but that the Rajah refuses to acknowledge having any more, an assertion which I know to be false. I have, therefore, resolved on moving the detachment towards Bingah, when I am in hopes the appearance of the battering train will induce him to surrender the remaining two guns without further trouble or delay. I shall cross the Bapiti to-morrow morning at Muturahghaut, where there is a tolerably good ford.

My chief reason for recommending that a line of distinction should be drawn with respect to the destruction of the forts in this district, proceeded from a conviction of its necessity, inasmuch as the Zemindars having been deprived of their ghurries and guns indiscriminately, they must inevitably be exposed to the greatest danger from the attacks of the hill people, unless a British force is kept up in this part of the country to protect them against those marauders. I always considered your orders perfectly explicit on this subject, and they should certainly have been carried into effect without the least hesitation, had I been furnished with the means, a circumstance which, if considered, ought to have dissipated your surprise and concern, in finding I had persisted in my former opinions, which I conceived I could not be wrong in giving, as long as I was left without the possibility of complying with your instructions. When the Bildars and gunpowder arrive, I shall lose no time in setting about the destruction of the ghurries, as you have ordered, in the execution of which duty the utmost expedition will be observed. The ghurry of Roderghur lies in the vicinity of Nandparra, the demolition of which could be conveniently effected by the Bildars of the Nandparra district, who are now employed there. The ghurry is occupied by the Chuckludar's people, and can consequently be destroyed at any time without the aid of a military force.

Sir :

I beg leave to inform you that Captain Vaughan joined me with his party from Bingah this morning, bringing along with him five guns, which, after much prevarication and delay, the Rajah at length consented to give up. Two of them are coarse unfinished wall-pieces, and I have reason to believe never formed any part of the number he was reported to be in possession of. I have sent your purwannah to the Rajah, with a letter from myself requesting his attendance in camp, when I shall have the necessary obligation taken, as specified in the third paragraph of your letter of the 15th instant.

I encamped at Ikanah this morning preparatory to demolishing the works of the fort. The Rajah and his people require a short time to remove their families and effects from the place, by the expiration of which I hope the Bildars and gunpowder may arrive, as stated to have been despatched in your letter of the 22d instant; but if I should be disappointed in my expectation, I shall march against Hunnoomanpore and return again at a future period to this place.

Sir :

I have the honour to enclose a Persian letter to your address from the Rajah of Bingah, likewise a letter from the same person to me in reply to one I wrote him on the subject of coming into camp, which you will observe he has declined doing. As you expressed your wish that this man's fort should be spared, upon condition he surrendered his guns and entered into an engagement to give up all rebels and outlaws that may at any time take refuge within his district, I feel at a loss how to act on the occasion. That he has other guns besides those which he has given up there can be no doubt: a circumstance that did not come to my knowledge until after the arrival of Captain Vaughan's detachment from Bingah on the 25th instant.

The Vakeel who was the bearer of the letters herewith sent I did not consider it proper to admit into my presence: I accordingly dismissed him from camp with a verbal message to the Rajah, forbidding any further communication except he appeared in person.

The contents of the third paragraph of your letter of the 25th instant (which I have just now received) have been communicated to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, who desired me to say he will order the Chuckludar to take charge of such places as I gain possession of, until the troops from Nandparra arrive, but that he can place little or no dependence on those people, as they are but lately entertained.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your two separate despatches, dated the 25th and 27th instant, with their respective enclosures.

2. The letters and obligation transmitted by the Rajah of Bingah appear to me to be perfectly satisfactory, and I am not aware of any useful purpose which could have been answered by the Rajah's personal attendance on you.

3. Your dismissal, therefore, of his Vakeel, in the manner described in your despatch of the 27th instant, on any other ground than that of your possessing certain information of his having concealed or withholden his guns, appears to me to have been unnecessary : and with the view of ascertaining, beyond a doubt, that all his guns have been surrendered, I transmit another purwannah, which you will be pleased to forward without delay ; and in the case of your receiving a satisfactory answer, you will consider the intention of this Government with a reference to the Rajah of Bingah as fulfilled. A copy of the enclosed purwannah is also transmitted for your information.

To Sheo Sing, Zemindar of Bingah.

Sir :

I have received your arzee in answer to my purwannah, and have also perused the letter and obligation which you transmitted to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath.

The assurance of submission and fidelity which is contained in those documents, and more particularly the voluntary surrender of so many of your guns, is gratifying and satisfactory to my mind : but Colonel MacGrath has conveyed to me a suspicion, founded on information which that officer has received, of your having secreted or withholden some of your guns ; a circumstance which induces my most lively regret on your account, and the confirmation of which must inevitably subject you to the highest displeasure of this Government, and supersede the favourable consideration which your former services have obtained.

With the view of removing the suspicion which is thus entertained of your conduct, I desire that you will prepare and transmit to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, without any delay, a second obligation, under your seal, in the terms of the draft under-written.

" I, Sheo Sing, do hereby most solemnly declare, that all the guns which I possessed have been delivered over, agreeably to orders, to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath ; and if, at any future period, a gun of any description be proved to be in my possession, I acknowledge myself to be convicted of disloyalty, and justly subjected to expulsion from my fort and zemindary, and to every other punishment which the pleasure of the Government may inflict on me. In witness whereof, &c. &c."

Sir :

After despatching my letter of the 27th instant, I received positive information that the Rajah of Bingah was in possession of four other guns besides those which he had given up ; I accordingly resolved on moving towards the fort yesterday morning with the detachment under my command. The Rajah, on receiving intimation of the movement, immediately sent in two more of his guns, and in the course of last night he deserted the fort, and fled into the jungles with his family and effects.

On arriving this morning at Bingah I was met by Meer Samin Ally, one of her Highness the Bhow Begum's Aumils; and having no means of destroying the fort, I have delivered over charge of it to him. I intend ordering the battering train across the Rapti to-morrow, and I shall follow the day after with the remainder of the detachment on the route towards Hunnoomanpore.

Previous to marching from Ikanah, I placed Balek Ram, the Chuckludar, in possession of that fort; and if the Bildars and gunpowder do not arrive against my return thither, I shall not delay on that account, but leave the place as it is at present occupied.

2. Under the particular circumstances which you have stated, your movement towards the fortress of Bingah was highly judicious and proper, and the result of that movement, in the evacuation of the fortress in question, is satisfactory in the highest degree.

3. I have communicated the substance of your despatch to his Excellency the Vizier and to her Highness the Bhow Begum, and I have suggested in the strongest terms to her Highness, the necessity of the immediate demolition of Bingah, which will, I doubt not, be carried into effect.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 7th instant, suggesting the expediency of the relief of the first battalion of the Ninth Regiment from the duties of the district of Baraitch, and recalling to my recollection the subject of a despatch to your address from the Adjutant-General of the Army, under date the 18th ultimo.

2. From intelligence conveyed to me by his Excellency the Vizier, as well as from the substance of a despatch which I have recently received from Lieutenant-Colonel Mabert, an extract from which is enclosed, there seems great reason to doubt the authenticity of the information of Roshun Khan's flight to Khyreeghur, as reported by the Governor-General's agent at Barellie; and consequently the object of the expedition to Khyreeghur, in as far as this Government is concerned, seems to me to be entirely superseded, while, on the other hand, the general belief of the inhabitants of Nandparra and Baraitch, that Roshun Khan is still concealed in the neighbourhood, and meditates a return to Nandparra, renders the movement of either of the divisions of Lieutenant-Colonel Mabert's battalion to any distance from their present positions, in my opinion, highly inexpedient.

3. It follows, therefore, according to my judgment, that neither the projected service in the district of Khyreeghur, as suggested by the Governor-General's agent at Barellie, nor the conclusion of the more important service in Baraitch, on which Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath with his corps is employed, can be undertaken by Lieutenant-Colonel Mabert's battalion, or by any portion of that corps, without the most imminent danger of the return of the rebel Roshun Khan, and a renewal of the disturbances in Nandparra; and, consequently, that the

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you of my arrival before the fort of Hunnoomanpore (or Maduc), on the 5th instant, with the detachment under my command.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

The day I encamped before the fort, the Killadar evinced a hesitation to comply with my summons relative to surrendering the place; a circumstance that induced me to commence on preparing the necessary materials for constructing a battery, which were yesterday evening in a state of forwardness, when I received a message from Hullopooree, the Killadar, expressive of his inclination to give up the fort. Satisfied that the offer was sincere, I required his attendance in camp, a requisition which he immediately complied with; and in the course of the interview I succeeded in gaining his promise that I should be placed in possession this morning: an engagement which, I am happy to say, he has punctually observed. With the fort two guns have been surrendered, and the remainder, which he disclaims any exclusive control over, will be sent into camp without delay.

The surrender of this fort I look upon as a fortunate circumstance. It is remarkably strong and in thorough repair, and defended by a strong garrison. I expect the supply of gunpowder which was sent from Lucknow in the course of to-morrow: in the mean time the mines are preparing for the destruction of the fort, which I hope will be completed in three or four days. There is likewise a small ghurry, named Runypoor, belonging to the Ghossein, which shall be destroyed immediately afterwards, likewise the fort belonging to the Raiah

Rajah of Gungrole will be demolished, both situated immediately in this neighbourhood.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

Before I marched from Ikana I had the mines in readiness for its destruction ; but being disappointed in the receipt of gunpowder to spring them, I was induced to leave the place at the solicitation of the Rajah, who voluntarily offered to destroy the works in any manner I thought proper to point out. I was further induced to accept of the Rajah's offer, as the season was fast advancing when it would be difficult and hazardous employing troops in situations where they would be exposed to the weather ; and as I had reason to expect resistance at this place, I was anxious to bring the service to as early a termination as possible.

I propose detaching five companies, under the command of Captain Vaughan, as soon as I receive the gunpowder, to superintend the destruction of Rhewa, the proprietor of which has given up his guns and is ready to submit to the demolition of his ghurry. After this duty is completed, I mean to move against Bumowrah, the possession of which, I hope, will terminate the service to be performed in this district.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d instant, and in reply to inform you, that in obedience to the instructions therein contained, a squadron of the third Regiment Native Cavalry has been ordered to proceed from hence on the morning of the 8th, by the nearest route, for Bundlecund.

Major Raban, a few days previous to delivering over the command of this post, detached a Jemadar's party of Cavalry to Behar ; but as I am not aware of the necessity of this measure, or of their being continued there, and as I shall shortly be obliged to send a troop to Elahabad, to escort treasure from thence for the troops here which are now going on four months in arrears, and there will then be scarcely a relief for duty left in the lines, I hope my ordering the recall of this party will meet with your approbation.

I transmit a letter to my address from Zalim Sing, received yesterday. From what I can discover of his views from the person who delivered it, and which is corroborated by other accounts, I am induced to entertain a belief that it is his intention to commence his depredations on the country as soon as the crops now on the ground shall become ripe.

3. In the contemplation of his Excellency the Vizier's annual hunting excursion, during which he is always attended by one battalion of Sepoys, and the presence presence of a complete battalion is indispensable at Lucknow, I am apprehensive that your detachment of Captain Vaughan with the second company of the first battalion of the Twenty-first Regiment, which is the corps to be left at Lucknow, will be productive of public inconvenience; and I request that you will take the earliest opportunity which may offer, of dispensing with the service of two companies of Sepoys from the whole strength of your detachment, to direct Captain Vaughan, with those of the first battalion of the Twenty-first Regiment, to rejoin his corps at Lucknow.

I have the honour to inform you that I arrived in the vicinity of Secrora yesterday morning on my way to Bumowrah.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

Dowcul Sing, the Zemindar of Bumowrah, on hearing of the approach of this detachment, deserted his place of residence, which is situated on the banks of the Gogra, and fled across the river towards the purgunnah of Deriabad with his guns, according to his usual custom. I proceeded thither this morning with a small party to inspect the place; and instead of finding a fort, it proves to be nothing more than a small ghurry, or fortified house on the banks of the river, capable of containing forty or fifty men, outside of which there are a few choppered habitations enclosed by a thorn hedge, for the accommodation of his people. The place can be destroyed by a few bildars in the course of a day; but I have not allowed it to be pulled down, under the idea that it would be a proper place to post a small party of troops in case it was found necessary to follow the Zemindars. In the meantime I would recommend a native officer, and about thirty sepoy, to be sent there from the Secrora post, until you determine what is to be done.

Bumowrah is situated seven miles to the southward of Secrora. Its position is strong, being in an island formed by a small branch of the Gogra, opposite a ghaut, where there are no boats but what this Zemindar keeps to cross and recross the river in case of being attacked.

I have for the present desired Hukeem Melidi Alee Khan to furnish a party of his men to occupy the place, until you determine whether it would be proper to detach the party I have recommended should be detached from the post of Secrora.

I shall move to-morrow towards Rhewa, where five companies are gone in advance: and after that place is destroyed, which will be effected in the course of a few days, I am not aware of any further duty that will remain to be performed in the district. I shall then wait your orders relative to the disposal or further employment of the troops under my command.

I communicated the latter paragraph of your letter of the 7th instant to her Highness the Begum's Aumil; and although he was at first averse to accepting your offer of the aid of part of this detachment to assist in superintending the destruction of the fort of Bingah, he is now desirous of taking advantage of your proposal. It is accordingly my intention to furnish him with a company, which with his own force now there ought to be perfectly adequate to the duty, without running the smallest risk.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 11th instant, conveying intelligence of the flight of Dowcul Sing with his guns, and your occupation of the small fortress of Bumowrah.

2. I regret that it has not been in your power to prevent the escape of this Zemindar with his guns, which may be productive of unpleasant consequences hereafter; but I am satisfied that the preservation of the ghurry, and its occupation by so small a party of our troops from Secrora, if those measures were expedient or practicable on any other grounds, would by no means avert or diminish the injurious effects to be apprehended from the flight of the Zemindar, and therefore it is my duty to desire that Bumowrah be immediately demolished.

3. Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, as well as yourself, has been repeatedly apprized of his sovereign's sentiments on this subject being in entire concurrence with mine, and therefore it is unnecessary to make any further reference to his Excellency the Vizier, who is prevented from transacting business at present by the religious duties of the Mohurram.

4. Respecting the employment of your detachment after the forts of Bumowrah, Rhewa, and Ikanah shall be destroyed, I can only for the present refer you to the statement of fortresses and guns contained in my despatch of the 27th December last, remarking for your more particular guidance that the forts of Mobarickpore and Jugnapore, and the guns of Isheeree Sing and Bhojung Sing and Shahbaz, have not yet been reported to me in the detail of your proceedings in Baraitch, and that it is the particular desire of his Excellency the Vizier, as well as the wish of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, that every thing which is necessary to be done in that province should be executed at present, while a battering train and every requisite equipment are on the spot.

5. It would be highly satisfactory to me if, before the march of your detachment from the scene of its active operations during a period of so many months, you could procure and transmit to me a written declaration, under the seals of the Vizier's principal officers, Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan and Balek Ram, to certify that all the forts and ghurries in the districts of Nandparra and Baraitch have been taken by your detachment and destroyed, and that no
Zemindar

Zemindar in this district can be considered as possessing the means of further opposition to the Government.

2. Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
MacGrath.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I had yesterday the honour of receiving your letter of the 14th by express, accompanied by copy of an arzee written by Meer Samin Allee, her Highness the Bhow Begum's Aumil. Your remark relative to the disposition of the native officers in transmitting complaints without any foundation in truth, I acknowledge is evidently applicable to the case in question; and from the communication I held with Meer Samin Allee, I should have suspected him to be the last person who was capable of compiling such an extraordinary mass of misrepresentation.

It would be needless to enter into a particular repetition of every part of the Aumil's arzee; I will therefore confine my remarks to such points as are material. I must, in the first place, acquaint you, that I positively declined allowing the Aumil to interfere with any measures I thought proper to adopt for the capture or surrender of the fortress of Hunnoomanpore, being well aware I could effect separately, by negotiation, what in concert with him would have cost many lives; and from this circumstance alone can I account for the extraordinary representation he has made to you on the subject.

Hulloolpooree, the Chilla of the Ghossein, who had charge of the fort, on learning that I had authority to act independently of the Aumil, immediately sent in offers of surrendering the fort and his guns, upon a promise of security to himself and personal property; terms which I readily agreed to. He soon after waited on me in camp, where he resigned his authority over the place upon the terms I had pledged myself to observe faithfully. He gave up two guns, superior to any the Aumil had with his troops, and offered to forfeit his life, if it hereafter appeared that he was possessed of more. He at the same time mentioned a neighbouring Rajah in the Begum's jagier, whose name I do not recollect, who occasionally supplied him with additional guns, when he was involved in disputes with the Zemindar whose possessions lay contiguous to his.

The motives the Aumil had in view, by wishing me to deliver over the Chilla to him as a prisoner, I have reason to say were very different from what he avows; and I never could have complied with his wishes, without sacrificing my faith to satisfy his avaricious and oppressive designs.

I certainly declined to give over the fort of Bhurtowlee, or Hunnoomanpore, until I had executed your orders, as he had previously expressed a wish of retaining it for the accommodation of a thannah. Instead of one mine, no less than twelve, containing forty-eight maunds of powder, were sprung under the fort, which have not only had the effect of destroying the works, but the foundation is shaken in such a manner as to render it impossible to undergo repair. Ramunpore I always considered in possession of the Aumil: it consisted of a large mud building, where a place of worship is erected, surrounded by a breast-work and deep ditch, which I desired should be levelled, and I furnished the Aumil with a small party of Sepoys to protect his workmen during the time they were employed in demolishing the place. I told him that the Ghossein's dwelling-house or temples should not be destroyed with my concurrence, as they could not be considered any part of the fortification.

The Aumil attended me to Secora, when he expressed his satisfaction at the service this detachment had performed for her Highness, and stated that nothing remained in the district of Goonda to be performed which required the aid of the troops under my command. Before I parted I furnished him with a letter addressed to the officer who was to command the company I intended to detach for the purpose of superintending the destruction of Bingah; a circumstance that must have escaped his memory when he wrote the conclusion of his arzee.

I have detached fifty Bildars, under a guard of Sepoys, to destroy Bumowrah, which will be easily effected in one day. Several other small places inferior to Bumowrah, have likewise been demolished, which I did not include in the statement I had the honour of furnishing you with. The declarations you require from the Chuckludar of the district and Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, are herewith sent; likewise Meer Samin Allee's acknowledgment of having been placed placed in possession of Bingah, Rameypore, and the destruction of Hunnoomanpore. I have applied to him for a similar declaration to that which Balek Ram has given, and as soon as he furnishes me with it, I shall forward the same to you without delay.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 18th instant, with its several inclosures; and I am extremely sorry to observe, from the representation of the Aunil, Balek Ram, whose letter to your address formed one of the enclosures in your despatch, that the state of the district of Baraitch is by no means such as could be wished for, or as, under any circumstances, could authorize my suggesting to his Excellency the Vizier the propriety of withdrawing your battalion, or recalling the squadron of cavalry to Pertaubghur, where its presence is highly desirable.

2. I solicit your particular attention to the subject of Balek Ram's letter, a translation of which is enclosed; and I beg that you will lose no time in adopting the measures which may appear to you to be proper and practicable, with the force under your command, for the suppression of the refractory Zemindars and restoration of the tranquillity of the district.

Translation of a Letter from Balek Ram to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, commanding a Detachment in Baraitch, dated the 16th Mohurram 1225, or 21st February 1810.

Letter from the Aunil.

You have requested me to inform you of the number of forts and guns remaining in this district to be demolished and taken, in order that they also may be captured by the aid of the British detachment, and that the entire tranquillity of the district may be established before the troops be withdrawn. I have accordingly the honour to state to you, that all the forts in this district, for the destruction of which the aid of the British troops was required, have been already taken and demolished, and that you have also taken several guns from the Zemindars against whom you proceeded: indeed, a greater number of guns, on the whole, than was stated in my arzee to the Presence have been taken and delivered over to the Sirkar, but the Zemindars who have fled from their forts, such as Bojung Sing of Peagpoor, Roshun Khan of Nandparra, Dowlut Sing Zemindar of Rhewa, Sheo Sing of Bingah, Dowcul Sing of Bhutowra, and Hunnoomanpore of Bhurtowlee, have all carried several guns with them, and continue in open rebellion. With the exception of the above persons, there are no guns in the possession of any of the Zemindars, nor is there a single fort of consequence to be reduced in the district.

Sic orig.

You are, however, fully aware of the disturbances which still exist in the district, notwithstanding the presence of the troops. On one side, Roshun Khan is committing depredations by night and day; and on the other, Bojung Sing and others plunder the villages and people. Sheo Sing, the Zemindar of Bingah, has collected a number of followers, and is committing depredations in Bulrampore and Ikana: so is Dowcul Sing, the Zemindar of Bhutowra.

Under such circumstances, is it possible that the district can be said to be in a state of tranquillity? or can we ever expect the establishment of peace in the district, unless a force be still employed to check the depredations of the marauders? On the contrary, disturbances will daily increase, since even now, while the detachment is present, depredations are constantly committed. I

Sir :

Herewith I have the honour to transmit to you the enclosed copy of a public letter received from Lieutenant Denty, commanding at Nandparra, under date the 21st instant, for your information.

From the report stated in Lieutenant Denty's letter, it appears that the best part of the outer-works of the fort is entirely destroyed, and that a less force than five companies is fully sufficient for the protection of Nandparra. Should you be of that opinion, and that two companies might be withdrawn with safety, as there are no apprehensions of the enemy's attacking the place, I have to request you will favour me with your further instructions on this subject.

Sir :

In reply to the second paragraph of your public letter of the 19th instant, I beg leave to inform you, that it is my opinion that two companies of the present detachment might be withdrawn. Two sides of the outer fort being entirely destroyed, it will not now be worth the enemy's while to attack it, therefore three companies, I think, will be perfectly sufficient for the protection of Nandparra. I do not believe any large body of the enemy have been in the district since our arrival. Small parties of them have attacked two villages in the neighbourhood, but, from the nature of the country, this is entirely out of my power to prevent; for as I mentioned in a former letter, these parties are constantly changing their positions, and by keeping always in the jungles, it is impossible to pursue them with infantry. I would, therefore, strongly recommend a body of cavalry being stationed here, who might on some occasion surprize these freebooters, and by a severe example prevent the like attacks in future. Small parties of Hindoostanee horse stationed at the different villages in the jungles would, I make no doubt, drive the enemy out of the district altogether; but unless some measures are taken, I see no prospect of its prosperity by the present detachment remaining, for those villages at the distance of a few coss must invariably be subject to attack, without our being able to render them assistance till too late. I have, therefore, to report, that I conceive three companies perfectly sufficient for the protection of Nandparra. With this force, I think it very improbable the enemy would ever think of coming here; but that a party of cavalry is necessary to clear the country and secure the villages from molestation.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 24th instant, with its enclosure from Lieutenant Denty to your address.

3. I solicit your particular attention to the enclosed copies of letters which have recently passed between me and Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, respecting the state of affairs in Baraich, and the practicability of an arrangement for the future protection of that district, which will admit of the return of Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath's battalion to Seetapore.

Sir:

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel
Mabert.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your public letter of the 26th ultimo, with its several enclosures, respecting the affairs in Baraich, and, having attentively perused them, I am aware of no difficulty in making the necessary arrangement required for the future protection of the district, in the manner proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, which might be more easily effected by substituting a troop of cavalry at Nandparra, in the room of two companies of the present force now there, which in that event would be withdrawn, and afford me a greater force at this post, which could be detached on any emergent occasion for the protection of this part of the district.

From all the various statements which I have received from the officer in command at Nandparra, relative to the state of affairs in that district, I am induced to give it as my opinion, that a force consisting of three companies of native infantry with a troop of cavalry will be fully adequate to the service required, which with the force proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath to be stationed at or near Bulrampore will protect that part of the frontier from the incursions of the rebellious zemindars, who are stated to have taken refuge in the jungles in that quarter.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you that the battering-train moved this morning towards Bhyramghaut, on the way back to Cawnpore, under charge of two companies of the second battalion of the Fourth Regiment.

Rajah Sheo Sing of Bingah has expressed a wish to be permitted to return to his zemindary. In reply to his application, I have desired him to withdraw himself and adherents from Bojung Sing and Dultoman Sing's party, and repair to Baraitch, where I would be ready to afford him security of his person and property, and would ensure his pardon on giving into the terms alluded to in your letter of the 25th ultimo. Should the restoration of this Zemindar to his lands be effected (a prospect I have little doubt of), I look upon it that the Peagpoor Zemindars, now in his alliance, will through his influence be given up, or prevented from committing depredations in the district, as the principal number of followers belonging to the party are in the pay and under the exclusive authority of Sheo Sing. I shall move directly to Baraitch, where I mean to stop until I can ascertain whether Sheo Sing is sincere in his offers. With respect to seizing him or any of his associates by force, I fear every endeavour would be fruitless; and any use of force can now be made of would be to prevent the rebels plundering the district, and in case of their venturing any distance from the jungles to cut off their retreat.

The disaffected Zemindars now lurking in the northern extremities of the district are the only people from whom the smallest apprehension is at present to be entertained. They have hitherto remained perfectly tranquil in the jungles, and will not attempt to disturb the peace of the district, as long as a small detachment remains in advance to keep them in check. I shall, in the meantime, use every means in my power to encourage Sheo Sing's return; and should I fail in the attempt, I must only try the effect of following him and his party into their present retreat.

For information relative to the situation of the Zemindars of Bumowrah and Rhewa, who have absconded, I refer you to the Chuckludar's letters herewith enclosed, by which you will perceive that nothing need be apprehended from their disaffection. At the same time I beg leave to state it as my opinion, that both of them will, in the course of a short time, undoubtedly return to a sense of their allegiance.

Hunoomanpore, of Bhurtowlee, having been turned out of his habitation, has been obliged to take up his residence in a jungle on his zemindary. He has repeatedly written to me on the subject of the harsh treatment he has experienced; but as I have not the power of redressing his grievances, I have recommended him to repair to Lucknow and submit his complaints to you in person. I beg leave to enclose a letter I received from him two days ago, from the contents of which I trust you will be sensible of the reason he has to be dissatisfied with the Aumil of Goonda.

A company belonging to the second battalion of the Fourth Regiment is still at Bingah, superintending the destruction of the fort, and as soon as this duty is completed, I shall order its return to Lucknow.

To Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath, commanding the Detachment in Baraitch.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 1st instant, with its inclosures, and I shall be extremely happy to hear that Sheo Sing has returned to his allegiance, and that an arrangement with that Zemindar, satisfactory to him and to her Highness the Begum's Aumil, has been concluded through your mediation.

2. Respecting the Goosseyn of Hunnoomanpore and Bhurtowlie, I have this day addressed a letter to her highness the Begum, and a purwannah to her Aumil, Samin Alee, who is directed to conciliate the Goosseyn and restore him on easy terms to his village. The purwannah to the Aumil is enclosed and left open for your perusal.

3. I have further the honour of transmitting to you the enclosed translation of a letter which I have this day received from his Excellency the Vizier, and a translation of the arzee of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, which is referred to in that letter.

4. If the statement in the latter document be correct, there seems every reason to expect the speedy and successful termination of the services of your battalion in Baraitch, by the seizure and surrender of Roshun Khan, and of all the other rebels and fugitives who have taken refuge on the confines of Nepaul; and, with this view, I suggest the propriety of your affording your assistance to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan in the execution of the plan which he has proposed.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 3d March 1810.)

I transmit, for your information, the enclosed copy of an arzee which I have received from Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, dated the 28th ultimo, together with a copy of the Hindee letter which accompanied it; and I request that you will issue such orders on this subject to Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath as may appear to you to be expedient, informing me of the substance of your letter to Colonel MacGrath, that I may issue corresponding orders to the Hukeem.

Letter
from the Vizier.

The Arzee of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan. (Dated the 28th February 1810.)

Colonel MacGrath told me to-day, that the plan proposed by the Resident of Lucknow for the protection of the district of Baraitch was that of stationing five companies at Bulrampore and five companies at Nandparra from the battalion now at Secrora. This arrangement appears to me to be highly proper and expedient, because in whatever direction the rebels may fly, they will be immediately punished with effect, and the minds of the Ryots will be at ease by the presence of the British forces. Colonel MacGrath, however, has further informed me, that he has received orders to pursue Sheo Sing of Bingah, who has excited disturbance in Goonda.

Arzee of Hukeem Mehdi
Alee Khan.

At present I am concerting measures with an officer of the Government of Nepaul for the seizure of the rebels Roshun and others, who have fled towards the hills of that country, and this officer has promised to carry the measure into effect, in consideration of a reward of two thousand rupees, which I have agreed to pay him. An agreement, under the seal of the Ghoorka, has accordingly been procured to this effect, that on the arrival of the British detachment on the confines of Nepaul, the rebel Roshun, and all the other defaulters from this government, with their followers, shall be seized and delivered over to the Sircar. It appears, also, that Gian Sing and Heera Loll, adherents of Roshun, and Delthemman Zemindar of Peagpoor, and Sheo Sing of Bingah, have all taken refuge in those hills. Under these circumstances, it appears to be advisable that the detachment under the command of Colonel MacGrath, and the force with me, should immediately march towards the hills; and I have accordingly directed Mohummud Hadi to forward one hundred bullocks laden with grain to Gurheebloor, for the use of the troops, and suggested to Colonel MacGrath the propriety of his marching in that direction. The Colonel tells me, however, that without the orders of the Resident, he cannot march towards any other place than the district of Bingah, for that he has addressed a letter to-day to the Resident on the subject of my representations, and that it is his intention to remain at Bhewa till he receives an answer to his letter. I deem it my duty to submit these circumstances to your Excellency; and as the seizure of the rebel Roshun, through the means of this officer of the Government of Nepaul, is of the first and greatest importance, since it must at once put an end to every disorder in the district, I am hopeful that your Excellency will procure and expedite to Colonel MacGrath the orders of the Resident for his immediate march with the force under his command, including the cavalry, in the direction which I shall point out to him.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you with my arrival on the banks of Kunarah River this morning, ten coss east-north-east of Khyreeghur. The rebels under Roshun Khan, finding I was pursuing them so rapidly, were forced to abandon most of their heavy baggage, which fell into my hands this morning, contained on eleven hackeries: the remains of some gun-carriages and tumbrils were likewise found in the road; but, as yet, I have not been able to discover the guns. The length and difficulty of the march this morning prevented me from continuing the pursuit; but I intend marching again to night, when I am in hopes, either to come up with the enemy, or gain so much upon them that a few days will, in all probability, terminate the pursuit.

I have detached a party of his Excellency's cavalry in advance, to hang on the rear of the enemy, and afford me information with respect to their force and the route they are pursuing.

The ground I am now encamped upon was yesterday occupied by the enemy; and from information I have received, it appears that Budjha Sing, with about one hundred followers, has joined Roshun Khan's party.

Mudoo Sing, the brother of Ram Sing of Kyreeghur, has caused all the boats to the northward on the Gogra to be secured; and unless the rebels retreat into the hills, which I think improbable, there is little chance of their escape.

Sir:

I have the pleasure to inform you, that I succeeded this day in coming up with the rebel force under Roshun Khan, and after a severe but successful attack, completely defeated the enemy, with heavy loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

Roshun, who was present during the commencement of the action, fled into the jungles and made good his escape, although closely pursued. His family, two dismounted guns, and the remainder of his baggage, were sent off yesterday, in a north-west direction, towards the Gogra.

After the enemy had commenced their retreat, I pursued them for a considerable distance through the jungles; but from the extreme fatigue my troops had undergone, I found it necessary to give them a temporary refreshment, and I propose marching again in the course of the night, and if possible renewing the attack; but I am apprehensive the terror struck by the effect of the action to-day will render it impracticable to overtake them before they reach the banks of the Gogra, in which direction it would appear they are retreating.

From the exertions of Ram Sing, I am in hopes all the boats to the northward of Khyreeghur have been effectually secured; and a Soubadar of the hills, now in camp, has taken such precautions as will prevent their retreat into the hills.

In this action I have to regret the loss of one man killed and eight wounded. The loss of the enemy was very severe, but as yet I have not been able to ascertain the number correctly.

2. The object of Colonel MacGrath's expedition to Khyreeghur, in as far as the Vizier's interests were concerned, namely, that of the seizure of the rebellious Zemindar of Nandparra, being superseded by the flight of Roshun Khan towards Rampore, and the state of the district of Khyrabad appearing both to his Excellency the Vizier and to myself, to require the recall of a portion of the British troops to that district, I have on these accounts, as well as from a recollection of the wishes of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, deemed it to be my duty to authorize the immediate return of Lieutenant-Colonel MacGrath with his battalion to the cantonment at Sectapore, submitting, however, for your consideration,

2. If this intelligence be correct, and there seems no reason to doubt its authenticity, I am not aware of any good purpose which can be answered by your remaining in the district of Khyreeghur, unless the seizure of the Zemindar of that district, as suggested in the letter of Mr. Brooke, or the apprehension of the rebel and marauder Budjha Sing could be accomplished by the force under your command, which, at the present advanced period of the season, is I fear totally impracticable.

3. Under these circumstances, and from a recollection of the sentiments of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief with a reference to your battalion, as conveyed in a despatch from the Adjutant-General of the Army to the commanding officer of the troops in the field, I deem it to be my duty to authorize and direct your return with the corps under your command, to the station of its cantonment at Sectapore, unless you shall receive contrary orders from the Provincial Commander-in-Chief of the Army, to whom a copy of this despatch shall be immediately transmitted by express.

3. A balance of nearly twenty-two lacs of rupees, being more than the amount of the revenue of the three districts in question for a year, is stated to be due by the Aumil, and but a small portion of this balance is supposed to be in the hands of the Zemindars.

4. The realization, therefore, of any considerable part of the arrears of revenue seems to me to be highly improbable; and the principal advantages in my contemplation are those of convincing his Excellency the Vizier of the ruinous system of the administration of this branch of his Government, and obtaining such accurate information regarding the state of a large portion of his dominions, as may lead to a beneficial arrangement for the ensuing fusly year, and may preclude the necessity of employing, or greatly facilitate the operations of, a British military force in the ensuing cold season.

1. The present state of the district of Dalmow, and the measures now in contemplation for the future management of that district, having induced his Excellency the Vizier to summon the Deputy Aumil of Dalmow, Raee Koossul Sing, to his Excellency's presence in camp, and the recent misconduct of that Aumil giving great reason to believe that he meditates an escape across the Ganges, with the public treasure and the records of the district under his charge, I am requested by his Excellency to desire that you will detach a sufficient force from this station to the neighbourhood of the fortress of Dalmow, for the purpose of preventing the Aumil's escape across the Ganges or otherwise, and, if necessary, of seizing his person, and conducting him in security to camp.

2. A detail of the force which is now acting with Koossul Sing, consisting partly of the Vizier's troops and partly of the Aumil's adherents, will be furnished for your information and guidance. The commander of the Vizier's troops at Dalmow will be instructed to place himself under the orders of the commanding officer of the British detachment, and to obey that officer implicitly in every respect; and a body of one hundred of the Vizier's Candahar horsemen, under the command of an active officer, with instructions similar to the above, will be directed to advance with all expedition to the neighbourhood of Dalmow, and there await the arrival of the British detachment.

3. As the accomplishment of the object in view seems to require secrecy and the utmost possible expedition, you will be pleased to direct the commanding officer of the detachment to proceed by the nearest route to Dalmow, and to make as long marches as possible, without harassing the troops under his command.

4. On his arrival at the place of his destination, he will deliver or forward to Koossul Sing the enclosed dustuck, or mandate, under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, requiring that Aumil's immediate attendance at Sooltanpore; and after securing the person of the Aumil, if necessary, so as to preclude the possibility of escape, he will be careful to prevent the embezzlement of any part of the treasure or public records of the district, and will escort the latter, with the Aumil, in security, by easy marches, to this place, apprizing me by express of his proceedings in the execution of this duty.

2. In conformity with your instructions, contained in the third paragraph, I delivered to the Aumil the dustuck, or mandate, requiring his attendance at Sooltanpore, and explained to him the necessity of his obedience to that order, which he very readily complied with; and I immediately took the necessary measures for the security of the Vizier's public treasure and records of the district of Dalmow, by going myself in person to the Treasury, where I found no more than three bags, containing thirteen hundred and forty-three Lucknow rupees eight annas, and one bag of pice and cowries, which will be brought, under escort of my detachment, to the Vizier's camp at Sooltanpore, to which place I shall proceed tomorrow morning by easy marches. 1. I have the honour of submitting for your information the enclosed copy of a letter of this date, which I have addressed to Major Fraser, commanding the troops at Sooltanpore.

2. Since the despatch of my letter of the 10th instant, his Excellency the Vizier, after confining the principal Aumil of the districts of Sooltanpore, Pertaubghur, and Bareille, with three of his relations and deputies, has been occupied in a fruitless attempt to recover the large outstanding balances of revenue in this district from the principal sub-farmers and Zemindars, who were stated to be in balance by the Aumil, and a few of whom, like the Zemindars of the district of Akberpoor, described in my instructions to Major Fraser, have declined to appear in the Presence.

3. The Vizier has been in consequence extremely urgent with me for the immediate employment of a large military force and the aid of a battering train, to reduce those defaulters to submission and enforce their attendance in camp ; but, as the obvious inexpedience, and indeed the impracticability, of affording this aid, during the present inclement season of the year, were expressly declared and acknowledged before our quitting Fyzabad, and on the first suggestion of our visiting these districts, I have considered it to be my indispensable duty to adhere to my original declaration, and to decline making any requisition for the employment of a battering train to the commanding officer of the forces.

4. The disorderly state of the district of Akberpoor had never been announced to me by the Vizier till after our arrival at this place, and the want of proper and timely information, regarding the state of the district in question, formed a strong additional argument in the recent discussion with his Excellency against his demand of a battering train, or the undertaking of extensive military operations at so unfavourable a season of the year.

5. The measure which I have ultimately adopted, with a reference to the district of Akberpoor, has had his Excellency's entire approbation, and will, I trust have the desired effect.

To Major Fraser, commanding the Troops at Sooltanpore.

Sir :

1. The Zemindars of the villages of Burouna, Oolloopoor, and Fukheerpoor Rewy dependants of Baboo Sudroopjeet Sing, Talookdar of Bedhur, in the district of Akberpoor, having resisted the authority of his Excellency the Vizier, by refusing to obey a summons for their personal attendance at this place and treating the messenger with insolence and contempt, I have been requested by his Excellency to desire that you will adopt the necessary measures for supporting the authority of his Government over the several Zemindars in question, and enforcing their obedience to his summons.

2. From the information which I have hitherto procured, it would appear that the collected force of the several Zemindars, above described, does not exceed the number of three or four hundred match-lockmen at the utmost, and that they do not possess fortresses of any strength, nor strong holds of a nature or description against which the employment of a battering train can be required.

3. But as there are several places of considerable strength reported to be in the possession of Sudroopjeet Sing, Deljeet Sing, and other Zemindars in the district of Akberpoor, who have long been in a state of equivocal submission, if not of resistance to the Vizier's government, and may offer their assistance to the Zemindars of Burouna, Oolloopoor, and Fukheerpoor, it seems on this account to be expedient, as well as desirable in every point of view, that the submission of the persons whom I have mentioned to the just authority of their sovereign be brought about by conciliatory conduct, rather than by military operations, and that the latter, if ultimately indispensable, be undertaken with great prudence and caution, so as to preclude the possibility of a failure at an unfavourable season of the year, when the employment of any reinforcement, and more particularly of heavy ordnance and stores, must be attended with great inconvenience, if not considered as totally impracticable.

4. From a consideration of the limited force which is at present under your command, and of the service recently performed by a portion of your battalion, as well as of the nature of the service which is the subject of the present requisition, I have induced his Excellency the Vizier to offer the assistance, on this occasion, of two hundred chosen men from the body of Candahar horsemen in his Excellency's service, and of two iron-guns, six-pounders, with their full complement of golandauzes, and a proportion of field ammunition.

5. To the above party of his Excellency the Vizier's troops you will be pleased to add such a detachment from your battalion as may appear to you to be requisite for the accomplishment of the object in view, and direct the whole party to proceed to the district of Akberpoor with all convenient expedition, taking care to furnish the commanding officer of the British detachment, on whom of course the general command will devolve, with such particular instructions, in the spirit of the foregoing remarks, as you may deem to be necessary for his guidance.

6. Purwannahs, under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, in the terms of the enclosed document, have been addressed to all the Zemindars in the district of Akberpoor, and will be entrusted to the commanding officer of the detachment, for the purpose of being delivered or transmitted on his arrival in the district, as may appear to be advisable.

7. Mohummud Koolee Khan, Aumil of Akberpoor, will accompany or precede, and ultimately reside with the detachment, for the purpose of ensuring its supplies and conveying every necessary information; and it will be the duty of the commanding officer of the detachment to support the authority of the Aumil, and to enforce his demands against the Zemindars, after ascertaining the justice of those demands, in every practicable instance, without hazarding the safety of his detachment, or incurring the risk of a failure, by attacking a fortress or place of strength, to the capture of which his force may be inadequate, from the want of a battering train.

8. There is, at present, every reason to expect that the appearance of so respectable a force as that which I have here suggested, with the vicinity of the Vizier's encampment, and a consideration of the terms of the purwannahs with which the commanding officer of the detachment will be charged, aided by firm, and at the same time conciliatory conduct on his part, will induce the refractory Zemindars to return to a due sense of their allegiance, and to obey the mandate of their sovereign for their immediate attendance on his Excellency's Aumil in the district: in which case the object of the prescribed service will be very speedily accomplished, and the detachment will be ordered to return; but otherwise it must remain encamped or cantoned in the district, till effectual measures shall be adopted for the reduction of all the fortresses and punishment of the rebellious Zemindars.
and

9. In the probable case of the flight of the refractory Zemindars, and the evacuation of some of their fortresses, the Aumil of the district has been enjoined by his Excellency the Vizier to take immediate measures for the demolition of all such fortresses or ghurries as may thus come into his possession; and it will be the particular province of the commanding officer of the British detachment to see that this order be strictly obeyed.

Sir:

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, enclosing a copy of your instructions to the officer commanding the troops at Sooltanpore, regarding the employment of a military force for the support of the authority of his Excellency the Vizier's government in the district of Akburpore, and to inform you that the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council entirely approves of the measures you have suggested to Major Fraser, and concurs with you in opinion regarding the inexpediency, at this late season of the year, of undertaking any military operations requiring the aid of a battering train.

2. His Lordship in Council trusts, that the force you have directed Major Fraser to employ, assisted by the detachment from his Excellency's troops, will be fully equal to accomplish the service pointed out in your instructions to that officer.

Sir:

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copy of my instructions, under date the 17th instant, addressed to Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, commanding the troops at Pertaubghur. Instructions of a similar nature have been issued to the commanding officer of the troops at Sooltanpore.

2. At the same time I deem it proper to transmit to you, for his Lordship in Council's consideration, the enclosed translations of letters which have passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, on the subject of the representations by his Aumils of the disorderly state of their districts, which I have every reason to consider as either false or greatly exaggerated, and for the ultimate investigation of which I should deem it to be highly expedient to depute a respectable Aumeen, as originally suggested by the instructions of Government, conveyed in your despatch of the 18th of April 1808, and proposed by me, on this occasion, for the adoption of his Excellency the Vizier.

3. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will be pleased to observe, in the Vizier's last letter to my address, a modification of the character and objects of the proposed deputation to Pertaubghur, which would render it entirely futile, and from which, therefore, I must deem it to be my duty to withhold my consent, till the result of this reference be made known to me.

4. If it be the wish of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that the whole of the fortresses in the Vizier's dominions be destroyed, with a view to the permanent tranquillity of the country and the easy realization of its revenue (without reference to the conduct of his Excellency's Aumils or Zemindars), there appears to be no necessity for an investigation of the causes of disorder in those districts; and I conceive that the employment of the disposable force which is already stationed at Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, with the aid of a battering train from Elahabad, would answer every purpose of the Vizier's present requisition, in the course of a few months of the ensuing cold season.

5. But if the expediency of the repeated destruction of forts in his Excellency's dominions, which past experience has proved to us that the neglect or venality of his Aumils may soon recall to existence, with perhaps additional strength, independently of the consideration of justice towards the landholders of this country, by whom those fortresses are erected for the purposes of self-defence against the rapine and extortion of the Aumils, be a question of hesitation or doubt, there seems strong ground to insist on the measure of deputing Aumeens on this occasion, in the hope of accomplishing every just object of the Vizier's Government, without engaging in extensive military operations, from the result of which no permanent benefit can be expected under the present system of his administration.

6. At the same time, it is but justice to his Excellency to state, that he has lately appeared to be fully as sensible as I am of the ruinous consequences of the system of farming his revenues in the manner hitherto practised, to persons totally unworthy of trust, and that a considerable portion of his dominions is now under the management of Aumeens, whose instructions have been prepared, at my suggestion, in terms very similar to those which are adopted in the Company's territories; that a proclamation against the construction or repair of fortresses, under a heavy penalty, and in terms suggested by me, has been circulated, to most, if not all, of the Aumils and principal landholders in the country; and that his Excellency has repeatedly recognized and acquiesced in a declaration, which I considered it to be my duty to make to him, that no future requisition for the reduction of a fortress already taken and destroyed, or made over to an Aumil by the exertions of a British force, should, under any circumstances, be complied with, save as a voluntary concession on the part of the British Government, not implied by even the spirit of its engagements.

7. On the other hand, it is proper to remark, that the precarious expectation of any permanent salutary effects from the measures which have been thus recently adopted at my suggestion, does by no means appear to myself to warrant an immediate decision in favour of the Vizier's requisition for the reduction of all the forts in his dominions, or even in the district of Pertaubghur, without an investigation into the state of the country, in the manner which I have proposed; and after receiving the reports of Colonel Palmer, and of the officer commanding at Sooltanpore, it will remain for the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to decide whether or not the measure of deputing an Aumeen to those districts, for the purposes which I have described, shall be urged to his Excellency the Vizier.

from his Excellency's Aumil of Pertaubghur of the refractory conduct of two of the principal Zemindars of that district, on which his Excellency has founded a requisition for the aid of the British troops to support the authority of his Aumil, and reduce the fortresses of all the Zemindars in the district.

2. As the undertaking of military operations of any nature or extent, at the present season of the year, is highly inexpedient, and as it is desirable, on every occasion, to ascertain the truth and justice of the statements and demands of the Aumils of this Government before proceeding to support their authority by the aid of the British troops, I consider it to be my duty to request that you will use your best endeavours to investigate and ascertain the real grounds of complaint against the Zemindars who are described in these documents, as well as the general state and condition of the district of Pertaubghur, and the character and conduct of the principal Zemindars of that district, for the purpose of enabling me to decide on the expediency of employing a detachment of the British troops in support of the Aumil's authority after the close of the periodical rains.

3. With the view of assisting you in the progress of this investigation, instructions have been issued to the Aumils of Pertaubghur and Behar, in the terms of the accompanying documents, which will probably occasion several requisitions from those Aumils for the aid of the troops under your command.

4. On every occasion of a requisition of this nature in future, as well as with a reference to the Zemindars of the districts of Khroen and Soojakhur, it appears to be proper, in the first instance, that you address a letter, or send a message by an intelligent non-commissioned officer of your corps, to the person complained against by the Aumil, calling on him to desist from his refractory conduct, to acknowledge the authority of the Government, and to discharge the arrears of revenue which may be due, and cautioning him against the consequences of his neglect of your admonition, which must inevitably produce his severe and exemplary punishment, in the case of a British force being employed against him at the requisition of his sovereign, the Vizier.

5. The immediate effect of the measure above suggested on your part, will, in all probability, be the personal attendance of the Zemindar to whom your letter or message is addressed, the attendance of an agent on his part, or his transmission of an arzee in reply, to represent the oppression of the Aumil, to assert the payment of the revenue, or to offer excuses for the delay; and in all those cases you will be pleased to receive the verbal or written representations of the Zemindars, and transmit them for my information, with the result of any further inquiry which you may be enabled to make into the real circumstances of the case by a reference to the Aumil or his agent, or through the channel of your own confidential messengers, to the Zemindars and peasantry of the villages adjacent to the scene of complaint.

6. You will also use your best endeavours, in the case of expected resistance on the part of any Zemindar, to ascertain the strength of his fortress, the number of armed men in his employment, and the probability of his deriving support or assistance from any of the neighbouring Zemindars, reporting from time to time the progress and result of your inquiries, but declining or delaying, on the ground of the present unfavourable season, to comply with any requisitions from the Aumils for the employment of a military force, save in cases of obvious emergency, and under circumstances which afford a certain prospect of the immediate success of the detachment which you may deem it to be proper to employ.

Lucknow.

I have already issued instructions, in general terms, to Major Fraser, for the support of the Aumil's authority, by a compliance with every requisition for the punishment of Zemindars, of whose guilt or disobedience he shall have reason to be satisfied, if the state of the weather and extent of the disposable force at the station admit of the speedy execution of the service required, and I have every reason to expect that those instructions will be attended with the desired effect of preserving the tranquillity of the district, provided the Aumil convey correct information on all occasions of commotion to the commanding officer of the troops; and, therefore, if your Excellency approve of those instructions, I suggest that corresponding orders on the subject of them be issued to the Aumil without delay.

Letter from Major Fraser.

Extract from a Letter from Major Fraser, commanding the Troops at Sooltanpore, to Captain J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow, under date the 28th June 1810.

In respect to the paper of intelligence from Sooltanpore, which was inserted in your official despatch of the 21st instant, and which I had no opportunity of replying to fully in my last, I have only to state that every transaction under the head of revenue, or other public concerns between the Aumils and Zemindars, is to me totally unknown, having never had the least communication with his Excellency's Aumils, Canoongoes, or Chowdries, since my arrival at this station. The Aumil of Sooltanpore, Fuzul Alee Khan, pitched his tents and encamped his troops directly opposite to my quarters, on the north bank of the river Goomdty, for ten days, and never once acquainted me, either by note or by message, of any thing that occurred. Had there been occasion for it, I could have very easily then offered him what assistance he required.

The conduct of all the Zemindars and Talookadars in the vicinity of this station is become very troublesome and highly irregular, and I beg leave to suggest my being vested with authority to seize and send them to the Presence, for the requisite punishment, without which it is most likely they will become still more troublesome. It is reported to me that they actually make game of his Excellency's Aumils, Peons, or people sent to them with messages or requisitions.

I beg leave to send a few complaints against some refractory fellows within a short distance of cantonments: they have occurred within this month and are attested by his Excellency's agent.

Letter from the

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 6th July 1810.)

I have received your letter of the 1st instant, covering translations of a letter from Major Fraser, and of its several enclosures.

The mode which you have recommended for the punishment of the Zemindars in Sultanpore has my entire approbation; and agreeably to your suggestion, I have ordered the Aumil of Sooltanpore to wait on the commanding officer of the station, inform him of the state of the district, and request his aid in bringing the Zemindars to obedience; or in the case of his not being able, from the urgency of other business, to attend the commanding officer himself, to send a confidential person, or a letter under his own seal, and to state all the circumstances respecting the Zemindars which may come to the Aumil's knowledge.

to

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have further directed him to supply every necessary article for the consumption of the troops which may be required by the agent of supplies; and, in the case of the Zemindar's refusing to supply grain or forage for the cattle, to furnish them with his own force if it be adequate, or otherwise to apply to the commanding officer for his assistance. The Aumil is instructed to report to me the result of his conferences with the commanding officer, but not to wait my orders for communicating with that officer on every emergency which may arise.

Orders have also been issued to the Aumils of Behar and Pertaubghur to procure every possible intelligence respecting the movements of Zalim Sing, and to report it, in the first instance, to the commanding officer of the station, and then transmit the intelligence to the Presence; but on no account to delay informing the commanding officer of any occurrence which may require the aid of the British troops, with the view of precluding depredations or suppressing refractory Zemindars.

I transmit for your information a copy of the orders which have been issued.

Translation of orders issued by His Excellency the Vizier to Jemaloo-deen, Aumil of Behar.

Enclosure.

If it be required to punish any of the Zemindars in your district, or if the fugitive Talookadar of Buddree at any time return to Behar, you are directed immediately to wait on the commanding officer of the station, and inform him of all the circumstances of the case, of the force of any Zemindar who may be turbulent, and the strength of any fort or ghurry which it may be necessary to reduce; and in the case of your being unable, from the exigency of other business, to attend the commanding officer yourself, you will send a confidential servant, or a letter under your seal, to his address, for the purpose of explaining all the circumstances which may come to your knowledge, that the commanding officer may be enabled to adopt the necessary measures for reducing the Zemindars to submission with the least practicable delay.

You are further directed to report to the Presence the result of all your conferences with the commanding officer, but not to wait the orders of the Huzzoor for communicating with that officer on any emergency which may occur.

A true translation :

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 7th July 1810.)

Your verbal communication has been delivered to me to the following purport: "that from the conduct of Mohummud Kolee Beg and the three other Aumeens, you could not place any confidence in their statements, and that you were apprehensive that after the close of the periodical rains, when a requisition might be made for the assistance of the British troops, some delay would occur on your part in affording the aid required, in consequence of your being unacquainted with the real state of those districts, and that this delay might be displeasing to me,"

Letter
from the Vizier.

From the increasing friendship between us, I have invariably hitherto adopted all your suggestions with a reference to those mehauls, and am disposed to do so in future, being fully convinced that, by your assistance and advice, those districts will be restored to perfect order, and that nothing will ever occur on your part to cause me the smallest displeasure.

Agreeably to your original request, my orders have been issued to the Aumils to collect and transmit all the information in their power; and I have

Bengal Political
Consultations,

hitherto sent, and shall always send to you in future, copies of all akhbars and arzees which I receive.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I now transmit, for your information, a variety of documents which will convey to you all the particulars.

With a reference to your original suggestion regarding the capture and destruction of forts, I entirely concur with you in this opinion, and I trust that it will soon be carried into effect, and that tranquillity and good order will thereby be restored to every district in my dominions.

If you have no reliance on Mohummed Kolee Beg and the other three Aumeens, it seems proper that some respectable person be appointed by me with suitable assistants, and that another person with the requisite assistants be also deputed by you, to ascertain the condition and strength of the several fortresses, the number of armed men with the Zemindars, their several strong holds, and the jungles and other places difficult of access in their possession. The whole expense attending this deputation shall cheerfully be discharged by me; and thus every necessary information being obtained during the present season, the fortresses can easily be destroyed after the breaking up of the rains.

With regard to your ultimate apprehension of the flight, and future depredations of the refractory Zemindars and their abettors, as their reliance on the strength of their forts alone has hitherto puffed them up with vain ideas of resistance, when all their forts shall be destroyed, their ideal greatness will vanish, and the terror of the British arms will induce them to return to their allegiance.

In consequence of the friendship and amity subsisting between us, the punishment of all the rebels in my dominions must rest entirely on you, and to you only can I apply for the adoption of the necessary measures. Who is there, indeed, besides yourself, that can perform this service to my satisfaction, or to whom can I issue my requisitions, save to you? Consider, therefore, before setting out, what can be done now towards the accomplishment of the object, and hereafter, if necessary, let us, according to former agreement, proceed to the spot, and there determine on future measures.

Letter
from Resident at

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written 18th July 1810.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's two letters, dated the 7th and 16th instant.

The settlement of the districts of Pertaubghur, Dalmow, &c., has always been considered by me as an object of the highest importance; but as the adoption of any measures for this purpose was impracticable, with the degree of information which I had hitherto been enabled to obtain, and it had been agreed on between your Excellency and me that orders should be issued to the Tehsildars of the several meahals in question, directing them to ascertain and report the amount of the collections of the Aumils who have lately been removed, and to realize such balances as the Zemindars might confess to be outstanding, procuring and transmitting at the same time the most accurate information regarding the force of the refractory Zemindars; and as the attainment of this information, though in by no means a satisfactory manner, appeared for a time to be in train, from the tenor of the various documents which your Excellency was in the habit of sending to me during the last month, I had determined to wait the receipt of all the expected documents, and after a mature consideration of the whole, to offer such suggestions to your Excellency for the settlement of the districts in question as circumstances might appear to require.

During

During the last ten or twelve days the transmission of intelligence from those mehauls has been entirely discontinued by your Excellency; and considering my information to be imperfect, I refrained from submitting my opinion till the receipt of your last letter to my address, when I again looked over the papers, and have collected from them the following points :—

Bengal Political
Consultations,
16 Aug. 1808.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

By the report of the Aumil of Pertaubghur, it appears that there are only three or four Zemindars in that district whom the Aumil considers as refractory. Of those, one, for whom Mohun Loll Oopadheea is security, would appear to be in confinement with the Aumil, another to be of so little consideration that the Tehsildar himself avows the power of punishing him, and only awaits your Excellency's orders to do so. A third is in attendance on the Tehsildar, and is reported to be refractory merely because he claims the deduction of nankar, and credit for his former payments to the displaced Aumil, with some remissions on account of drought, &c., all which seem to be just and reasonable in the extreme.

In the elaka of Sooltanpore, in like manner, there are but a few Zemindars reported to be refractory, and of those the arrears of revenue do not amount to any considerable sum; but their failure to attend the Aumil is certainly a proof of disobedience, if it be true, as reported by that officer. On the whole, however, it is evident that the information which I have hitherto obtained does not suggest the necessity of adopting any extraordinary measures, with a view to the settlement of those districts, nor enable your Excellency or me to decide on what is proper to be done; and this obvious want of information has induced me, in pursuance of your Excellency's late suggestion, to look out for some respectable person in the charcter of an Aumeen upon my part, to accompany another whom your Excellency may be pleased to depute for the purpose of ascertaining the real condition of those districts, and conveying ample reports on them for your Excellency's information and for mine. In the mean time, I have deemed it to be proper, with a view to your Excellency's satisfaction, and in the spirit of your recent orders to the Aumils of Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore, to issue detailed instructions to the commanding officers of the British troops in those districts, for the guidance of their conduct in every case of a requisition for military aid to be made by your Excellency's Aumils during the season of the periodical rains, and from the tenor of those instructions I augur much important information regarding the real state of the country, which will greatly assist my judgment in deciding on what should hereafter be done. The substance of my instructions to Colonel Palmer and Major Fraser is as follows :—

That on every occasion of a requisition for the punishment of a defaulting Zemindar, they in the first instance address a letter, or send a message by an intelligent messenger to the person complained against by the Aumil, calling on him to desist from his refractory conduct, to acknowledge your Excellency's authority, and to discharge the arrears which may be due, and warning him of the inevitable ruin which he must incur by persisting in rebellious practices. That if the Zemindar who is thus accused by the Aumil state any plausible excuse for delay in discharging the revenue, or complain of the Aumil's oppression with apparently just ground, the Zemindar's statement be received and transmitted to me, with as full a detail as may be procurable of all the circumstances of the case. But if the guilt of the Zemindar shall be manifest, and his immediate reduction expedient and practicable, without the hazard of a failure or great inconvenience to the troops at the present unfavourable season, that measures be adopted for that purpose without delay, otherwise the service to be postponed till the close of the rainy season, and the intermediate time to be occupied in obtaining every information to ensure a speedy and successful issue of it after the breaking up of the periodical rains, when the troops must of course be employed.

I shall transmit the foregoing instructions, with translations of some of the documents which I have lately received from your Excellency, by the mail of this evening, and I confidently expect a favourable result from them, in the submission and return to obedience of most of the refractory Zemindars. But if any shall persist in their rebellion, and the employment of a larger force with a battering train shall ultimately appear to be indispensable, that force shall of course, be applied for; and agreeably to my original promise, I shall be ready to accompany your Excellency at a proper season to the spot, and to assist in the settlement of the country.

A true copy :

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

From his Excellency the Vizier, (Received the 21st July 1810.)

I have received your letter of the 18th, in reply to mine of the 7th and 16th instant. You have stated that the transmission of arzees, &c. continued for a time, and during the last ten or twelve days has been discontinued.

Whenever arzees or akhbars have been received, I have invariably sent them, after perusal, to you; and if I receive any hereafter, the same rule shall be observed.

With regard to your remark, that as the information hitherto obtained respecting those districts is obviously insufficient to enable you to decide on what is proper to be done, you are on the look out for some respectable person, in the character of an Aumeen, to accompany the person whom I may depute, &c. &c. I must again refer you to my letter of the 7th, in which I remarked that it seems proper that some respectable person, with suitable assistants, be appointed by me, and that another, on your part, with like assistants, be also deputed to ascertain the condition and strength of the several fortresses, &c. &c. My meaning in those words is no more than that a person be sent to ascertain the points which I have stated; not surely in the character of an Aumeen, which I by no means approve, because I have Aumeens already in those districts.

With regard to your other suggestions (recapitulate the contents), they appear to be perfectly proper, and have my entire approbation, as I only wish to recover the balances of my revenue, which are justly due, and to restore tranquillity in those districts, in such a manner as to prevent the Zemindars from being troublesome at any future period. From one observation, however, in your last letter, I may infer that the forts of those Zemindars who submit and return to obedience are not meant to be destroyed, and this is contrary to your original suggestion. But this discussion is of little importance at present, as after our arrival on the spot, we can determine on the measures to be adopted; and any suggestions which may then be offered by you I shall be sincerely disposed to acquiesce in.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 22d ultimo.
2. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council entirely approves the tenor of the instructions, of which you have transmitted a copy, to the officers commanding at Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore.
3. This measure, also, which you suggested to his Excellency the Vizier, of deputing an Aumeen to ascertain the real state of those districts, appears to his Lordship in Council to have been perfectly proper and judicious, and conformable to the general instructions of the 18th of April 1808, to which you have referred.
4. It is the wish of the Governor-General in Council, that on the receipt of the expected reports from the commanding officers at Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore, you

you should exercise your discretion with regard to the expediency of urging the adoption of the measure which you have suggested; his Lordship in Council, however, is by no means prepared, as the alternative of that measure, to acquiesce in the perverted object of it proposed by the Vizier.

Bengal Political Consultations, 16 Aug. 1810.

Letter from Secretary to Government.

5. The observations which you have stated on the question of destroying the forts in his Excellency's dominions, are considered by his Lordship in Council to possess much weight, and the only determination on that question which his Lordship in Council is at present disposed to form is, that they should be destroyed in cases in which the possessors have taken advantage of them to resist the just authority of the State, and compelled the employment of our troops to enforce their obedience. The orders which, with a view to provide against the restoration or renewal of fortresses once taken or destroyed, have been promulgated at your suggestion, and your declaration to the Vizier that the British Government would not be under any obligation to comply with a requisition for the aid of its troops in the reduction of a fort restored or renewed after being taken or destroyed, are entirely approved.

you the result of my enquiries, in order that such measures may be adopted as you may think proper to direct.

Letter from
Lieutenant Colonel
Palmer.

The intelligence I have received in great part corroborates the accounts given by Noneyt Roy of the refractory conduct of Deenah Sing, who not only withholds, under promises of speedy payment, the arrears of payment due from him, but is at this moment taking steps to possess himself of the rents which will be due from the crops now on the ground, with a view of providing ample means of resistance to the authority of the Vizier's officers. Frequent messages have been sent to him by me, and Sepoys are at this moment with him, to urge him to a prompt discharge of his arrears. I am now on the point of addressing a letter to him, insisting on immediate payment or security being given, and with an assurance that no further delay can be admitted, his answer to which must be considered as containing full proof of his intentions.

Here I beg to observe, that should it eventually become necessary to proceed against him to extremities, a train of battering cannon will be wanted for the reduction of his fort of Soojakhur, which is very strong, and the gateway too inaccessible to be attempted by assault, without exposing the party employed to the hazard of a most serious check, and the consequent loss of many lives.

Bhyroo Bukhsh, Zemindar of Khroen, being in similar circumstances, I have adopted towards him the same line of conduct; and as I understand his fort is by no means strong, I propose to detach against him two companies and a six-pounder, a force perfectly adequate to his reduction, as soon as his final answer shall be received, of which both from him and Deenah Sing I shall furnish you with immediate information.

Most of the Zemindars in this district evince an equal reluctance with these men to discharge their revenue, and I think an example being made of some of them would prove the most probable means of inducing all to a proper mode of behaviour in future. I embrace this opportunity of assuring you that I have not been able to learn any instance of undue exaction or oppressive conduct on the part of the Aumil.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 3d instant, apprizing me of repeated requisitions, on the part of the Aumil of Pertaubghur, for the employment of the troops under your command in aid of his collections of the revenue, and requesting my specific instructions on the subject of those requisitions.

2. The tenor of the fourth and concluding paragraphs of my letter of the 17th of July last to your address, seems to me to have a direct application to the subject of the present reference, which, however, was extremely proper on your part, and is advisable in every instance where there is the smallest occasion of doubt.

3. If you be satisfied of the justice of the demands of revenue which you have been called upon by the Aumil to enforce, and there be no impediment, in a military point of view, to your compliance with the Aumil's requisition, I am not aware of any objection to your detaching such portions of the troops under your command, as may appear to yourself to be sufficient for the accomplishment of the object in view, prohibiting such detachments, of course, from any attempt against a fortress or ghurry till they be provided with a battering train, and every requisite for a regular siege, in obedience to the orders of the Government.

4. As the concurring tenor of your recent reports, and of the Aumil's repeated representations, has served to remove every doubt in my mind of the expedience, and even the necessity of adopting measures of coercion against a few of the most powerful Zemindars in the districts of Pertaubghur and Bareilly, it is my intention to take an early opportunity of suggesting to the commander of the forces the propriety of his directing a battering train to be detached from Elahabad to your station; and I shall be glad to be favoured with a communication of your sentiments, in detail, regarding the commencement and progress of the military operations which you may deem to be indispensable for the reduction of the principal forts, and general restoration of tranquillity in the two districts in question.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I do myself the pleasure to enclose, for your information, three statements of such circumstances as I have been able to procure, respecting the Talookadars, Dewan Jubber Sing, Dooneah Sing, and Byroo Bukhsh ; and as I expect to be furnished with similar documents of others of the Zemindars in the course of a short period, I will also forward them to you, and shall be glad to know if this is the nature of the information you require, and whether it affords you the requisite knowledge of the probable state of the district. I find great difficulty in obtaining any accurate description of the characters and inclinations of the Talookadars and Zemindars, for although the people of the country complain of their oppressions, &c., still they shew extreme aversion to giving any intelligence respecting them to strangers.

I am just informed that two persons have arrived from Jubber Sing, in consequence of the message I sent to him, and that they will wait upon me in the morning. I shall exact from them statements of the cause of his Excellency's revenues being withheld, and at the same time demand the immediate payments of all balances. Byroo Bukhsh is, I learn, desirous of coming in to me, and I have sent to encourage him to this measure, and expect to see him in a day or two.

Statement respecting Dewan Jubber Sing, Talookadar of Puttee.

This person seldom comes to his house, but remains generally in the adjacent jungle, where he is attended constantly by five hundred men. They remain there, and make no disturbance ; but when the rent is required of him, he brings together about two thousand men, and endeavours to drive off the Tehsildar and his party. When he does not succeed in repelling the force of the Tehsildar, he exerts himself to the utmost in destroying the country, not regarding even his own talooka : he afterwards disperses most of his men, and retires himself to the house of his father-in-law, at Singramow, in the Honourable Company's territories, and thus eludes every attempt to apprehend him. The amount of his rent annually is 90,000 rupees. He has a strong fort called Singh-ghur, about five coss to the eastward of these cantonments.

Pertaubghur,

(Signed) S. PALMER,

Enclosure.

Statement respecting Dooneah Sing, Talookadar of Soojakhur.

This person is in confinement himself, but his family are in a fortress there, which is considered a place of importance and strength, through having a jungle on the north and east, said to be impassible by troops. On the south is a small river and an extensive jungle. This jungle may, with much exertion, be passed by infantry.

The west side of the fort faces an open country, but this face is much stronger than those protected by the jungle, &c. being furnished with bastions and wall-pieces. There are no cannon in the fort. It is surrounded by a trench of eight or ten cubits deep and nearly of the same breadth. The walls are ten cubits high and proportionably thick.

The eldest son of Dooneah Sing and his Dewan, with two hundred followers, live constantly in the fort, and can at half a day's notice increase them to eight hundred from the villages of Antoo, Omree, Mehometpore, and Gouradand. From the evasive disposition of Dooneah's son, there is no reason to expect that the arrears due by his father to the Sirkar will be forthcoming, while there is no force at hand to compel him. This family has never paid their rent, while any probability remained of being able to withhold it.

Statement respecting Byroo Bukhsh, Talookadar of Khroen.

This person has lately built a ghurry at the village of Tarrowree, which are both surrounded by an immense jungle, through which the road or footpaths are extremely narrow and rugged. The trench which surrounds the ghurry is from six to eight cubits deep and as much in breadth: the walls are nine cubits high, of mud.

Byroo Bukhsh and two hundred of his adherents remain constantly in the ghurry, and seem to keep it in a good state for defence. He can, in cases of emergency, call in Zalem Sing and Davy Sing to his assistance, from Banny-mow, with two hundred men. He has constantly avoided paying any money to the Sircar since the death of his father, who was killed about three years ago. He does not, however, give any interruption to those who fulfil their agreement to the Sircar.

Statement respecting Hurchund Sing, Rajah of Ramnaghur, Purgunnah Amethce.

Enclosure.

The fortress of Ramnaghur is the usual place of residence of the Rajah and his family, and is represented to be of very considerable strength, being provided with cannon and a garrison of five hundred men, which can in the course of one day be reinforced by four thousand men. The trench, which is seldom dry, is nine cubits deep and twelve wide; the walls are of mud, ten cubits in height and twelve thick. The only regular gate is on the east face: there is a small wicket on the west. The fort is situated in an extensive jungle passable on the east side only, and in which are twenty ghurries, occupied by the tenants and dependants of the Rajah. The gate, which is flanked by cannon, faces the most accessible part of the jungle.

The Rajah seems to manage his finances but indifferently, and his profusion, together with the confidence he places in the strength of his fort, are thought to be the chief causes of the arrears due to the Sircar. He bears, nevertheless, the character of being a peaceable, well disposed person.

ten cubits, and the breadth twelve cubits; gate on the east face. A garrison of a hundred men are constantly kept in the ghurry, and it is thought the Rajah procures the assistance of seven hundred men from his own villages if his circumstances require them.

He has hitherto paid his rent with punctuality, and attends whenever he is required by the servants of the Nabob.

Statement respecting Byresall, Rajah of Purgunnah Rampore.

The Rajah is in possession of Rampore ghurry, which is said to be the most considerable of any fortification of that class in the district.

Depth of the trench seven cubits, breadth seven cubits: the walls are ten cubits high and seven in thickness. The ghurry is well supplied with cannon, swivels, and other fire arms, and garrisoned constantly by five hundred men.

Byresall pays his rent punctually, and has lately been admitted to the presence of the nabob. He seems to be a very popular person, and would, were his affairs to require it, call together most of the men of his purgunnah, perhaps two or three thousand.

Description of the Ghurry of Amree, in the Purgunnah of Pertaubghur, in the possession of Babboo Loll Sah.

Depth of the trench seven cubits, breadth eight cubits; walls ten cubits high and ten broad. The gate is on the north face, with a constant garrison of one hundred and fifty men, and can bring in four hundred more whenever his affairs may require it.

The garrison is surrounded by a jungle, which extends three coss on the north, south, and east sides, and seven coss on the west, which is very difficult of access. Babboo Loll Sah is refractory, and pays no more to the Sircar than he himself thinks proper. Neither arguments nor threats are likely to induce him to discharge his arrears.

The ghurry is in the possession of Babboo Ooday Sing. Depth of the ditch seven cubits, breadth eight cubits; walls ten cubits high and ten cubits in breadth. Has only one gate, which is on the north face. The adherents of this person, who remain constantly in the ghurry, amount to about one hundred and fifty men, and it is thought he can, when his affairs require it, bring in from three to four hundred more.

Babboo Loll Sah is refractory, and never fulfils his agreement with the Sircar, nor will he attend the Nabob's civil officers when required.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter of the 30th ultimo, conveying, for my information, the translation of a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, and suggesting that an intelligent person be sent to Pertaubghur, to superintend the supply of necessaries for the use of the detachment; as also that a list of the fortresses, in the manner mentioned by Colonel Palmer, be furnished without delay, and desiring a communication of my sentiments on another important question suggested by that officer.

With respect to the early transmission of a list of the several fortresses and ghurries to be reduced, with a statement of the arrears of revenue which are due by the different Zemindars, orders have already been issued to the several Aumils on this subject, and those orders shall now be repeated to them in urgent terms. Orders have also been sent to Nowneith Roy to report in detail the state of the district under his charge to Colonel Palmer, and to exert himself to the utmost of his power in supplying every necessary for the detachment after its march.

In answer to Colonel Palmer's inquiry regarding Zemindars who may, in consequence of the appearance and approach of the large force, deliver themselves up and enter into engagements to liquidate their arrears of revenue, namely, whether the fortresses, or fortified houses of those Zemindars, shall remain unmolested, or be destroyed like those of the other rebellious Zemindars, I desire that you will inform Colonel Palmer, that such Zemindars as may, without opposing resistance, return to their allegiance and obedience, should be assured of the security of their persons and property, and directed to attend on the Aumil, for the purpose of paying their arrears of the present and former years, in which case their villages and houses shall, of course, remain in their possession; but fortresses of every description which may be

To Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, commanding the Troops at Pertaubghur.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my letter of the 26th ultimo, I have now the honour of transmitting to you the enclosed copy and translation of an arzee addressed to the Vizier by his Excellency's Aumil of Sooltanpore, containing a detailed and descriptive statement of the fortresses in that district and its dependencies, which it is his Excellency's wish to have reduced during the ensuing cold season, after the conclusion of the operations in Pertaubghur.

2. The enclosed arzee and statement you will perceive to be totally silent on the highly important question of the balances due by the Zemindars, who are, merely in general terms, pronounced by the Aumil to be refractory, and in arrears of revenue to the State.

3. It will, therefore, be your province to ascertain the truth or inaccuracy of the Aumil's assertion on this subject, before you proceed to extremities against the several Zemindars whom he has accused; and, with this view, I suggest the propriety of your requiring from the commanding officer of Sooltanpore such information as that officer may be enabled to collect on the general subject of this despatch, and of my corresponding instructions to yourself and to Major Fraser, under date the 17th July last.

The Arzee of Fuzul Alee Khan, dated the 1st October 1810.

On the 27th ultimo I had the honour to receive your Excellency's shookha, dated the 22d, directing me to transmit to the Presence a detailed account of the jumma for the fusly years 1215, 1216, and 1217, and the amount of sums realized from the whole of the mehaults under my charge, as also a descriptive statement of fortresses and strong holds in the possession of the refractory Zemindars in my Elaka. In reply, I have the honour to represent to your Excellency that the wasil bankee account for the years 1215 and 1216, and the wasil bankee account of the Uml Amanee for the year 1217, and a statement of the several mehaults which are in a state of tranquillity and disorder, are preparing, and shall be transmitted to the Presence with the least practicable delay. The circumstances respecting the dowl for the year 1218, are as follow: The Zemindars of this Elaka being refractory, consider the exposure of their collections, or inspection of their documents by your Excellency's officers, as detracting from their privileges and rights, and oppose it by every means in their power; in consequence of which little can be done for the profit of Government, particularly at this season, when it is advisable to promote, instead of impeding, the cultivation of the rubbee crops, and to adopt measures for the realization of last year's balances, and for the collections of the khureef harvest. The necessary steps for these purposes, as well as the preservation of the present rubbee crops have been already carried into effect; and in the month of Aghun, when your Excellency's forces will be assembled, and all the refractory Zemindars will be punished in an exemplary manner, a detailed plan of the settlement may easily be prepared and transmitted, without neglecting any other object of importance. In the meantime I transmit, for your Excellency's information, a list of all the fortresses in the district, whether strong, or which can easily be reduced.

of the Amil.

Baboo Ishury Bukhsh, Talookadar of Goodwar, has in his employ seven or eight hundred matchlockmen, and when the troops of the Government proceed against his fortress, the dependants of Zalim Sing, Talookadar of Dostpore Akburpore, and the followers of Roostum Sing, Talookadar of Bhudian, and the people of Khara Jundour and Manick Muwaree, collect in a body, to the amount of nearly two thousand men, and come to his assistance. The fortresses of Goodwar Khass and Hingown, in the elaka of Hydergunge, are very strong and difficult of access.—The former has to the westward, a jungle, the river Goomtee, a small door, and a very deep ditch; on the northward it has the gateway, as also a babool jungle and tank; to the eastward is an open plain and garden. To the southward it is bounded by a jungle and nulla. A deep ditch surrounds this fortress: the walls are nine cubits high and full of loop-holes. The other fortress, Hingown, is very strong: a deep ditch surrounds it, and there is also a bamboo jungle all round it.

The following eleven fortresses are not strong, and can be easily reduced:

In Sarungpore, three fortresses, viz., Swery, Rajoopoor, Akdullah-Omur-behar.

In Hydergunge, four fortresses, viz., Kaloopore, Khursoomah, Burlia Meerere, Meemoodhur.

One fortress in Nugna, elaka Salheepore.

One ditto in Mouza D'hoondoo, zillah Puleeah.

One ditto in Mouza Bhoosa, zillah Bahore.

One ditto in Deokureeah, elaka Hydergunge.

Roshun Zemaun, the Talookadar of Muniarpore, has continually with him five or six hundred matchlockmen, and when your Excellency's troops proceed against his ghurry, which is in Hyatnuggur, the whole of the people of the elaka collect together, in number about two thousand, and afford him their assistance. He has two strong fortresses, viz., Hyatnuggur and Soobarah. To the eastward of the fortress of Hyatnuggur there are three or four deep rivulets and a jungle. To the southward is the river Goomtee, a babool jungle, nulla, and a small door; to the west there are innumerable nullas and jungles. The gateway faces the north. There is a deep ditch, and a wall twelve cubits high, with loop-holes, all round the fortress.

The seven following ghurries also belong to this Talookadar, and can easily be reduced.

In Sarungpore, four ghurries, viz., Dewkullee, Dhuslawun, Barairam, and Rukownah.

In Hydergurh, three ghurries, viz., Kurrownde Mahmoodpore, Jemowlee, and Buchuneeah.

Roostum Singh, Talookadar of Bhudyan, has in constant employ two hundred men. When the troops of your Excellency proceed against him, Zalim Sing, Talookadar of Dwarka in the elaka of Akberpore, and the people of Goodwar and Rampore Koothra, also Roshun Zemaun, Talookadar of Muniarpore, come to his assistance. The other ghurries in his possession are easy of reduction. The following is a description of Bhudyan Khass. To the eastward it has a bazar, nulla, and jungle; the gateway of the fortress faces the east. On the north is a nulla and jungle, and on the west an extensive jungle with a small door in the wall of the fortress on this side. This ghurry is surrounded by a deep ditch; the walls of it are perforated with loop-holes, and are about seven cubits high. This is a very strong fortress.

Omrao Sing, the Zemindar of Khiradee in the Elaka of Sarungpore is constantly attended by two hundred men. The Zemindars of Sarungpore having joined together, have made this person's fortress a rendezvous. The following is a description of Omrao Sing's fortress. Athin bamboo jungle surrounds it, so as it can be seen beyond the jungle. There is a door to the north, and a smaller opening to the west. The ditch is eleven cubits deep, and the wall on three sides in very good order, but on the fourth side there is no parapet. On the west is a village occupied by tanners, and a garden also is on this side. The east is fit for the construction of a battery. The water in the ditch on the gate side is about four cubits, and much shallower on the other three sides. There are six high bastions on the walls of the fortress.

Nidhan Sing, the Talookadar of Bheerownsa, has with him constantly about three hundred matchlockmen. On the approach of your Excellency's troops, about one thousand men are collected by him from Deira, in the Elaka of Akberpoor, and from Sungram Sing, the Talookadar of Sheoghur. There are a great many tanks and jungles on the east and west sides of it. On the north is a door leading into the jungle, and on the south the river Goomtee runs under the walls of the fortress.

Bheekum Singh, Talookadar of Rampore Kootra, in the elaka of Chanda, has about four hundred men constantly about him. On the approach of your Excellency's troops, Roostum Singh of Bhudyan, Roshun Zeman of Munearpore, Ishurry Bukhsh of Goodwar, and Zalim Sing of Akberpoor, come to his assistance. This ghurry has a jungle to the eastward and southward. There is a bazar and the gateway of the ghurry to the north; to the west a tank and parapet wall all round, and a ditch twelve cubits deep.

I have perused the translation of Colonel Palmer's letter, dated the 10th August, which you sent for my information; and as it is proved by the Colonel's statement, that Dewan Zubber Singh, Talookadar of Puttee, Dooneah Singh, Talookadar of Soojakhur, and Byroon Bukhsh, the Talookdar of Khroen, possess strong fortresses, and are in a state of rebellion against the Government, it is necessary that they be punished without delay, and that their fortresses be levelled to the ground.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter on the subject of a despatch from Colonel Palmer, which I recently transmitted for your information; and I have now the honour of submitting to you a translation of another despatch, which I have more recently received from Colonel Palmer, and from which it appears that some of the other Zemindars in the district of Pertaubghur are dilatory in attending the Aumil and in settling their balances of revenue.

But as it also appears to be probable, from the contents of both those despatches, that the Zemindars who are mentioned by Colonel Palmer, on receiving the Colonel's admonition, may return to their duty and allegiance, and may liquidate the Aumil's demands, it does not, under these circumstances, combined with a consideration of the present unfavourable season, appear to me to be necessary or proper to issue any instructions to Colonel Palmer for the immediate punishment of those Zemindars. At the proper season of the year the necessary measures shall be adopted.

The Arzee of Fuzul Alea. (Dated the 13th September 1810.)

I have been honoured by the receipt of your Excellency's shookha, directing me to admonish Singram Sing, the Zemindar of Sheogurh.

The orderly Sepoys of the Honourable Company, who were sent to Singram Sing of Sheogurh, and to Omree Sing and the other Zemindars of Sarungpore, for the purpose of causing them to attend the cutchery and preventing their molestation of the cultivators of Delawurpore, in the Elaka of Meranpore and its dependencies, have returned with an unsatisfactory and highly improper answer from Singram Sing, in consequence of which it is intended to send a small detachment to that place, with the view of compelling Singram Sing to abide by the decision of a punchayet.

A balance of eight hundred rupees for last year remains due from Delawurpore, and a similar loss in the present year will be sustained in consequence of the obstinacy of the Zemindars of that Elaka.

The Zemindars of Sarungpore on the night of the 12th instant made an attack on the village of Serboma, in the Elaka of Purtheepore, and took from thence several heads of cattle besides other articles. They have repeatedly committed similar acts of depredation, and the exemplary punishment of one or two of those Zemindars appears to be absolutely necessary to the good order of the district: I therefore hope that your Excellency will be pleased to issue the necessary orders to the commanding officer at Sooltanpore, to detach a company of Sepoys for the punishment of those offenders.

Bekhun Sah, also, the Zemindar of Runpore, in the Elaka of Chunda, and some other Zemindars in that neighbourhood, are preparing to collect from the ryots the amount of the crops of the present year, and will certainly defraud

I have received your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date, conveying, for my information, a copy of an arzee from Fuzul Alee, the Aumil of Sooltanpore, a translation of which shall this day be transmitted to the commanding officer at Sooltanpore, with instructions to that officer to comply with the requisition of the Aumil for the punishment of the refractory Zemindars, if it be practicable without the aid of a battering train, within the period of ten or twelve days from the date of this letter. But as the arrival of the battering train may be expected in the neighbourhood of Pertaubghur in the course of the period described, and as it will, in that case be necessary that the troops at Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur form a junction to proceed against the fortresses, it appears, on this account, to be highly inexpedient that detachments from Sooltanpore be employed on any service for the present, which can occupy them beyond the period of ten or twelve days.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter, dated the 18th instant, directing me to suggest, &c. (recapitulate the contents).

If your Excellency's object, with a reference to the districts in question, be merely the punishment of the refractory Zemindars and the reduction of their forts, there seems no necessity whatever for your personal presence in the districts, or for your deputation of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan.

The commanding officers of the British troops, who are now acquainted with every circumstance regarding the Zemindars and their forts, are fully competent to that duty.

Again, if it be your Excellency's intention, in the future arrangements for those districts, to revert to the original system of consigning them to farmers, or, in the case of your retaining them amanee, to entrust the assessment of the lands to the Tehsildars who are now in employment, in both the cases which I have supposed, your personal progress through the districts will expose your august person to the fatigues and inconvenience of a journey without any advantage whatever.

But, on the other hand, if your Excellency propose to make a settlement of this portion of your dominions in the manner which is adopted in the Honourable Company's territories, your presence is certainly advisable, and may prove beneficial beneficial in the highest degree, provided there be no unnecessary and baneful procrastination, like what was experienced during our last excursion, and formed the subject of remonstrance on my part; for, in this case, it is evident that the whole of the cold season will be unprofitably occupied in concluding the settlement of a single zillah, and even that in a most imperfect manner.

Regarding Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, I have often observed to your Excellency that he is apparently an active and zealous servant of your Government, and has hitherto regularly paid the revenues of the several districts which he farms; but having already the management of a considerable portion of your dominions, if another portion of equal extent be now consigned to his charge, I am apprehensive that the trust will greatly exceed his capacity, and that both districts may in consequence fall into disorder.

There are, however, a number of important questions, having reference to this subject, which seem to require a personal discussion; and, with this view, I propose waiting on your Excellency on Saturday the 22d instant.

It appears, by a letter from Colonel Palmer, commanding the troops at Pertaubghur, a translation of which, with a copy of the Aumil, Nowneit Raee's, letter to that officer, is enclosed for your Excellency's information, that the necessary supplies for the British troops cannot be provided by Nowneit Raee, and although, in the particular instance of the supply of hackeries, as the order was issued to Jumal-ood Deen, Nowneit Raee must be considered as blameless, yet as it appears by Nowneit Raee's letter to Colonel Palmer, that hackeries are very scarce, it seems probable that Jumal-ood Deen also will fail in collecting a sufficient number, and that the public service will be delayed.

From a consideration of all the circumstances which are stated by Colonel Palmer, and in conformity with the result of our conference yesterday, I now suggest to your Excellency the propriety of deputing Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, as early as possible, to those districts, for the purpose of collecting the necessary supplies for the troops, in the first instance, and for other important purposes, that so the commencement of operations may not be any longer delayed.

The Hukeem, and also the Aumeens, should further be particularly enjoined to prepare and forward to the Presence, as soon as possible, a list of all the forts in the three zillahs, specifying what Zemindars are refractory, and other particulars regarding them, in order that your Excellency and I may be enabled to determine the extent of the military services required, and to furnish the commanding officer with a list of the fortresses to be taken, before the march of the troops from cantonments.

Herein I forward, for your information, a copy of a letter addressed to me yesterday by Nowneit Raee, Aumil of Pertaubghur, from which it appears that the orders which his Excellency the Vizier is stated, in your letter to the Commander of the Forces, to have forwarded to him, to furnish the one hundred dred and five hackeries required for the conveyance of the stores from Ghootnie ghaut to this station, have not yet reached him.

Palmer.

Notwithstanding the Aumil assures me that he will exert himself to provide the hackeries, not a single one has yet been obtained from him ; and I regret to be obliged to add, that except these assurances, his conduct evinces no desire to render me the assistance which is required of him. I think it, therefore, necessary to request, that you will be so good as to procure the necessary instructions from the Vizier being immediately furnished.

I am given to understand there are few hackeries to be obtained in this district, and have therefore written to head-quarters, demanding the permission of the Commander of the Forces to make application to the magistrate or agent of the Commissariat, should it eventually become necessary to do so, to complete the number required ; but from the dilatory and reluctant proceedings of the Aumil, I am apprehensive of considerable delay, before the detachment under my orders is able to take the field.

I have received your letter, dated the 23d September, with a translation of a letter from Colonel Palmer, requesting that Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan may be deputed from the Presence to collect supplies for the British troops, &c. &c. (recapitulate the contents).

With respect to what Colonel Palmer has written, that it appears from the Aumil's motions that he is unable to afford him the least assistance ; the facts are, as you have admitted, that no blame can be attached to the Aumil on account of the hackeries, &c. because, even before I had issued any orders on the subject, he seems to have exerted himself for the supply of hackeries, in compliance with the orders of Colonel Palmer ; and with respect to Jumal-ood Deen, who has received the orders, as he is making every possible exertion, he also is blameless.

Agreeably to your request, I had issued most positive orders, on the 22d of this month, to each of the three Aumeens of that zillah, to send a statement of the refractory Zemindars, and of those who pay the revenue, as also a list of the forts of every description and strength.

If you consider my departure towards Pertaubghur advisable, you will give me early notice of the proper period of marching, that I may prepare accordingly for the journey ; and with a reference to this and several other points, I await with anxiety your reply to the memorandum which I gave to you at our conference.

I do not think it necessary or proper to depute Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan merely for the purpose of collecting supplies for the troops.

Letter
from Resident at

With respect to the departure of your Excellency, I formerly stated that when a few of the strongest forts shall have been taken, and the Zemindars shall have returned to their allegiance, your Excellency's presence may be beneficial, but till then can be of little use, and on the contrary may be highly prejudicial, by suspending the military operations; because, from the moment when the troops take the field for the purpose of besieging the forts, the Aumils should be in constant attendance on the commanding officer, to furnish the necessary supplies and to assist in procuring intelligence, whereas immediately on your Excellency's arrival, those Aumils will of course be called away from the important duty described, in order to attend on the Presence.

In my opinion, under existing circumstances, a considerable period must elapse before even the military operations can commence, because the first and indispensable step is the arrival of the statement which Colonel Palmer has required, and which I have so often mentioned to your Excellency, which is not likely to be furnished for some time; besides which, the provision of supplies and assemblage of the troops and battering train at Pertaubghur, or some other central point, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, will necessarily occasion some delay.

Whenever I receive intelligence that the troops are assembled and prepared to commence their operations, instructions shall be sent to Colonel Palmer to commence the attack of the forts: and as I trust that very little delay will occur in the military operations, I shall then propose to your Excellency to commence your journey to Pertaubghur.

With regard to the memorandum which you gave to me, the last article which it contained superseded the necessity of any answer; because your Excellency having in that article expressed your resolution to be guided in every point by my advice, it only remained for me to assure you, as I do now, that I shall submit my sentiments on every branch of the subject, at the proper time and in the proper place, for your consideration.

Your Excellency appears to have totally misunderstood my sentiments with a reference to the deputation of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan. I certainly never proposed to depute Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to any place, or for any purpose which required your Excellency's presence; nor did I ever suggest that your Excellency should, in person, undertake the conclusion of an arrangement which could with propriety be committed to the Hukeem: on the contrary, I suggested to your Excellency that Hukeem Mehdi should be deputed, in the first instance, for the purpose of accompanying the British troops, as he had done with advantage in Nandparra, of furnishing the necessary supplies, of communicating intelligence respecting the Zemindars and their forts to the commanding officer, and of ascertaining the capacity of the lands, with a view to their just assessment, and to facilitate your Excellency's ultimate arrangements for the permanent settlement of the country. And as the Hukeem is an intelligent and active officer, I am still of opinion that he is competent to perform these duties, and that his deputation to the district will be of use.

I have the honour of transmitting to your Excellency a translation of a letter which I have just received from Colonel Palmer, from which you will be pleased to perceive that Nowneit Raee, the Aumil, has hitherto given no information on any subject worthy of notice, save the reduction of the forts of Soojakhur and Ghuroorn. Your Excellency must be well aware of the effects of this failure on the part of the Aumil to impede the military operations; and therefore I suggest for your serious consideration, the expedience of deputing Hukeem Mehdi immediately, to perform the several duties which I have already so often described, and to remain in attendance on Colonel Palmer, employed in the performance of those duties till your Excellency's arrival in the district, after which he may be permitted to return. With respect to what the Colonel has observed in the conclusion of his letter, regarding his operations after the fall of Soojakhur, it seems to me to be highly worthy of consideration, and I request your Excellency to consider the subject maturely and inform me of your sentiments regarding it. I take this opportunity of repeating my request, that your Excellency will be pleased to instruct the proper officers to furnish without delay a general list of all the forts in the district, and a detailed account of the balances due by the Zemindars, in the manner suggested by Colonel Palmer and by myself on former occasions, that so the Colonel may possess every necessary information before he commence his operations.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, referred to in the above.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

Your letter of the 23d instant has just reached me. From your making simple mention that the Vizier had issued orders to his Aumils to supply the hackeries, I concluded the Aumil of Pertaubghur to be meant, having, since my command, communicated with no other.

I hope the Aumil of Dalmow Barellie will quickly be able to procure the number required for the conveyance of the stores, and I have written to him to communicate with me on the subject, which he has not yet done.

The detachment under my command will, as soon as the battering train has arrived at this place, be able to proceed immediately against such forts and ghurries as may be pointed out to me.

I proceed now to notice the fourth paragraphs of your letters to me of the 7th and 23d instant, desiring me to communicate in detail, for your information, my sentiments regarding the commencement and progress of the military operations, which I may deem to be indispensable for the reduction of the principal forts, and general restoration of tranquillity in the two districts of Barellie and Pertaubghur.

My intelligence is so limited, that I am at a loss to afford you the satisfaction you require on the subject of the military operations, to the extent your letter alludes. With the exception of Soojakhur and Khroen, I am unacquainted with any other places that are to be reduced in this district; and the slightest information of any refractory people or strong forts and ghurries has never reached me by the channel of the Aumil. I proposed commencing my operations on the arrival of the battering train, by marching immediately against the former, which I have reason to believe will offer no resistance; and Khroen, I have already stated to you, cannot hold out against a force of two companies and a six-pounder, which I propose detaching against it, as soon as Nowneit Rae, the Aumil, intimates to me that no hope of effecting a settlement remains. At present, he says, he entertains an expectation that Bhyroo Bukhsh will obviate the necessity of attacking, by cancelling the demands against him.

After these places are disposed of, I shall advance to any others it may be deemed proper to reduce.—Together with the plans and situations of the forts and ghurries which you have required from his Excellency the Vizier, I beg to suggest to you the propriety and utility of my being furnished with an accurate statement of the amount to be demanded of each individual Zemindar stated to be refractory; and I beg you will have the goodness to specify in your instructions, whether I am to offer any molestation to those who may, on the appearance of the force under my orders, liquidate the balances due from them, or suffer suffer them to continue in peaceable possession of their forts, lands, and other effects.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter dated 30th September 1810, with a translation of a letter from Colonel Palmer, requesting that Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan be deputed for the purpose of providing supplies, &c., agreeably to the requisition of the commanding officer, and for other purposes described. At the time of reducing Roshun, Zemindar of Nandparra, when Hukeem Mehdi managed the business so well, several circumstances combined to favour the success of his exertions. First, he had a considerable force, and a number of people with him. Secondly, his own district is situated in the vicinity of Nandparra. Thirdly, many of the Zemindars of the districts in the vicinity of Nandparra were by his means attached to the interests of the Government, and acted in conformity with his orders. Lastly, Hukeem Mehdi, to his own loss, purchased articles at a high price, and sold them at a cheap rate to the people of the British camp; and Colonel MacGrath paid so much attention to Hukeem Mehdi, that the Hukeem reported to the Presence, that the friendship of the Colonel alone had enabled him to perform the service; therefore no good purpose can be answered by his going to this zillah. With a reference to your request, that a list of the forts, a descriptive account of the Zemindars, and a statement of the arrears of revenue which are due by them, may be sent to you without delay, the most peremptory orders on this subject have already been sent to the three Aumils of that zillah, and these orders shall now be repeated. Now-neit Raee has further been desired to afford Colonel Palmer every information in his power. In answer to Colonel Palmer's remarks with a reference to such Zemindars as, on the arrival of the British detachment shall, through fear, submit to the Sircar, and pay their arrears of revenue, there can, of course, be no object in molesting them nor destroying their habitations, nor in expelling them from their several estates.

You will be pleased to write to the Colonel to employ conciliatory measures with a reference to those Zemindars who shall peaceably submit to the Sircar and pay their balance of revenue, to induce them to remain in their lands, and to make them appear before the Aumil, who will settle the amount of their balances for the present and past years, in which case their villages and houses should, of course, remain in their possession; but fortresses of every description which may be capable of defence, or the possession of which might, in Colonel Palmer's opinion, induce or enable the Zemindars to resist the authority of the Government, on any future occasion, should certainly be levelled to the ground.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, under date the 1st October 1810, stating that, at the time of reducing Roshun, &c. (recapitulate the contents).

It must be perfectly obvious to your Excellency, that my sole view in the requests or suggestions which I submit to you, is the promotion of the interests of the Sircar.

As Hukeem Mehdi conducted the business committed to him at Nandparra in an able and satisfactory manner, and as your Excellency in your letter dated 18th 18th September last, desired me to suggest what appeared to me to be advisable for the settlement of affairs in Pertaubghur, &c., I did, in fact, no more than adopt one of your Excellency's own proposals, in suggesting the deputation of Hukeem Mehdi; and I am now led to infer from the tenor of your Excellency's last letter, that my suggestion of this measure is the sole cause for your departing from it. I shall leave it to your Excellency to reflect on the effects of this painful but necessary inference in my mind. If in the opening of an important arrangement a measure be suggested by your Excellency, and my subsequent recommendation of that measure induce you to abandon it entirely and to follow some other plan, there is obvious cause to apprehend that, after our arrival in the district, and during the whole course of our proceedings, the same differences of opinion may arise, and your Excellency may act contrary to my suggestions and advice, without a mature consideration of the subject, or without more sufficient reasons than have been stated on the present occasion, in which case my attending your Excellency on your excursion, which, on my part, can have no other object than the promotion of the interests of your Government, will be prejudicial rather than of use, and will tend to create disagreement and unpleasant discussions between us, which it is ever my wish to avoid.

Adverting to these circumstances, I deem it to be a necessary precaution, with the view of establishing a right understanding between us to submit the following proposals for your Excellency's consideration and assent before setting out on the journey, or even commencing the settlement of the districts.

First, That an intelligent and able man, if not Hukeem Mehdi some other person, be immediately appointed by your Excellency, and deputed to provide the necessary supplies for the troops; to make inquiry regarding the fortresses and other strong holds of the Zemindars; to give timely and regular information to the commanding officer; to ascertain the revenue of the districts, and what the talookas are capable of yielding at a fair and moderate valuation. In short, to obtain and furnish to your Excellency every degree of necessary information, with a view to the final settlement of the district.

Secondly, That a proclamation be issued in the districts, agreeable to the accompanying draft.

Thirdly, As those districts have for many years been in the hands of farmers, and the Zemindars and the inhabitants of them at large have been long subjected to unjust exactions, from which circumstances it is difficult, if not impracticable, to ascertain the true amount of arrears of revenue for preceding years, I suggest that the balances of all former years, till the end of the fusly year 1216, be remitted to the Zemindars of the three districts in question, and also of the district of Akberpoor, and that no demands whatever be made on account of the balances of those years.

Fourthly, That a triennial settlement be concluded with all the Zemindars of the districts, which will prevent the necessity of your Excellency's marching every year, or of detaching the British troops to assist the Aumils in their settlements. As this settlement will also involve the specification of a fixed time for the payment of every instalment of the revenue of each year, the outstanding balances will be at all times clearly ascertained, and there will be no trouble, as heretofore, in investigating the justice of the Aumils' demands from the Zemindars. The Zemindars, too, will have confidence in the Government, and will occupy themselves in the cultivation of their lands; the revenue of the Sircar will be increased, and the Ryots will be contented and happy.

Fifthly, As your Excellency's camp remaining long in one district will distress the Ryots, by treading down the corn, by taking wood and forage from the peasantry, &c., and is injurious in many other respects, let a fixed period be appointed for our encampment in each district. Let your Excellency's servants be enjoined, under a penalty, to conclude the settlement with the Zemindars within a given period; and let the Zemindars be also required, under a penalty, to come to a settlement of their lands with your officers within the appointed appointed time: and with a view to facilitate the carrying these orders into effect, let a scheme of the settlement of each district, under the signature of the Chowdries and Canoongoes and the seal of the Aumeens, be laid before your Excellency before your arrival in that district.

Such are the leading arrangements which it has occurred to me to be necessary to propose to your Excellency, in the hope of your declaring your acquiescence in them before setting out on the march. But as it is evident that, during the progress of the settlement, many subjects of discussion between your Excellency and me will arise, and a difference of opinion will doubtless sometimes occur; with a view to prevent any future misunderstanding between us, I suggest that neither your Excellency nor I shall determine on any measure, far less proceed to its execution, without mutual approbation and consent; and under this arrangement, I am confident that the happiest consequences will result, and that the true interests of your Excellency's Government, as well as the just views of ours, will in every instance be promoted and accomplished.

Proclamation.

Be it known to the Zemindars, Talookadars, &c. &c., in the mehals of Sooltanpore, Pertaubghur, and Manickpore Behar, that whereas, with a view to the security, happiness, and prosperity of all my subjects in those districts, I have now directed a triennial settlement at a moderate assessment to be made, commencing with the fusly year 1218, that so the Zemindars and Ryots being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and Moostajurs (farmers), may with confidence cultivate their lands, and labour for the increase of the revenues. And, whereas it is obvious, that under this arrangement there can be no occasion whatever for the protection of forts or strong holds of any description in the possession of the Zemindars, many of whom have been proved to take advantage of the forts in their possession, for the purpose of resisting authority and withholding the revenues of the Sircar, which conduct on their parts has frequently induced other Zemindars to act in a similar manner to the great injury of the Government; therefore, it has now been resolved, that no Zemindar in my dominions shall be permitted to retain a fortress or strong hold of any description in his possession; and that in the same manner as the fortresses, ghurries, and other strong holds in the zillahs of Baraitch and Keewayee have been destroyed and levelled to the ground, the forts in the districts of Pertaubghur, &c., shall also be taken and levelled; but that the Zemindars of the districts in question shall be permitted, without molestation or objection, to retain or construct and inhabit their houses, gardens, and enclosures, whether kutchas or pucks, and of whatever extent or description.

You are accordingly hereby required to surrender and make over to Colonel Palmer, commanding the British troops in Pertaubghur, whatever fortress or ghurrie you may possess, without delay, opposition, or hesitation; and in this case every favour will be shewn to you, your balances of revenue for all preceding years, till the end of the fusly year 1216, will be forgiven, and no demand on account of those years shall be made; but in the case of your disobedience to this order, and the reduction of your fortress by force of arms, no forgiveness nor exemption shall be granted, your forts and habitations shall be destroyed, and yourselves shall be expelled from your Zemindaries.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 12th October 1810.)

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter of the 8th instant, in answer to my shookha dated the 1st of this month.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You have stated that your sole object is to accomplish the views of my Government, &c.

My object is exactly the same, viz. that the districts of Sooltanpore, &c. should be settled in the manner which was adopted at Nandparra.

You probably recollect, that in my first shookha on this subject, I observed that I should either go in person for the purpose of making a settlement of those districts, or depute Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan for that purpose; and afterwards, in a shookha dated the 18th September, I desired you to state your opinion regarding the expedience of my going there in person, or deputing Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan; but I never stated in any shookha, that Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan should be deputed for the purpose of providing supplies.

You must further probably recollect, that when I first proposed to you to depute the Hukeem to Sooltanpore, you were apprehensive that the district was to be permanently consigned to his charge, and wrote to me in the following words: "That although Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan be an active and " zealous Aumil, yet having already the management of a considerable " portion of my dominions, if another portion of equal extent be now consign- " ed to him, the trust might exceed his capacity, and both districts might fall " into disorder." In answer to this I observed to you, that the Hukeem should be only temporarily employed to conclude the settlement of the districts, and that I had no intention of consigning the district to his permanent charge.

It is obvious, therefore, that I have all along refused my assent to the measure of deputing Hukeem Mehdi for the purpose of providing supplies, and the reasons for this refusal are now fully apparent; consequently your apprehensions of future disagreement and unpleasant discussions between us being founded on the supposition of an existing difference of opinion on this point, which is now proved to be groundless, your apprehensions should cease to exist, or what can I answer to remove them?

To each of your five propositions I shall now reply in their order.

1st. That an intelligent man, well skilled in business, if not Hukeem Mehdi, &c.

I originally suggested to you, with this very view, that two persons, the one appointed by me and the other by yourself, should be deputed to inquire into the condition of the forts and fastnesses, and the number of the forces of the Zemindars, &c., to report on this subject; but this plan was unfortunately dropped: and although I be still desirous of instituting an inquiry into the condition of the forts, &c., which I consider as highly important, yet it seems now to be totally impracticable by any individual, in so short a period of time as remains. How can this be remedied?

But for the purpose of providing supplies, I have appointed Mowlovee Zamen Ali, the brother of Mowlovee Samin Ali, who is Aumil of the Begum's jagier and for the purpose of obtaining and conveying intelligence to the commanding officer, as suggested in your letter, as all the arzees of the Aumils since the commencement of this business, and all the akhbars from the districts have regularly been transmitted to you as they arrive, without the smallest alteration of their contents, and whatever you have desired has been constantly written to the Aumils, you must, of course, be already in possession of all the intelligence up to this date which I have received or could convey to you.

I shall send positive instructions to Mowlovee Zamen Ali to exert himself to the utmost of his power in procuring intelligence for the Colonel, and on no account to be remiss in the performance of this duty. I shall also send instructions to the Aumils to remain in attendance on the commanding officer of the British troops, for the purpose of giving the earliest intelligence of every circumstance that occurs.

With respect to the inquiry which you suggest into the real amount of the revenue and capability of the several Talookas, with a view to their proper assessment, I wrote to you some time ago, in a shookha dated the 29th May last, last, that the Aumil must be left to decide on all these matters, and that after his decision, if any person proved refractory and did not satisfy the just claims of the Sircar, the commanding officer of the troops should be instructed merely to punish and suppress the refractory. My object is still the same. I never intended to conceal any thing from you, nor have I now that intention. If you wish to ascertain the amount of the revenue, and what the districts are capable of yielding, I shall inform you of it as soon as it can be ascertained by the papers which may be hereafter sent to me.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from the Vizier.

2d. That a proclamation be issued, in the terms of a draft which you have sent to me; and,

3dly. That all arrears of revenue, till the end of the fusly year 1216, be remitted to the Zemindars of those three districts, as well as also of Akberpore, &c.

In answer to these two propositions, it occurs to me to be proper that Hoolass Singh, Shoo Singh, Adjhoodea Pershaud, and others (the displaced Aumils of Sooltanpore, &c., now in confinement at Lucknow), should accompany the present Aumils of the Sircar to Sooltanpore and other places, for the purpose of being confronted with the Zemindars; and in the result of this inquiry, whatever balances appear to have been due before the end of the fusly year 1215, that those balances only be remitted, but that the balances of the fusly year 1216, as proved by the proper accounts and vouchers, attested by assertions or oaths, agreeably to the persuasion or faith of the parties, and by the sunnuds and other revenue papers, under the signature of the Chowdries, Canoongoes and Putwarries, be still considered as exigible from the Zemindars, and be paid by regular instalments with the revenue of succeeding years, by which means the loss to Government will be diminished.

But if you disapprove of this plan, I consent to issue my proclamation, in the terms of the draft which you have sent; although in the case of my issuing such a proclamation, and granting a remission of arrears till the end of the fusly year 1216, those persons who have already agreed to pay their balances for that year will not fulfil their engagements.

4th. You suggest that a triennial settlement be concluded with all the Zemindars in those districts.

A triennial settlement in those districts, and a specification of fixed periods for demanding the revenue by instalments, are highly expedient and desirable.

5th. You propose that, as the protraction of my stay at any place is improper, &c. (recapitulate this proposition).

It is totally impossible for me to limit the duration of my stay in any district, or to expect that a settlement with the Zemindars will be concluded in any given time; for, on a former occasion, during my stay at Sooltanpore and other places, I issued a proclamation to all the Zemindars in those districts, directing them to appear before me on a certain day, and though a few of the Zemindars attended, a large proportion of them did not obey my proclamation. And regarding the conclusion of the settlement, even after the attendance of the Zemindars, although in some instances where the vouchers are clear and correct, and the assets of the districts ascertained, a decision can speedily be passed; yet in others where the vouchers are defective, and the capacity of the district unknown, the decision will necessarily be protracted; consequently the limitation of my stay in any district seems at present to be totally impracticable; and as my going to those districts at all must necessarily occasion the destruction of the cultivation and the seizure of firewood, bhoossa, &c., by the camp followers, and it is impossible to limit the period of my stay: under these circumstances, if I can accomplish the object of my own journey by the deputation of other persons, without my personal presence, it seems proper and advisable to do so, because my sole object is the permanent settlement of the districts, and the execution of all the measures connected with this object must depend on subordinate officers, whether I be present or not.

Regarding

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1810,

Letter
from the Vizier.

Regarding the previous preparation and transmission of a scheme of the settlement, which is mentioned in several of your letters, it is certainly a desirable object, and would greatly facilitate the settlements; but how is such a scheme to be obtained? You have seen the arzee of Fuzul Alee, Aumil of Sooltanpore, &c., dated the 6th instant, a copy of which was sent to you for your perusal, and would not fail to observe in this arzee the impracticability of preparing such a scheme.

You must not, however, consider what I have here written as an excuse for my not limiting the duration of my stay at each place, and not obtaining a scheme of the settlement, as in the light of a dissent from your propositions, or an intention of departing from your advice; because, since I have acquiesced in your proposal for remitting the balances of revenue, by which a great loss must be sustained, of what importance are those minor propositions, that I should refuse my assent to them at your suggestion? You can, therefore, only conclude, with regard to those subordinate measures, that they appear to me to be impossible.

You have stated in the conclusion of your letter, that as it is evident that during the progress of the settlement many subjects of discussion must arise, &c. (recapitulate this observation).

I repeat to you, in answer to this, that I have no other object whatever than to settle those affairs by your advice. If I refuse to discuss the affairs and interests of my Government with you, with whom else can I discuss them, and by whose advice are they to be carried on? Whatever, therefore, may be determined on with your advice and concurrence, and after a full discussion between us, it is impossible that I should depart from it: and since it is obvious that the settlement and arrangement of all the affairs of my Government must depend on your friendship, and on the subsistence of cordiality between us, why then should our harmony be disturbed?

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 15th October 1810.)

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter, dated the 12th instant, in answer to mine of the 8th instant.

As we have recently discussed the subject of this letter at a personal conference, I shall now merely recall to your Excellency's recollection the remarks which I submitted for your consideration at our conference of the 13th.

I commenced with remarking that the principal, if not the only remaining difference of opinion between us, seemed to rest upon your Excellency's misconception of the object which I had in view, in the deputation of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to Pertaubghur.

Your Excellency has hitherto persisted in ascribing my suggestion of the deputation of Hukeem Mehdi to the sole object of providing supplies for the troops, which may perhaps be considered as an object of importance to the British Government alone; whereas this is by no means the case, and, on the contrary, there are many important concerns of your Excellency's Government exclusively, on which the formation of the settlement of those districts must depend, and which the Aumeens have hitherto neglected, that I proposed to be committed to the management of the Hukeem, reserving for your Excellency in person the ultimate assessment of the lands, the conclusion of the triennial settlement and kist bundee, with a due attention to the interests of the landholders, which no subordinate officer of your Government is, in my opinion, likely to afford; and accordingly your Excellency will observe, in almost all my recent letters on this subject, a distinct specification of the objects of Hukeem Mehdi's deputation to those districts, as well as of the ultimate objects of your Excellency's personal tour.

Having

Having disposed of this branch of the subject, I proceeded to reply to some remarks which are stated in the sequel of your Excellency's letter. And first, to your Excellency's remark, "That my apprehensions of future disagreement being founded on the supposition of an existing difference between us which has no real foundation, those apprehensions should necessarily cease."

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The differences and painful discussions which occurred between your Excellency and me during the period of our encampment at Sooltanpore, and regarding our movement from that station, must be still in your Excellency's recollection, and can never be effaced from my mind. To prevent the recurrence of such discussions is the leading object of my anxiety, and for the accomplishment of this object too much precaution cannot possibly be observed. If your Excellency, with this view, had been pleased to signify your acquiescence in all the propositions which I submitted, our future harmony would have been ensured, and the best effects must have resulted.

Your Excellency's answer to my first proposal is conceived in the following terms (recapitulate this part of his letter, "I originally suggested," &c.).

In the deputation which I proposed to your Excellency there were many advantages in view, which your Excellency thought proper to supersede by requiring a limitation of its objects, to the effect of their total perversion, and consequently the plan was laid aside, with suitable remarks by me on the occasion. But if your Excellency will now consent to the adoption of the measure on the principle which I described, and which has since received the approbation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, I am perfectly ready to adopt it, and there cannot be a better plan; whereas your Excellency's proposed deputation of Moolovee Zamin Alee is, in my opinion, totally useless and superfluous, for the reasons stated in your letter, namely, that Nowneit Race and the other Aumeens having now been ordered by your Excellency to be in constant attendance on Colonel Palmer, for the purpose of providing supplies and procuring the necessary information, the deputation of Moolovee Zamin Alee, or of any other person subordinate to the Aumeens, must of course be totally useless; in addition to which, it is evident that Moolovee Zamin Alee has none of those qualifications, with a reference to Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, to which your Excellency, in your letter of the 1st instant, ascribed the success of Hukeem Mehdi, with a reference to the district of Nandparra.

Your Excellency's answer to the second and third of my propositions is conveyed in the following words, (recapitulate his Excellency's words: "In answer to these two propositions, it occurs to me to be proper that Hoolass Singh," &c. &c.).

Can it have escaped your Excellency's penetration, that Hoolass Singh and the other displaced Aumils of Sooltanpore being in confinement for their own balances to the Sircar, will, in the case of their becoming parties to the proposed investigation, most naturally disavow their receipts and collections, and place the full amount of their defalcations to the debit of the several Zemindars, with the view of exculpating themselves; while the Zemindars, on the other hand, and on the very same principle, perceiving the Aumils in confinement, will debit those Aumils with the sums which they themselves have withholden, and consequently the present Aumils of the Sircar will be utterly unable to decide upon those contending assertions, more important business will be delayed, and no benefit can result to the Government. If such be the state of the case, it is surely advisable for your Excellency to take the credit of the remission at once, and to issue the proclamations, as I have suggested, to be sent to the commanding officer of the troops, whom I shall instruct to apply them in the manner best calculated to produce the surrender of the forts and ready submission of the Zemindars, who, in this event alone, are to enjoy the benefits of the proclamation; and as it has not been proposed to require the surrender of the forts of any of those Zemindars with whom your Excellency concluded a settlement at Sooltanpore, and who have already agreed to discharge their arrears of the fusly year 1216, their engagements may still be fulfilled, and any unnecessary loss to the Government precluded, while all the remaining Zemindars, in the hope of the remission of their balances, will come forward and surrender their forts.

Your Excellency's remark on the fifth proposition having reference to your personal tour may be answered in a very few words.

As my sole object, in your Excellency's going or deputing other persons, is the general settlement of the country, so as to preclude the future employment of our troops, and to ensure the happiness of your subjects by protecting them from the extortions of your Aumils; if this object can be properly accomplished by your deputation of subordinate officers, I entirely approve of the measure, and those officers shall have every necessary aid for the enforcement of their just demands from the British troops in the district. But as those troops, with the battering train, can only be employed during the favourable season of the year, whether your Excellency visit the districts or depute a subordinate officer, and as the season is passing away, it seems advisable that no time should be lost in coming to a final determination, and that I be apprized of your intention with the least practicable delay.

I have received your letter, under date the 15th October, in answer to my letter of the 12th. On your submitting for my consideration several proposals, in one of which you described the loss and damage to be occasioned by my encampment in the districts, I wrote to you that if an arrangement could be devised for the adjustment of the affairs of that zillah, so as to preclude the necessity of my marching, it would be preferable in every point of view. But as you have now stated your opinion that the completion of the settlement, that is to say, the triennial assessment of the revenue, with such remissions as may appear to be necessary, the granting of puttahs or deeds of lease to the Zemindars, with a specification of the kist bundee and other matters, cannot be carried into effect in the manner which you are desirous it should be by any of the Aumeens in the zillahs, nor even by Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, and should be deferred until my arrival, I therefore approve of your advice, and shall not send Hukeem Mehdi to Pertaubghur; but, if you recommend it, I will go in person to that zillah. Hukeem Mehdi has requested my permission to return to his own district.

With respect to my giving an entire acquiescence to the five propositions contained in your letter, I have no intention whatever to act in opposition to your opinion, either in the case of my remaining here or of my going to that zillah; and as it is the furthest thing from my wish to have any kind of dispute with you, therefore why should there be any occasion for your desiring my previous acquiescence in your proposals? My sole object is, with the assistance of your advice, and with your approbation, to make such a settlement of the country as may preclude all disorder in future; and if this cannot now be accomplished, it is obvious that the burthen will fall upon you again in the ensuing year.

The reason of my not having assented to some parts of the five propositions is, that I am not convinced of the possibility of carrying them into effect, not that I have refused my consent to them. If you will suggest how they can be carried into effect, it shall be done accordingly.

With regard to what you have suggested, relative to Hoolass Sing and others going with the officers of the Sircar, if you will advert to the subject of my letter, under date the 12th instant, you will observe a satisfactory reply, because the only just mode of ascertaining the balances is by a reference to existing documents, to the assertions and oaths, the religion and faith of the parties, and to the papers of the Chowdries, Canoongoes, and Putwarries; but it is by no means my wish that we should have any dispute on this subject. Proclamations, agreeable to the form which you sent to me, have been prepared and shall be issued. When you shall have determined whether you think it advisable for me to go in person or to send Aumils, be pleased to inform me, that I may act accordingly; because, in your letter dated the 24th September, you observed that there was no occasion then for your saying any thing in answer to my proposals, since it was your intention to give your advice at all times, on every proper occasion, without any reserve: consequently, as I have no other object than the proper settlement of the country, you should now suggest what you think proper, and whatever you may determine shall be carried into immediate effect.

Lucknow.

As your Excellency would appear to have now finally determined not to depute Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to the zillah of Pertaubghur, and as you have further been pleased to ascribe this resolution to my advice, which has been uniformly of an opposite nature, since my receipt of your letter dated the 18th of September which conveyed the first suggestion of this deputation, a measure, too, originally suggested by yourself, and subsequently departed from with an earnestness proportioned to that of my recommendation of its expedience and even necessity; adverting to this extraordinary fact, and to my original observation to your Excellency regarding Mohummud Koollee Beg and the three Aumeens of Sooltanpore, Pertaubghur, and Behar, it is now my indispensable duty to state to you, in the clearest and most explicit manner, that as a large detachment of the British troops, with a battering train of artillery, is employed in the district of Pertaubghur, for the purpose of punishing the refractory, at your Excellency's repeated requisition, it seems advisable and even necessary, that you depute, with as little delay as may be possible, an officer of character and respectability, conversant with revenue concerns, to obtain an accurate knowledge of the state of the districts in question, to conciliate and encourage such Zemindars as are submissive and obedient to authority, to direct the operations of the troops to the suppression of those who are refractory, to ascertain the assets of the lands, and to prepare and forward to your Excellency a satisfactory scheme of the settlement; that so, on your Excellency's arrival in the country, which I still deem to be advisable, there may be nothing remaining to impede the final arrangement of the district, which may thus be speedily accomplished: and as I know none of your Excellency's servants of greater ability and zeal than Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, nor indeed any so well qualified as he is for the performance of the duties which I have mentioned, I do therefore most strongly recommend that you depute him without delay to that zillah; and after his arrival in the district, that the preparations for your own march do commence.

Such is the earnest and ultimate advice which, after mature consideration of the subject, I have deemed it to be my duty to offer, with a view to the settlement of those districts: and as I cannot suggest any thing else, which appears to be better calculated to accomplish the object in view, if your Excellency disapprove of this advice, the only alternative which remains is the adoption of your own plan, whatever it may be, relying upon my zealous co-operation, to the utmost of my power, by affording the assistance of the troops in support of your Excellency's measures.

I have received your letter dated 19th October, in answer to mine of the 17th.

You have stated, that I would appear to have now finally determined not to depute Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to the zillah of Pertaubghur.

Being unwilling to persist in a disagreement with you on this subject, I directed Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to prepare for his mission to Pertaubghur, agreeably to your wishes ; but the Hukeem has offered so many valid excuses for declining to undertake the duty, that I am extremely embarrassed on the subject, for reasons which will fully appear to you if you peruse his arzee with attention, and I transmit a copy of it with this view.

You observe that as a detachment of the British troops with a battering train of artillery is employed in the district of Pertaubghur, for the purpose of punishing the refractory, at my repeated requisition, it seems advisable, and even necessary, that I depute, with as little delay as may be possible, an officer of character and respectability, conversant with revenue concerns, &c.

I agree entirely with you, that a person of weight and respectability, as well as conversant on revenue matters, should be employed on the duty in question ; but an accurate knowledge of the country, and of the character of the several Zemindars, formed on former experience, seems also to me to be required for the due performance of this duty, and accordingly it is now my intention to depute Mohummud Ashruff to those districts.

This person was formerly the sole and independent Aumil of the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, is perfectly acquainted with the country and with the characters of all the Zemindars ; and as Nowneit Race and the other Aumeens who are actually employed in those districts were formerly for many years subordinate to Mohummud Ashruff in the collection of the revenues of Pertaubghur, &c., they will now cheerfully act under his authority and obey all his directions.

Mohummud Ashruff has been summoned to the Presence, and when he arrives I shall instruct him in detail regarding all the duties which are required from him, and dismiss him in company with Race Diakrishen, my Dewan, and a proper establishment of Mutusuddies and other subordinate officers, with the least practicable delay ; for I agree entirely with you, that no further time should be lost in the adoption of this necessary arrangement.

You have stated your opinion, that a Hindee translation would be of use if subjoined to the Persian proclamations, &c.

It is unusual in my dufter to issue Hindee translations of any documents, otherwise I should readily have complied with your request. No inconvenience can result from the proclamations being limited to the Persian.

Arzee
from the Aumil.

Arzee from Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan.

Your Excellency has been pleased to intrust me with the collection of an annual revenue of sixteen lacs of rupees in the districts of Khyrabad and Mahomdic.

The Zemindars of the purgunnah of Barjur in Khyrabad are known to be particularly refractory and rebellious. The revenue is realized by my making constant stant circuits of the several districts throughout the year, and by keeping a watchful eye on the Talookadars; and if, on my part, there had been the least negligence or remissness in this respect, the country would have long ago fallen into such confusion, that the restoration of order would be difficult. In addition to the management of the extensive districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdee, whenever there is any disorder in the adjoining districts of Baraitch, Nandparra, Futtypoor, Biswa, Suleek, and others, although these districts are not in my aumildaree, and your Excellency has an Aumil in each of them, you have frequently been pleased to convey your orders to me for the better management of those districts, so that the superintendence of those latter districts, also, may be considered as under my charge. Under these circumstances, if your Excellency think proper to depute me to Pertaubghur, I apprehend, first, that the districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdee, and the other districts which I have mentioned, will soon fall into confusion, and that the revenue of them will not be realized; in proof of which Balek Ram, although nothing has yet happened in his district, has positively asserted to me that the district of Kowana will fall into confusion and the revenue into arrears, unless I go there without delay. Secondly, If I go to Pertaubghur, it will be necessary to remove from the districts under my charge, and to take with me as many of my confidential people as I may require; consequently confusion will arise in the districts from whence they are taken. Thirdly, the whole business of adjusting the affairs of the country under my immediate charge, the settlement of the revenue of that country, the suppression of refractory Zemindars, nay even receiving the account of the Mutu-suddies, Aumils, and subordinate Aumils, entirely depend on myself, as I have no relations nor friends in the district, nor any person in whom I have sufficient confidence to entrust these matters to their management, and consequently my going to Pertaubghur will occasion the total derangement of my affairs.

Arzee
from the Aum

I have thus reported to your Excellency the actual state of things.

I am your Excellency's servant: you have been graciously pleased to entrust to me the management of a part of the country, and I am ready with my utmost exertions to execute your commands without offering any excuse. The reason of my having adduced arguments against my being employed to make a settlement of the district of Sooltanpore and others, and my own ignorance of those districts, is, that if any thing wrong shall happen in my own districts, or if I shall not be able to effect a settlement in Sooltanpore and the other districts, by reason of my being a stranger and unacquainted with them, blame may not be imputed to me, and that I may not be responsible if my own district should fall into disorder and the kists remain unpaid.

There is no similarity between Nandparra and that of Sooltanpore, because Nandparra is in the vicinity of my district, and the Zemindars in the neighbourhood, such as Soorut Sing, Sheo Pershaud, Balek Ram, and others, afforded me their assistance; and in Sooltanpore I am a perfect stranger, and totally unacquainted with any of the Talookadars and Zemindars of that zillah: and if I am employed there, as soon as the Zemindars of my own district shall become acquainted with my being deputed by your Excellency for the carrying into effect an important arrangement, from the duties of which I cannot be relieved until its final completion, they will undoubtedly make away with the revenue, and it will afterwards be difficult to recover it from them.

It does not seem practicable for me to make a settlement of Sooltanpore and the other districts.

Finally, I await your Excellency's orders, which I shall always be ready to carry into effect to the utmost of my power; but I apprehend that my being deputed would occasion disorder in Khyrabad, Mohumdee, Baraitch, and the other districts, without my being able to accomplish the object in view.

I offer these remarks to your Excellency, that I may avoid blame and preserve my reputation with your Excellency.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter, dated the 22d of this month.

Having already, in the course of our correspondence, submitted to your Excellency, in detail, what appeared to me to be advisable with a view to the permanent settlement of the districts of Sooltanpoore, &c. I have nothing further to offer on that subject; and being totally unacquainted with the merits or qualifications of Mohummud Ashruff, I cannot offer any opinion regarding the propriety or impropriety of deputing him to those districts; but I repeat what I formerly stated in my letter of the 19th instant, namely, that I am perfectly ready to afford the aid of the British troops to any person whom your Excellency may appoint.

I enclose, for your consideration, the Wajeboolarz of Mohummud Ashruff, together with a draft of my reply. Peruse them, and make such alterations in them as you may deem to be proper, after which return them to me that I may give them to Mohummud Ashruff.

Article 1.

Having been appointed by your Excellency to superintend the district of Sooltanpoore, Dherenagur, Barellie, Dalmow, Akberpoor, &c. I will execute the trust which you have reposed in me to the utmost of my ability, and I shall consider it an honour to sacrifice my life in your service. I hope, however, that your Excellency will join with me in this charge some careful experienced person, who, having a knowledge of the state of affairs in those places, may by his advice enable me to accomplish your Excellency's object.

Answer.

The objects in contemplation by your appointment are to ascertain the actual state and condition of those districts, to conciliate and encourage such of the Zemindars and inhabitants as are in obedience to my authority and regularly pay their rents, and with the aid of the British troops, to punish or bring back to obedience the refractory and disaffected; and, lastly, after thoroughly informing yourself of the real value of the lands, and what they are capable of yielding, to prepare and transmit, for my consideration, an improved plan of a settlement. The attainment of these ends, by the speediest and most approved means, will be a source of satisfaction to the Presence. Although there be no necessity for joining any other person with you, yet, with the view of inspiring you with confidence, I will nominate a colleague as you desire.

Article 2.

Should any Zemindars, subjects of your Excellency, fly from your country and take refuge under the Government of the Honourable Company, I trust your Excellency will favour me with letters addressed by the British Resident at your court, to the Judges and Collectors of Elahabad, Juanpore, Goruckpore, and Azimghur, directing those gentlemen to surrender to me all fugitives from your Excellency's country who may seek protection

Answer.

Agreeably to this representation I shall write to the British Resident.

Answer.

tion in the English territory, in order that I may send such persons to your Presence.

Article 3.

I shall, of course, investigate the condition of each Zemindar; and those whom I may find unwilling to pay the lawful demands of the state must be reduced to obedience by the aid of the British troops. Should any Zemindar repair to the commanding officer of the British troops and make representations to him, they ought not to be listened to, because it will be my duty to make known to the commanding officer the real circumstances of the case and the cause which may require coercive measures.

Article 4.

I hope that your Excellency will address letters to Nowneit Rae, Fuzul Ali, and Jeemal-ood-deen, commanding them, at my requisition, to employ all the troops, artillery, horse, and infantry, stationed in the aforesaid districts, in the vigorous execution of my measures for the punishment of the refractory, as well as to furnish me with information of the proceedings of the disaffected Zemindars.

Article 5.

The cavalry in those districts to which your Excellency has nominated me is, in point of numbers, extremely small. I trust that your Excellency will grant me an augmentation of two hundred horse.

Article 6.

Your Excellency has commanded me to destroy the forts, you will therefore, I hope, be pleased to send along with me five hundred Bildars; or if it should be more agreeable to your Excellency, I will myself entertain that number. The levelling of the forts may be performed with dispatch, if your Excellency should allow but a small number of these persons, or very considerable delay will occur in the execution of this work, the country being of vast extent.

Answer.

Let every circumstance relative to the Zemindars be communicated to the commanding officer of the British troops. Let the principle of equity govern the adjustment of their balances; and in this case I am persuaded that the commanding officer of the British force will regulate his conduct by the true state of circumstances which you may submit to him.

Answer.

In compliance with this request the required letter shall be addressed to the Aumils.

Answer.

One hundred horse only will be allowed.

Answer.

You will entertain the number of Bildars which may be adequate to the service required (namely the destruction of the fortresses and ghurries), and orders shall be issued to my son, Nuseer-ud dowlah, for supplying the quantity of gunpowder which you require. As soon as the forts are taken, such parts of the fortifications as may appear to be capable of defence must immediately, and in the presence of the commanding officer of the British troops, with all possible expedition be destroyed and levelled with the ground, as the number of people with you is too few for the purpose of furnishing garrisons or for the complete destruction of the forts, which must therefore be accomplished by degrees.

Article 7.

I request your permission to entertain fifty Hircarrahs, as well for the purpose of the following fugitive Zemindars, as for conveying letters to my deputies in the districts and to the Zemindars.

Answer.

Entertain them at three rupees a man.

Article 8.

As I shall have occasion to maintain a constant correspondence with the Naibs and the Zemindars, and as your Excellency will require from me a daily report of my proceedings, I hope your Excellency will allow me two Moonshees, and signify the amount of wages which they are to receive: fifty rupees per mensem for both, thirty rupees for the Moonshee employed in writing my arzees to your Excellency, and twenty rupees for the other employed in my correspondence with the Naibs and Zemindars.

Answer.

It is of no moment: let them be entertained; but the letters to the Zemindars must be written by the Aumils. If the Aumils be absent let their Naibs be in attendance, in order that nothing may occur tending to lessen the Aumils or produce resistance to their authority.

Article 9.

Your Excellency's pleasure will determine the allowance which I am to receive, and my expense must be regulated accordingly. If I should appear without a due degree of state, I shall possess no weight whatever. My real circumstances are no secret to your Excellency, who knows that my expenses are circumscribed, and that my retinue has been dismissed.

Answer.

An allowance of five hundred rupees per mensem.

The employment which your Excellency has now conferred upon me requires the appearance of state and expense; but whatever degree of both your Excellency may determine to be proper, I shall conform to with submission.

Answer.

It shall be included in the accounts.

Allowance for paper and ink.

Answer.

A Vakeel is unnecessary: Sooruj Bhan will be the channel for the transmission.

Salary for a Vakeel.

Answer.

Four Mutusuddies will remain with me, for the purpose of arranging all the papers and accounts which shall be transmitted to me from the districts: their wages to be settled by your Excellency.

Article 12.

Four persons are necessary to be entertained for the purpose of furnishing the supplies, and all the usual articles required by the British troops. Their wages ought to be liberal, and if placed immediately under me, I can direct and control their actions.

Answer.

Do as you propose.

Article 13.

The whole of the leading measures shall be arranged by myself, and the Aumils shall then be directed to execute them. I shall require the attendance of the Aumils, and conduct my proceedings in concert with them. No steps shall be taken, on any account, which may have a tendency to lessen the authority of the Aumils, and all your Excellency's orders shall be punctually obeyed.

Answer.

Granted.

Article 14.

Such of the Talookadars and Zemin-dars as after investigation shall be found unable to execute their agreement with the Sircar shall be required to surrender their lands, and the collections which they yield to be made by my own people. For the purpose of acquiring a due knowledge of the means of those persons, fifty Merdehs, at four rupees a month each, will be requisite, and also twenty-five Aumeens at five rupees a man, whom I therefore hope you will permit me to entertain: a descriptive roll of them shall be lodged in the Bukhshee-gurrie duftur.

Answer.

Let it be, when necessity justifies the measure; but matters must be conducted in conjunction with the Aumils.

Sir :

1. With the view of aiding the effect of your requisitions to the several Zemindars and other rebellious subjects of the Vizier's Government in the districts of Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore, for the peaceable surrender of their forts, his Excellency has been pleased, at my suggestion, to issue a number of proclamations in the terms of the accompanying document, and has desired me to transmit to you the enclosed ten original proclamations in the Persian language, under his seal, for the purpose of being conveyed to such of the refractory Zemindars as you may have occasion to proceed against, with the detachment under your command, at the requisition of his Excellency's Aumils.

2. Both his Excellency and myself are of opinion, that the only security which can be had for the future allegiance or fidelity of the principal Zemindars in those districts is the entire demolition of their forts; and his Excellency has accordingly determined, in compliance with my suggestion, to direct the entire destruction of every fortress and ghurry which may be surrendered or reduced on this occasion, by the operations of the troops under your command.

3. The tenor of his Excellency's proclamations, as announcing the remission of considerable balances of revenue, as well as other eminent advantages in the triennial settlement of their lands, to such of the landholders of those districts as may immediately return to their allegiance and deliver up their fortresses to you, seems in my opinion calculated to circumscribe the extent of your military operations, and to accelerate the accomplishment of their object.

Sir :

I find myself under the necessity of referring for your further instructions, in regard to the manner in which your orders to destroy such places as I may deem necessary to prevent future trouble is to be executed, as I am assured by the Aumil that he has not been authorized by his Excellency the Vizier to incur any expense, or provide any powder or Bildars for the purpose.

I take this opportunity of acquainting you of my having encamped at this place yesterday, to await the result of the Aumil's negotiation with three or four of the Zemindars, and which I expect will end without the necessity of adopting coercive measures against them, in the complete adjustment of their accounts with him.

The forts, or ghurries, belonging to these people are represented to be of too little strength to render it requisite to destroy them; and, accordingly, if they consent to pay the demands upon them, I shall proceed without delay against other places; but as information on the subject of this reference is necessary to enable me to carry on my operations, my force being detained in the neighbourhood

It having been communicated to me, since the despatch of my letter of yesterday's date to your address, that the forts of Untoo and Oomree had evinced a disposition to oppose my detachment, notwithstanding the Zemindars, Udee Sing and Doorga Persaud, had promised an entire submission, I marched against them this morning, when the former place was surrendered to me without opposition, and the latter was evacuated upon my approach. The garrison of Untoo I permitted to retire unmolested, and that of Oomree effected its escape into the jungle.

The strength of these places has been grossly misrepresented ; as they are advantageously situated and capable of considerable resistance, I shall, therefore, remain here to-morrow and destroy them. The following morning I shall march against Amethee.

Extract from a Private Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer to Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow. Dated the 30th October 1810.

Unless you can prevail on His Excellency to send peremptory instructions to Nowneit Raee and all the other Aumils I shall have occasion to call upon hereafter, to furnish large quantities of gunpowder and great lots of Bildars, whenever required, to assist in knocking down forts, ghurries, &c., as we get possession of them, our work will be much delayed and almost endless, and the detachment in all probability remain in the field two years and upwards. I am extremely anxious to get every thing settled and to see the country in peace. I have no idea of any violent opposition; and I am convinced, as far as I can judge of the inclinations and dispositions of the few Talookadars that I have seen, that the people in general are by no means disaffected to his Excellency's Government, and that they only require to be dealt honestly with. The proclamation which I have just received will, I am confident, have a most happy effect; and in my opinion, if the Aumil is fair in his settlement, no further disturbance will occur in the country. However, this is no business of mine, and, of course, I shall never attempt to interfere.

Owing to the want of powder and Bildars, having only fifty of the latter with the train, we have not been able to destroy completely the forts of Untoo and Oomree as yet. The Aumil sent last night thirteen country maunds of powder, about seven or eight of our maunds, and we are now hard at work constructing mines, and either to-night or some time to-morrow, hope to set fire to them.

You have already observed from my official despatches, that I am by no means inattentive to your proceedings, nor unmindful of the necessity of supplying you with the means of destroying the forts which may come into your possession, whether by the voluntary surrender of the holders or by the successful operations of your arms.

You seem to me to be conducting the business in an able and a judicious manner; and I augur from what is already before me, your return with credit to your cantonment before the end of the cold weather.

Mohummud Ashruf, the newly appointed Aumil, who is highly talked of to me, will be with you in a few days, and you shall have a copy of the instructions which have been issued to him, at my suggestion, by his sovereign. If he fail in the performance of his duty, we shall ourselves be with you by and bye; but I trust that our movement will be superseded by the zealous conduct of the Aumil, and by your judicious and active support of the measures which he is instructed to adopt.

Our last akhbar from your camp mentions the flight of a number of Zemindars; and this is an unpleasant circumstance, because it must protract the settlement of the country.

Conciliatory measures on your part, with a reference to the Zemindars, and remonstrances against the Aumil's demands whenever you suspect them to be unjust, will probably put a stop to the emigration, and my circular letter to the surrounding magistrates, a copy of which is inclosed, will also have a good effect.

Sir :

Being under the necessity of waiting in the neighbourhood of Untoo and Oomree till they were destroyed, which was not completed till the evening of the 1st instant, I could only move yesterday morning, when I marched to this place.

I was met at some distance from hence by the Rajah Hurchund Sing's Vakeels, who proposed to surrender the fort to me, and of which I was accordingly put in immediate possession by his son, who met me at the gate ; and I shall proceed without delay to destroy such parts of the fortifications (which are, however, in a most ruinous condition) as may render it incapable of future resistance.

I think it my duty to make to you, for the information of the Vizier, a favourable report of the disposition of the Rajah, who has intimated to me, in the strongest terms, his entire submission to his Excellency's will and pleasure.

It is not in my power to render you an immediate account of the operations I am now to undertake, as I am led to believe I shall be able to get, by means of detachments from the force under my command, possession of several forts and ghurries in this vicinity, which will be a preferable mode of proceeding to that of drawing the heavy guns and train over the bad roads, where they will travel with much difficulty and considerable hazard of damage. I shall be careful to inform you of the reduction of forts by such parties; and by the means provided by his Excellency's order, as stated to me in your letter of the 31st ultimo, I hope to be able to destroy them with much more ease and expedition than I have hitherto.

The 28th December 1810.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 7th ultimo, I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copies and translations of letters on the same subject, which have more recently passed between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, with copies of letters which I have received from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, commanding the detachment in Pertaubghur, and from Major-General Fuller, commanding the troops in the field.

2. I am concerned to be under the necessity of reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that the negligence and improper conduct of the officers of this Government employed in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, with the repeated refusal of his Excellency the Vizier to comply with my suggestion of his deputing to those districts the only efficient Aumil under his Government, or proceeding to the districts himself with a declared resolution to abide by the proposition which I submitted to him, seem to me to preclude the possibility of effecting any beneficial arrangement, in either of the districts in question, during the present fusly year.

3. Since my receipt of the last of the documents which are transmitted by this despatch, I have had several conferences with his Excellency on the general subject of those documents, and the state of the districts in question; and I have strenuously laboured to convince him of the ruinous consequences of the misconduct of his officers in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, as well as of the measures which he has himself more recently adopted, with a reference to the large portion of his dominions which was formerly farmed by Almass.

4. The districts which were occupied by that Aumil, yielding an annual revenue of about thirty lacs of rupees, had been transferred, immediately on his death, in opposition to my wishes and suggestions, to the eunuch, Ruhmut Alee Khan, Almass's nominal brother, whose failure in the payment of the revenue occasioned his removal and disgrace in the course of a few months, and the subsequent transfer of the districts, on similar terms, to a person named Mirza Jan, the adoptive son of Almass, who has also necessarily failed to fulfil his engagements to the Government, and is now under personal restraint for balances, which can never be liquidated, and the demand of a large portion of which is, in my opinion, unjust and oppressive.

5. On the occasion of the death of Almass Alee Khan, and on the two subsequent occasions of the transfer of the districts which he farmed to his nominal brother and son at the exorbitant rate of his engagements, I suggested in strong terms to the Vizier the impropriety of his consigning so large a portion portion of his dominions to any individual Aumil, more particularly to the dependants of Almass, and the expediency of his appointing a number of trustworthy persons as Ameens, to investigate and report upon the real state of the districts and the condition of the landholders and peasantry, with a view to a beneficial arrangement for the future management of the country.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

6. A compliance with my suggestions on those occasions was evaded by his Excellency the Vizier, upon grounds and under circumstances which precluded my persistence in urging the point; but the consequences which I then predicted have all of them since been acknowledged, and have probably had their influence in producing a partial change of his Excellency's system with regard to this portion of his dominions.

7. The territory which was farmed by Almass, Ruhmut Alee Khan, and Mirza Jan, in succession, has now been parcelled out, I understand, to a number of petty farmers, without any reduction of the terms, and under circumstances which preclude the possibility of the due realization of the revenue, without the gradual devastation of the lands, and the ruin of the landholders and peasantry.

8. I have again submitted to the Vizier the ruinous consequences of those measures, and have predicted the speedy removal and imprisonment of a majority, if not all, of the newly appointed Aumils, whose personal wealth only, and by no means their capacity for the trust, has induced their nomination to those offices.

9. I have further submitted to his Excellency, that individual wealth among his subjects, and the sources from which it was derived, are now nearly at an end, and must very shortly be exhausted: and that, ultimately, when the soil of his dominions and industrious cultivators of that soil must form the only sources of his revenue, he will find the first to be totally unproductive, and will search for the latter in vain.

10. I have even thought it my duty to hint to him, that the measures of rigour which he has practised and now meditates against the dependants of Almass Alee Khan, who unwarily permitted themselves to be entangled in the net of official responsibility which his Excellency caused to be spread for them, are in direct opposition to the principles of justice and benevolence which I endeavoured to impress on his mind, by the commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, immediately after the death of Almass; and that, although a considerable portion of the balances of revenue, which his Excellency claims from those unfortunate and misguided Aumils, may be recovered by their imprisonment, and by the confiscation of their personal property derived from their late protector, his faithful servant Almass, yet that his Excellency's voluntary remission of a portion of those balances, his submitting to a loss which has been occasioned by the erroneous system of his Government, and the immediate correction of that system, as so frequently suggested by me, would be far more conducive to his reputation and to the future increase of his revenue, than the measures which he has recently adopted, and those which I have reason to consider as in his contemplation, with a reference to the dependants of Almass, and to the districts which were occupied by that Aumil.

11. I am sorry to have occasion to add, that my remarks and suggestions on this subject, although repeatedly urged to his Excellency with as much earnestness as considerations of personal respect would admit, have by no means had the desired effect, nor have they uniformly of late been received in so gracious a manner as formerly. His Excellency's leading passion of avarice and all its concomitant evils have, as is natural, increased with his age; and the reluctance and impatience with which he ever listened to remonstrance against the inordinate gratification of this passion, or against any other unjust measure of his Government, have lately arisen to a degree of peevishness and irritation, which renders the efficient conduct of the duties of my station at his court, combined with the observances and offices of personal respect and conciliation, a great deal more difficult than before.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

12. As an example of this latter remark, it may not be out of place to report to you, for the Right Honourable the Governor-General's information, that his Excellency having recently evinced a design to take advantage of the change of his system with regard to the districts of Almass, by whom and his successors in office the jagier of Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan had been farmed, for the purpose of converting this jagier into an annual pension in money, to the manifest loss of the Jagierdar, I considered it to be my duty to remonstrate against the execution of this design in the most urgent terms which I could use, and to state to his Excellency the impropriety of his adopting any new measures, with a reference to the management of this jagier, without the previous sanction of the British Government, at whose instance it was originally granted to Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan, and subsequently confirmed in the possession of his only son and representative.

13. His Excellency did not hesitate to avow and support his resolution of superseding Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan's authority in the jagier, by conferring the future management of it on an Aumil of his own selection, who should pay a certain yearly sum to the Jagierdar; and remarked to me, with apparent irritation and displeasure, that Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan would never have presumed to object to the arrangement in question, save for the unnecessary and unprecedented support which I had afforded to this person and to others in a similar predicament.

14. I replied to this unjust and indelicate observation, that the support which I had on one remarkable occasion afforded to Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan, had been authorized and entirely approved by the Government which I have the honour of representing, and had manifestly proceeded on principles of the strictest justice to the person accused, as well as on sentiments of the purest regard for his Excellency's personal safety, and for the honour and reputation of his Government; and that I was sorry to have occasion to remark, that the result of the transaction to which I alluded had apparently given rise to sensations in his Excellency's breast which were unworthy of his enlightened mind, and could alone have induced the design against which it became my duty to remonstrate in the strongest possible language.

15. The above is one of the most important of a number of similar occasions, on which I have been recently compelled to address his Excellency the Vizier in language more forcible than I could have wished, or was, perhaps, strictly conformable with those observances which I have ever maintained in my personal conferences with his Excellency, and by which the utmost seeming cordiality has been preserved, amidst a great deal of difference in opinion.

16. I shall continue to take advantage of every proper opportunity of renewing my instances to his Excellency on the subjects of this despatch, and shall report the effect of them, from time to time, to you, for the Right Honourable the Governor-General's information.

17. The propriety of any active interference, on my part, for the protection of the dependents of Almass, in their new character of Aumils, against the unjust demands of the Vizier, and the question of the permutation of Tufuzzool Hooseyn Khan's jagier for a pension, are points on which I deem it to be necessary to request the instructions of the Government.

Palmer.

I am sorry to be under the necessity of preferring to you a complaint against the Aumil, Nowneith Roy, for his inattention to my requisitions, and the extreme reluctance he evinces to furnish me with the requisite establishment and supply of gunpowder for destroying forts and ghurries. Notwithstanding the most pressing demands from me, he has produced in the course of four days only sixteen Bildars and one buffalo load of powder.

I am now encamped within a short distance of several places of which I could obtain immediate possession, but there is no use in my doing so until furnished with the hands and materials requisite for destroying them.

I hope, therefore, I shall shortly be joined by Mohummud Ashruff, whose arrival I expect with impatience, as I shall be obliged till then to occupy my present situation, my measures being clogged and my movements impeded by the Aumil's obstinacy in declining to co-operate zealously with me, though in the service of his own master, the Vizier.

I personally stated to your Excellency this morning the substance of a letter which I had then received from Colonel Palmer, and perceiving the impression which it made on your Excellency's mind, I forbear, on this occasion, from offering any further remarks on the subject, but merely forward a translation of the letter, with a translation of another letter on the same subject, which I received, after your Excellency's departure, from Major-General Fuller, commanding the troops in the field. I am satisfied that your Excellency will now issue such orders to Nowneith Roy as will preclude any future applications, either for gunpowder or Bildars, from the commanding officer of the detachment.

I am still detained at this place for want of gunpowder to destroy the forts, of which, on appearing before them, I shall be put in possession.

Mohummud Ashruff, who joined me on the 11th instant, informs me he has no orders to purchase it, but that it will be sent to me from Lucknow ; you will see, therefore, the expediency of expediting its despatch as much as possible, and in large quantities, or my operations can never be completed.

I myself discovered, a few days ago, a fort of great strength, of which no report had ever been made, and which I am now employing the few Bildars I have in destroying. It is called Ahmarooah, and there are many such places, independent of those described in the list furnished by you, which I conceive it comes within the line of my instructions to destroy.

I am certain you will agree with me in the necessity of resorting to more vigorous measures than have hitherto been adopted by his Excellency the Vizier, to afford me the requisite assistance. My situation is extremely distressing;

Sir :

By a letter received, through Lieutenant-Colonel Martindell, from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, employed in the reduction of forts in the possession of refractory Zemindars, in the Vizier's dominions, I learn he has been under the necessity of entertaining an expensive establishment of Bildars, not only for the purpose of clearing the roads for the passage of the battering train accompanying his detachment, but for levelling the forts of those Zemindars as they come into his possession.

Owing to the want of pioneers at any convenient distance to Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer's scene of action, the continuation of the establishment for the former purpose is a matter of necessity, but for the tedious service of levelling mud forts will, I am afraid, be found very inadequate, unless assisted by the people of his Highness the Nawaub Vizier, to whom, in my humble opinion, a request so materially connected with the expeditious accomplishment of his wishes may be safely made, and in the propriety of which I hope you will coincide.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 18th November 1810.)

I have received your letter of yesterday's date, conveying for my information, translations of letters to your address from Major-General Fuller and Colonel Palmer.

Immediately on my arrival at the palace, I issued the most positive orders to Mohummud Ashruff and to Nowneith Roy, to furnish, without any delay, as many Bildars and as great a quantity of gunpowder as might be required by Colonel Palmer for the purpose of destroying the forts, and informed them that, in the case of any further delay or inattention, they should be called to a severe account. It has been represented to me by Nusseer-oo Dowlah, that a hundred and eighty maunds of gunpowder are ready, and may be forwarded immediately to Colonel Palmer.

of the Aumil.

The Arzee of Mohummud Ashruff, dated the 16th November 1810.

Dewan Zubber Sing, Talookadar of Puttee, in consequence of his elaka being on the borders of the Company's territories, has become refractory, and does not

not pay the revenue. This elaka is very fertile, and capable of yielding a large increase. The late Seetulpershaud, during the time he was Aumil, used to receive from Zubber Sing a very large and satisfactory assessment; but after that Aumil's removal, Zubber Sing paid only what he pleased. The amount formerly received by me from Zubber Sing was much greater than what is now realized, and the sum stipulated for by the late Rajah Newaz Sing in the fusly year 1216, was reduced in the year 1217, after the death of Newaz Sing, 27,000 rupees. Zubber Sing, notwithstanding that his elaka is now become Amanee, and measures have been adopted to prevent the refractory Zemindars of this Government from taking refuge in the Company's territories, has not attended the Aumil, but has sent a Vakeel to Nowneith Roy, who entered into an agreement with the Vakeel; yet, from the amount of this agreement for the fusly year 1217, although much lower than it ought to be, a large balance is still due, and withholden under frivolous pretexts; and though he formerly used to attend me in person, he has now merely sent his Vakeel, the consequence of which conduct on his part is, that all the other Zemindars and Talookadars expect their settlements to be made on the terms of the last year's assessment, and in those estates where a decrease is admitted, require their lands to be made kham, or to be farmed to them for a mere trifle, in which case nothing but loss will accrue; and instead of your Excellency's profiting by the measures which have lately been adopted, the employment of the British troops, the expense of thousands of rupees, and my deputation to the country, those measures will be of no avail. What advantage, indeed, can my deputation produce, if a settlement is now to be made for no more than the former jumma, which every ordinary Chuckludar could have collected in his district as formerly, without any assistance of mine; whereas, if the elaka of Zubber Sing should be settled at an increase, to my heart's satisfaction, for the present fusly year, all the other Zemindars in the district, who are now determined on withholding any increase on the Revenue of their estates, would then willingly come forward.

I have thus submitted to your Excellency what appeared to me to be my duty, with a view to the advantage of the State, and have only further to obey whatever orders your Excellency may issue, representing humbly for consideration, that the sooner the settlement is made the better, and that if much longer delayed, it will be very difficult to realize the revenue.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 21st November 1810.)

I have perused with great attention the copy of Mohummud Ashhruff's arzee, which your Excellency was pleased to transmit to me, and the contents of it have excited my concern. This person appears, by his own statement, in direct opposition to what was at first agreed on between your Excellency and me, to consider himself as deputed to those districts solely for the purpose of increasing the revenue, by exacting larger sums from the Zemindars than they have hitherto paid to the Government, whereas the basis of all my representations to your Excellency on this subject has been my firm persuasion and belief, that the country has already suffered greatly from the extortions of former Aumils, and that a settlement on the most moderate terms, particularly for the first year, with remission of all former balances to the end of the fusly year 1216, was advisable, if not absolutely necessary to the future prosperity of your subjects.

It is true that I am by no means acquainted with the state of the talooka of Zubber Sing, nor indeed of any other elakas; yet your Excellency will be pleased to remember, that, with the view of obtaining correct information on those points, I have often and repeatedly suggested the preparation and transmission of a scheme before the settlement should be commenced on; and had this scheme of a triennial settlement been furnished to your Excellency and me in the manner which I suggested, the embarrassment and vexation which now occur could never have been felt by either of us.

It is evident from Mohummud Ashruff's own words, that nothing but oppression to the Ryots, disputes between him and the Zemindars, and finally, disorders in the country, can be expected from his deputation; that the views which I had entertained, and for the satisfactory accomplishment of which both your Excellency and I have laboured so long and have had so many unpleasant discussions during a period of five months, must be entirely and inevitably frustrated; and that no satisfactory arrangement can be made in the present year. I entreat your Excellency to consider these circumstances maturely, and to take the necessary steps with regard to them, before every measure be too late.

I further request your Excellency to inform me what measures have been adopted with respect to the fortresses belonging to Mohun Loll Oopadhea, towards ascertaining the state of the fortress of Goree, and the despatch of the Bildars and gunpowder to Colonel Palmer.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 22d November 1810.)

I have received your letter of yesterday's date. (Recapitulates its contents.)

In one of the conferences which we had together, the subject of taking an increase of revenue from the mchauls of Sooltanpore, Pertaubghur, Dalmow and Barellic, was discussed; and you then stated your opinion, that an increase might, of course, be demanded, where assets for that purpose were established, but that, in every elaka where a decrease of assets was proved, remissions should be granted to the Zemindars.

As Mohummud Ashruff has stated in his arzee, that the elaka of Zubber Sing is very fertile and capable of yielding a large increase, but that Zubber Sing pays just what he pleases, and that even the jumma of 1216, in itself far too low, was reduced in the ensuing year 1217 fusly, &c., it therefore follows, that notwithstanding the capability of Zubber Sing's estate, he has hitherto, for a number of years, contrived to lessen his jumma, and now that a triennial settlement is about to be entered into with him, and the British detachment is in the vicinity of his Elaka, he should be compelled to pay the full value of his lands. If you, however, will suggest any other measures with a reference to this Zemindar, the necessary orders shall be issued in conformity with them to Mohummud Ashruff.

What you have hitherto suggested has been fully carried into effect; and the tenor of the proclamations which were issued by me, at your suggestion, shall in future be strictly adhered to. I before informed you, that the delay and failure in the preparation and transmission of a scheme of settlement was to be ascribed to the non-attendance of the Zemindars; nevertheless I have again, agreeably to your request, issued the strictest orders to the Aumils and to Mohummud Ashruff, to transmit it with all expedition.

With regard to the evacuation of the fortress, orders have been issued to Mohun Loll Oopadhea; but as yet I have received no answer from him. I also directed Mohun Loll Oopadhea to transmit to the Presence a true statement of the fortress of Goree; and he has represented, in answer, that he is unable to send an account of that fortress, as he is unacquainted with the name of the Chuckludar in which it is situated. If it be in Dalmow, it must be Gora, of which Deen Sahy, a Byse, is the Talookadar. If it be in the elaka of Behar, the name is Gorhee, and Girwur Sing, a Goossein, is the Zemindar. If it be in Sooltanpore, Gore is a large village, and not a fortress, containing strong and fortified houses belonging to Zemindars.

Strict orders have been issued to Mohummud Ashruff to procure Bildars, and he has employed as many as he could get, and I am certain that he will entertain as many more as may be procurable. Mohummud Ashruff some time ago intimated to the Presence, that Bildars had been entertained at the rate of two rupees and a half per mensem, on the condition of their being regularly paid every fifteen days, to which I agreed: yet Mohummud Ashruff having since represented that the Bildars demand three rupees per mensem, and will not agree to receive two and a half, I have consented even to this demand, with the view of precluding inconvenience from the want of Bildars.

I have understood from the Akhbars that Mohummud Ashruff has provided Colonel Palmer with eleven maunds and thirty seers of gunpowder. Seetula Bukhsh Oopadhea would appear to be in attendance, and to have had a meeting with Colonel Palmer. Orders have been issued for the despatch of one hundred and eighty maunds of gunpowder to Colonel Palmer, but it has been delayed, in consequence of the scarcity of hackeries. When they are procured, the powder shall be immediately despatched.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written November the 25th 1810.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 22d instant, in answer to my letter of the preceding day.

From the contents of Mohummud Ashruff's arzee, two inferences are, in my mind, most obviously to be deduced, namely; first, that he has hitherto been totally unmindful of the most important object of his deputation, the preparation and transmission of a scheme of the settlement, as repeatedly recommended by me; and, secondly, that he is bent on exacting an increase from every Zemindar and Talookadar in the district. Both these circumstances are, in my mind, insuperable obstacles to the speedy settlement of the country; and being so, it is my duty to submit them to your Excellency without delay, as, indeed, it is my duty, upon every occasion, to represent the improper conduct of your Aumils, with the view of enabling your Excellency to check them in due time. The correction of the errors of those Aumils must rest with your Excellency alone.

The excuse, on the part of Mohummud Ashruff, which your Excellency has been pleased to convey, for his delaying to forward the scheme, is, in my opinion, totally groundless. In the preparation of a scheme of settlement for approval, there can be no occasion whatever for the attendance of any of the Zemindars. It is a duty invariably and exclusively performed by the Seghadars and Aumils of the districts without reference to the Zemindars. The Aumil personally inspects the different estates, estimates the produce of the crops, and agreeably to that estimate the scheme of the settlement is prepared and transmitted, under the seals and signatures of the several revenue officers of the district, to the Presence for approval. When approved and returned to the Aumil, the Zemindars of the several villages are summoned to attend; and if they do so of their own accord, and agree to enter into engagements at the rate of assessment which has been fixed, the settlement is at once concluded, otherwise the measure of farming the estates to other persons, or retaining them in the hands of the Aumil, is then to be considered and decided on.

Respecting the fortress of Gouree, &c., I have attentively read the list of fortresses in the three mehals, which were furnished by your Excellency, and in neither of them have I been able to discover the name or situation of Gouree. This circumstance affords another material proof of the negligence and inattention of those Aumils by whom the lists of the fortresses were transmitted. With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that Seetulah Bukhsh is in attendance on Colonel Palmer, I suggest, for your Excellency's consideration, the propriety of your furnishing me with a correct list of the fortresses belonging to Mohun Loll, which I shall forward immediately to Colonel Palmer, with instructions to that officer to demand their surrender by Seetulah Bukhsh, and in the case of that person's refusal, to seize him and send him to Lucknow.

I have received your letter, dated the 25th, in answer to mine of the 22d instant, suggesting the propriety of the preparation and transmission to the Presence of a scheme for the triennial settlement, &c.

The case is this, that repeated orders have already been issued to the three Aumils of those Elakas, to prepare and transmit, without delay, a scheme of the settlement of their respective Elakas; and now, agreeably to your suggestion, I have transmitted the most positive injunctions on this subject to Mohumud Ashruff.

With a reference to what you have stated respecting the fortress of Gouree, "that you have attentively perused the list of fortresses," &c., I now transmit to you a correct description of that fortress, from a perusal of which you will be made acquainted with every thing regarding it.

With regard to your request of a list of the fortresses belonging to Mohun Loll Oopadhea, for the purpose of being forwarded to Colonel Palmer, &c. the case is this: what was formerly represented by Mohun Loll has already been sent to you, and I know no better measure than that which you have suggested. You may, therefore, desire Colonel Palmer to ascertain if it be practicable from Sectula Bukhsh the number of fortresses in the possession of Mohun Loll, and demand their evacuation and surrender, and in the case of Sectula Bukhsh's refusal to seize him and send him to Lucknow.

I transmit, for your information, a copy of the shookha addressed to Mohumud Ashruff on the 26th instant. Had I a list of the fortresses of Mohun Loll among the records, a copy of it should have been sent to you in the first instance: when I do get a list of them, you may rely upon receiving it immediately.

Enclosure.

Translation of the Shookha to Mohummud Ashruff. (Dated the 26th November 1810.)

Your arzec, dated the 24th instant, in answer to the shookha addressed to you, has been perused; and I am directed by his Excellency to inform you, that the particulars of the Elaka of Deenah Sing, which has been mentioned in a cursory manner, should have been represented more explicitly in detail. Byreesall is himself very dilatory in paying the dues of the Government, and therefore of what use is his security for any other Zemindar. Roy Diakrishen will leave this to-morrow and proceed towards your quarter. The Roy is sent to arrange matters in conjunction with you, and to adjust the balances of revenue for the year 1217 fusly, which you will accordingly proceed to adjust in concert with the Roy, and transmit the papers as soon as possible to the Presence.

With regard to the settlement of the arrears of Behadur Sing, Zemindar of Pertaubghur, it is necessary that, agreeably to the tenor of the proclamation which has been issued at the suggestion of the Resident and forwarded to the commanding officer of the troops, you remit the whole of the balances for the year 1216 fusly, and labour to obtain proper security for the balances of 1217, and the revenue of the current year 1218 to be settled with the several Zemindars. If an increase of assets beyond the former assessment of any estate be established, of course an increase must be demanded, but otherwise no increase should be required. Orders were issued to Nowneith Roy for the transmission of the jumma wasilbaukee account for 1217; and if, in the realization of the revenues for the fusly years 1217 and 1218, there should be any unnecessary delay, you will immediately apply to the commanding officer, who will take the necessary steps to realize it.

Description

Description of the Fortress of Goree.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Enclosure in
Vizier's Letter.

Deen Sahy, a Byse, is the Talookadar of Goree, &c., extending from Dal-mow in an easterly direction about five coss. In the talooka of Goree Khass there is a fortress, enclosing about forty-five begahs of ground, surrounded by a parapet wall about three yards broad and six yards high : it contains ten bastions. Towards the west is a large gate and five bastions, two of which are immediately connected with the gate, that is, one a little before and the other in a line with the gateway. On this wall are also three other bastions. Two bastions are on the north and two on the south walls. To the east there is a small gate, which is defended by a strong square bastion about eleven yards in breadth and nine yards in height, pierced with loop-holes. The fortress is encompassed by a very deep ditch, excepting the west side : it has on the other sides a very thick and extensive jungle, beyond which is a large jheel. Within the fortress are habitations of Ryots. Near the portal of the fortress, to the west, is a house in which the family of the Talookadar reside : there are also out-offices of every description within the fortress, such as stables, elephant-houses, and houses for the Sepoys, &c. About a gun-shot from the west wall of the fortress there is a large tank, on which there are a number of babool trees. Whenever the Talookadar resists the Aumil's authority, he generally commences firing from this tank ; and when compelled to give up this situation, here turns to the fortress, and keeps up a fire from thence on the Aumil's people. The Talookadar has in his possession two elephants, ten horses, three mares, three hackeries of four bullocks each, and two of two bullocks each, seventeen camels, and has constantly in his service five hundred Sepoys. On his opposing the authority of the Aumil he is assisted by Sheopershaud Byse, Talookadar of Singurpore, in the Elaka of Dulmow, Zalim Sing, the banished Talookadar of Buddree in Behar, and the Zemindars of Tilooce in the Elaka of Salone. In the fusly year 1213, Deen Sahy fought with the Naib of Joogul Kishore. He gives the kuboolcat of his Elaka himself. He has erected this fortress since the time of Joogul Kishore, before which period there was no fortress in Goree.

Sir :

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 5th instant, the communications contained in which, and in your preceding despatch of the 7th ultimo, have engaged the deliberate attention of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

2. The tenor of your several instructions to the officers commanding the British troops in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, for the guidance of their conduct in executing the duty of reducing to obedience the refractory Zemindars of those districts and destroying their forts, and the measures which you have suggested to his Excellency the Vizier, with a view to facilitate the accomplishment of those objects, and your unwearied exertions to induce his Excellency to give effect to them, are entirely approved by the Governor-General in Council.

3. His Lordship in Council more especially approves the arrangement which you proposed to his Excellency for the future settlement of the districts, as detailed in your letter to his address of the 8th of October, and laments the obstacles referable to the injudicious proceedings of his Excellency himself, by which that arrangement has been frustrated.

4. His Lordship in Council laments the failure of your repeated endeavours to induce his Excellency to alter the destructive system of management which prevails, with respect to the extensive districts formerly under the charge of the late Almass Alee Khan.

5. The interests of the British Government, however, are too deeply concerned in the reform of the present vicious system of administration in his Excellency's Excellency's dominions, to permit his Lordship in Council tacitly to acquiesce in its continuance. To the evils and abuses of that system, to the oppression and injustice which naturally flow from it, are principally to be ascribed those disorders which the British troops are so frequently employed to suppress. This Government has ever viewed with painful regret the employment of its troops in services of this nature, the general tendency of which has necessarily been to uphold and encourage those acts of violence, injustice, and extortion which a system erroneous in its principle and oppressive, in its operation cannot fail to engender.

6. It concerns the reputation of the British Government, therefore, as well as its interest, to interpose the weight of its influence, for the introduction of a reform which may relieve us from the imputation of being the instruments of oppression and injustice, of perpetuating the practical gradation of evils and abuses, which, unsupported by the military power of the Company, would speedily produce their natural consequences, successful resistance to the authority of the Vizier, and general anarchy and confusion throughout his Excellency's dominions.

7. Your efforts of persuasion and remonstrance, which appear to his Lordship in Council to have been employed with distinguished judgment and unremitted zeal and assiduity, having proved unavailing, the Governor-General in Council deems it his duty to interpose the influence of the British Government, in a more direct and decided form. Accordingly the Governor-General has addressed a letter to his Excellency the Vizier, referring to recent transactions, noticing the evils and errors of the existing system of the administration of the revenue, and suggesting the outline of a plan of reform which is recommended for his Excellency's adoption.

8. An English copy of that letter is enclosed for your information: the original, in the Persian language, will be transmitted to you from the Persian department.

9. The Governor-General in Council, adverting to the character and established habits of the Vizier, does not entertain any sanguine hopes, that either the proposed arrangement will be carried into complete effect, or that the engagements which may be concluded under it will be faithfully adhered to. It is to be apprehended, that his Excellency will not be induced to accede to the terms of a just and moderate assessment, to sacrifice, for the hope of some permanent but distant benefit, any prospect, however fallacious, of immediate pecuniary profit; that, while he acquiesces in the expediency of the plan, he will interpose obstacles to its efficient execution; and that its operation will be, in a great measure, defeated by practices and abuses, which the ordinances of a wise and well constituted Government, or a strong and steady principle of justice in the governing power, is alone capable of restraining; at the same time, even a defective execution of the plan will be attended with some advantage. The engagements which may be concluded will, at least, form a criterion by which to judge of the merits of complaints of oppression, to regulate demands, to afford relief, or to inflict punishment; and some foundation will be laid for the gradual improvement of the system of administration. At all events, this Government discharges a positive duty, by employing its efforts for the correction of evils affecting its own interests, the interests of humanity and justice, those of his Excellency and of his subjects, and the prosperity and tranquillity of his dominions; and we preserve, by asserting and exercising it, that right of interference, which by disuse might prescriptively be lost or essentially impaired, and which, if not on the present, may on some future occasion be efficiently exercised.

10. The Governor-General's letter to the Vizier's address is intended to support the renewal of those efforts, which you have already so laudably, but ineffectually, employed for the reform of the present ruinous and oppressive system of assessment and collection.

11. It is not necessary that you should insist on an adherence to the strict letter of the arrangement suggested in the Governor-General's letter. Some modifications of it may be required by the state of local circumstances, and even even by the irremediable vices of the existing system ; but its four fundamental principles, viz., a just and moderate assessment, a settlement for a term of years, the conclusion of engagements by gradation from the Aumil to the Ryot, and the guarantee of those engagements, must form the basis of any system of modified reform.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

12. On your approved zeal, local knowledge, and address, the Governor-General in Council confidently relies, for any attainable degree of success in the execution of the duty thus committed to your charge.

13. The Governor-General in Council would willingly lay a foundation for the introduction of that most efficient and beneficial system of reform, a permanent settlement of the land revenue. It is not, however, to be supposed, that a country which has been rendered so unproductive by an oppressive administration, should in that state be ripe for a permanent settlement ; or that a sovereign wedded to so vicious an administration as that of the Vizier, should be brought at once to the adoption of principles and measures so foreign to his own character and that of his government. Such a proposition, therefore, cannot be brought forward at the present time ; but a fixed revenue from the land is, in other points of view, peculiarly suited to the condition of a government, which by its dependent connection with another, is not subject to great occasional increase of charge, defensive or otherwise, and the expenses of which, therefore, may themselves be considered as permanently fixed.

14. But although the present time is not favourable to so great a change, his Lordship in Council is of opinion that it should be an object of our policy gradually to bring it about, and that Government cannot employ the influence which it has a right to exercise over the affairs of Oude, either more usefully or more worthily, than first in promoting the general improvement of the internal administration of that country, which is the purpose of the present measure, and subsequently in introducing, if possible, at a proper season, that radical principle of prosperity, both to government and people, the permanent settlement of its land revenues.

15. You will not fail to observe that the Governor-General has not adverted, in his letter to the Vizier, to that branch of administration, without which no arrangement for the due management of the revenues can ever be completely efficient, namely, the establishment of tribunals of justice for the protection of the lives and property of the subject, for the detection and punishment of crimes, for the redress of grievances, and for the adjustment of disputed claims. His Lordship has been withheld from introducing that subject, by his unwillingness to press at once upon his Excellency's attention too many objects of reform, and thereby diminish the hope of his regard to any. A system of judicial administration, however, is so intimately connected with the efficient operation of the proposed arrangement for the assessment and realization of the revenues, that the future, if not the immediate establishment of it, must be kept in view. It will be proper, therefore, that you should be prepared, at a convenient season, to urge this important topic ; and to facilitate your eventual representations on this subject, I am directed to trace the general outlines and principles of the system of judicial administration which should be recommended to his Excellency's adoption, although little hope can be entertained that he will ever be induced to adopt it more than partially, if he adopt it at all. Still, however, in bringing formally to the notice of the Vizier the vices and abuses of his administration, and in proposing a reform, it is necessary to represent to his Excellency all the means by which that reform may be rendered effectual.

16. The principles by which alone any efficient system of judicial arrangement can be regulated, must be those which form the basis of that system within our territories.

17. The first and fundamental measure would be to deprive the Aumils, landholders, and farmers, of the civil and criminal jurisdiction which they at present exercise with control.

18. Courts of justice should be established in all the districts under his Excellency's authority. These courts should be subject to the control and superintendence

Consultations,

from Secretary to

superintendence of a general court of justice to be established at the capital with appellate jurisdiction.

19. The provincial courts should not be subject to the authority and control of the Aumils. On the contrary, the Aumils themselves, as well as every other description of persons residing within the several districts, should be amenable to the local courts of justice, or at least to the superior court established at the capital.

20. The judges of the provincial courts should be amenable for all acts done in their official capacity, or otherwise, either to the superior court at the capital or to the intermediate courts, if it should be judged necessary to establish such.

21. This arrangement should be combined with an efficient system of police throughout the country, calculated to secure the apprehension of offenders for the purpose of bringing them to justice.

22. This general system, modified as it necessarily must be in its details according to local circumstances and to the constitution of the Government, would obviously be the most efficient; but no hope can, perhaps, be entertained, that his Excellency will ever be induced to adopt it in its fullest extent. Even the charges of its establishment would appear to his Excellency to overbalance all the advantages of its adoption. He might possibly be persuaded, however, gradually to introduce some local tribunals, and lodge the control of their proceedings in a competent court established at the capital; and the establishment of any channel through which complaints might be heard, grievances redressed, and crimes brought to light and punished, would yet be a positive advantage, and might, at least, lay the foundation of a more improved system of judicial administration.

23. It is premature to enter into any discussion of the details of this suggested measure: they will naturally arise out of the negotiation, whenever it shall be in progress, and may be arranged without much difficulty.

24. You will observe, that the Governor-General has judged it proper to advert, in his letter to the Vizier, to the two points of reference contained in your despatch of the fifth instant. His Lordship in Council entirely approves the tenor of the advice and remonstrances which you addressed to his Excellency, respecting the dependants of the late Almass Alee Khan, and the resumption of Tufuzzool Hoossein Khan's jagier, and desires that you will renew your representations on both those subjects, under the express sanction of the Governor-General's authority.

25. Our right to demand the adoption of more just and lenient proceedings with respect to the unfortunate family of Almass Alee Khan, than those which his Excellency has hitherto pursued, is more questionable than that which we possess, and are bound, indeed, by every obligation of justice, to exercise, of securing the family of the late Tufuzzool Hoossein Khan from the effects of his Excellency's disposition to injure their condition. You will renew your efforts of persuasion in favour of the former; but with regard to the latter, you will distinctly signify to his Excellency, that the British Government considers itself as the guarantee of their rights, derived from his predecessor, and cannot acquiesce in any violation of them. I am directed to observe, that you repelled with proper spirit the ungenerous insinuations into which his Excellency suffered himself to be betrayed, on the occasion of your remonstrating against the assumption of Tufuzzool Hoossein Khan's jagier.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 28th December 1810.)

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

From the
Governor-General.

The Resident has regularly reported to me the details of his correspondence and the substance of his personal communications with your Excellency, on the subject of the measures which have been pursued with respect to the refractory Zemindars in the districts of Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore, &c. The satisfaction with which I observed your Excellency's acquiescence in the judicious arrangements suggested by the Resident, with a view to the settlement of those districts on principles calculated to obviate the occurrence of those disorders, which have so repeatedly required the employment of the British troops, and to secure the regular realization of your revenues, has been greatly impaired, by perceiving the obstacles which the conduct of your Excellency's officers has opposed to the execution of the very measures which they were employed to facilitate.

It is not my intention, in this address, to notice the specific causes of interruption in the accomplishment of the plan of arrangement proposed by the Resident, and adopted by your Excellency: these have been fully exposed in Captain Baillie's representations to your Excellency; but to solicit your attention to a few observations which a review of past transactions and of existing circumstances, renders it my duty to submit to your Excellency's consideration.

Since the conclusion of the treaty of November 1801, scarcely a year has elapsed in which the British troops have not been employed for the purpose of reducing to obedience the refractory Zemindars in your Excellency's territory, or of enforcing the payment of balances of revenue from Aumils and others, who were unable to fulfil their engagements. In fact, it may almost be said that the revenues of your country are collected at the point of the sword. As the burthen of these measures of rigour necessarily falls upon the Company's Government; as the British troops are employed at the requisition of your Excellency, or of your Aumils, for the suppression of every disorder in the interior of your dominions, from whatever cause it may have arisen; your Excellency will certainly admit, that it is the duty of this Government to make some inquiry into the sources of this evil, and that we are entitled to expect the adoption of such a system of measures as, in the judgment of this Government, is calculated to counteract it, without injury to the rights and authority of your Excellency, which we are bound by treaty to support.

This right of interposing our advice, indeed, is derived not only from the very nature of the circumstances above described, but from the express terms of the sixth article of the treaty, by which your Excellency engaged to establish in your reserved dominions such a system of administration, (to be carried into effect by your own officers), as should be conducive to the prosperity of your subjects, and calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants; and your Excellency further engaged always to advise with, and act in conformity to, the counsel of the officers of the Honourable Company.

With reference to this particular stipulation, the late Governor-General, Marquis Wellesley, in a paper which he delivered to your Excellency under his seal and signature, at the period of his visit to Lucknow in the year 1802, purporting to be a memorandum of the final result of the discussions between your Excellency and his Lordship, observed that your Excellency had engaged to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its counsels in the establishment of an improved system of administration within the reserved dominions, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of these dominions, and with the usual exercise of your Excellency's established authority.

His Lordship in the same paper stated, that the Governor-General, when the importance of the subject should require, and the nature of the occasion should admit his immediate intercourse with your Excellency, would offer the advice of the British Government to your Excellency, by a direct communication, either in person or by letter, although the British Resident at Lucknow was the constituted local representative of that Government, and the ordinary and established channel of communication in all cases whatever, and his advice was to be received as proceeding immediately from the Governor-General.

The

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Letter from
Governor-General.

The Resident, Captain Baillie, has very properly discharged this function of his office, by repeatedly representing to your Excellency the errors and the evils of the system which prevails in the administration of the department of revenue throughout your Excellency's dominions, and by urging the adoption of the measures best calculated to diminish or remove them. His endeavours, however, although to a certain extent encouraged by your Excellency's assent to some of his propositions, have not been successful: it, therefore becomes my duty, in the form of a direct address, to interpose the earnest advice and recommendation of the British Government on this important subject.

The evils and abuses prevailing in the administration of the revenues arise principally from the destructive practice of assigning the charge of the collections to persons who offer the highest terms; from the uncertain tenure by which the Aumils hold the charge of their respective districts; from the violation of the engagements contracted between the Aumils, Zemindars, under-renters, and Ryots; from the arbitrary and oppressive exactions which pervade the whole system of the revenue through every gradation, from the Aumil to the Ryot; from the defective and injudicious constitution of that system, and the injurious mode of making the collections.

It is solely to the prevalence of this defective and destructive system of administration, that the refractory disposition of the Zemindars, the failure of the Aumils and farmers in the execution of their engagements, the existence of heavy balances, and all the disorders which so frequently require the employment of troops, are to be attributed.

These evils can alone be remedied by an essential change in the system of assessment, management, and collection.

It would greatly facilitate the collection of the revenue, as well as increase the future resources of the country, if the assessment of the lands throughout the country should be regulated by the real assets of the several districts, to be ascertained by actual investigation and be fixed for a certain time, and if that assessment should be increased only in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the several districts, which might be expected to arise from an improved system of administration. The practice of assigning the districts to the charge of persons who agree to pay the largest amount of revenue, or engage to realize the revenue of a country already over assessed, without regard to character and qualifications, or to the actual resources of the lands, combined with the limited and uncertain period of the Aumil's tenure, impairs the sources of production, and encourages injustice, violence, and oppression; since the Aumil, possessing no interest in the prosperity of the country, and solicitous of deriving the greatest possible profit from his temporary situation, or of avoiding a failure in his engagements, which he knows will be followed by confinement and the confiscation of his property, plunders and oppresses without restraint.

The districts should be given in charge to persons of established and respectable character, and of undoubted qualifications. Their tenure should be extended and secured to them, whilst their conduct should continue to merit the confidence of their sovereign.

Fixed salaries should be assigned to them, and they should be allowed to derive a profit from the augmentation of the resources in their respective districts, an augmentation, however, which should depend not on the over-assessment of the lands, but on increased cultivation and population, which will be the necessary consequence of the introduction of a just and moderate system of administration.

The revenue to be paid by the Zemindars, renters, and Ryots, should be fixed, on a full investigation of the capacity of the lands, by written engagements, which should be guaranteed by the State; and no more than what is specified in those engagements should, on any account, be exacted from the parties.

The Zemindars and others with whom these engagements are contracted, should have the privilege of appealing to the authority of the Government against any violation of them on the part of the Aumils, who would thus be restrained from from oppression and exaction; and a similar restraint should be imposed on the landholders and farmers, with respect to the engagements which they may take from others.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
28 Dec. 1810.

Letter from
Governor-General.

The conclusion of a settlement for a certain number of years on just and moderate terms, has ever been found to be highly conducive to the punctual realization of the revenues; and to the prosperity of the country. If the demands upon the landholder are continually fluctuating; if the result of his industry and good management in increasing the cultivation and extending the resources of his land is only an immediate augmentation of the assessment, he is deprived of every inducement to exertion for the improvement of his estate, and, on the contrary, is tempted to obtain illicit profits, by oppression and injustice towards the under-renters and cultivators.

The evils of the existing system have, in no instance, been more strongly exemplified, than in the extensive districts which were under the charge of the late Almass Alee Khan. Those districts, far too extensive to be capable of being managed by any individual Amil, and assessed at an immoderate rate, were successively consigned to Ruhmut Alee Khan and Mirza Jan, the adopted brother and son of Almass. Both, as might be expected, failed in their engagements, and have in consequence been involved in ruin; and those districts have now, I understand, been parcelled out to a number of petty farmers, without any reduction of the terms, and under circumstances which preclude the possibility of the due realization of the revenue, without the gradual devastation of the lands and the ruin of the landholders and peasantry.

I know that the Resident has repeatedly represented to your Excellency the ruinous consequences of these measures, the impolicy and impropriety of consigning so large a portion of your dominions to any individual Amil, and the expediency of appointing a number of trustworthy persons as Ameens, to investigate and report upon the real state of the districts and the condition of the landholders and peasantry, with a view to a beneficial arrangement for the future management of the country.

The failure of his endeavours has induced me to notice this particular subject, in the hope that your Excellency may be at length induced to perceive that the continuance of this system must be attended with every species of oppression, exaction, and disorder, and ultimately destroy the productive sources of the country, and to adopt the suggestions which have so often and so earnestly been conveyed to you by the Resident.

I have another motive, also, for adverting to this particular branch of the general subject, namely, a humane consideration for the fate of the dependants of your late faithful servant, Almass Alee Khan, who were unfortunately led to undertake the management of his districts on terms which it was not possible for them to fulfil, and who are exposed to the rigours of confinement, and menaced with the confiscation of their property for the liquidation of balances of revenue, occasioned by an immoderate assessment of the lands entrusted to their management. On this subject I shall transmit particular instructions to the Resident, to whose representations, urged as they will now be under the express sanction of my authority, I entreat your Excellency's favourable attention.

It must be evident to your Excellency, that a system so erroneous and oppressive as that which now prevails throughout your Excellency's dominions, must necessarily render a large proportion of your subjects turbulent and disaffected, must perpetually occasion insurrection and disorder, and tend to the gradual but certain decrease of your revenues. On the other hand, I leave your Excellency to judge with what extreme regret this Government observes the active services of its troops continually required for the purpose of enforcing this destructive system of administration.

But I have already stated arguments sufficient to demonstrate the indispensable necessity of a reform of that system, and I have suggested the general principles by which it would be highly improved: I shall, therefore, only add my earnest request, that your Excellency will give your serious and immediate attention to the accomplishment of an object in every respect so important to your interests, your reputation, the prosperity and tranquillity of your country, and the comfort and happiness of your subjects, in which salutary work the Resident will be prepared, under my instructions, to afford to your Excellency every degree of assistance and support.

I cannot close this address without adverting to another topic, in some degree connected with the general subject of it. I allude to the intention which your Excellency has declared, of transferring the jagier of Tujummool Hoossein Khan to the management of an Aumil of your own selection, who should pay a certain yearly sum in lieu of it to the jagierdar.

The peculiar circumstances under which that jagier was granted and guaranteed to the family of the late respected Tufuzzool Hoossein Khan, and the extraordinary claims to favour and indulgence which that family has both on your Excellency and the British Government, render it a positive duty, on my part, to solicit your Excellency, in the strongest manner, to abstain from the prosecution of a measure so injurious to the interests of Tujummool Hoossein Khan.

On this subject I have directed the Resident to renew his representations to your Excellency, and I confidently trust that this appeal to your Excellency's justice will not be made in vain.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 9th February 1811.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir:

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copies of letters which I have lately received from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, detailing that officer's proceedings with the detachment under his command, in the suppression of the refractory Zemindars and reduction of the several fortresses in the districts of Pertaubghur and Barellic.

2. It is satisfactory to be enabled to trace in those documents the progressive accomplishment of the particular objects of the Vizier's Government, in which alone the responsibility of the British Government is involved, namely, the suppression of his Excellency's rebellious subjects, and the capture and demolition of their fortresses, without any of the casualties of war.

3. It is also satisfactory to observe, that the recent reports of the commanding officer of the British troops in Pertaubghur do not, as heretofore, contain complaints of the negligence and improper conduct of the officers of this Government, as tending to impede his operations; but, on the other hand, I am sorry to remark, that my information of the progress of those officers towards a just and moderate settlement of the revenue of the districts in question, or an arrangement calculated to ensure the permanent tranquillity of the country and the happiness and prosperity of its inhabitants, does not enable me, at present, to form any inference more favourable than that which was submitted in my despatch on the subject, dated the 5th of December last.

4. His Excellency the Vizier, however, has of late repeatedly assured me, that my suggestions, with a reference to those districts, have formed the basis of his positive injunctions to the several Aumils who are employed in them, and that a scheme of a triennial settlement, which he has reason to consider as satisfactory, will be furnished in a few days.

5. With

5. With a reference to the Vizier's recent arrangements for the large portion of his dominions which was formerly farmed by Almass, to his Excellency's rigorous proceedings against Mirza Jan, and to the suspension of Tujummool Hoossein Khan's authority in his jagier, the state of my discussions with his Excellency is exactly what it was when I last had the honour of addressing you. The newly-appointed Aumils have proceeded to take charge of their districts. Mirza Jan is confined to his house, in the daily expectation of removal to prison; and the management of Tujummool Hoossein Khan's jagier has been transferred, without his consent, to a person named Sevook Ram, the former Dewan of Meah Ruhmut.

6. This latter arrangement being intended and calculated to secure to Tujummool Hoossein Khan the sum of Rupees 40,000 per annum, as the clear revenue of his jagier, which is as much as it has recently yielded, is considered and maintained by his Excellency the Vizier to be no innovation whatever; while Tujummool Hoossein Khan represents, with apparent justice, the suspension of his personal authority and control over the lands as, in fact, the conversion of his jagier into an annual pension for life.

7. Having already thought it my duty to solicit the express commands of the Government on the two principal questions which are stated in this despatch, and perceiving the resolution of his Excellency the Vizier to persist in his own opinion with a reference to those questions, without offering any arguments which could produce an alteration in mine, I have abstained, and shall continue to abstain, from pressing my sentiments on his consideration, till I be favoured with an answer to my despatch under date the 5th December.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that I have obtained possession of the forts of Rajghur, Jugdeespore, Shahghur, Pooroobgong, and Bursowlee, of which I have demolished the former; but the other places are of such strength that I shall make but small progress in destroying the fortifications until the arrival of gunpowder and of the Bildars, of whom only eighty out of the five hundred, ordered by his Excellency the Vizier, have yet arrived in my camp.

This obstacle will prevent my moving from hence for some days; but as soon as they are destroyed, I shall proceed in the further execution of your instructions with all practicable expedition.

To Captain J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, and I have now the honour to submit to you the result of the inquiry instituted by me, in compliance with your desire, relative to the number of forts said to be in the possession of Mohun Loll Oopadhea, in the districts of Pertaubghur and Barellie.

I am at this moment occupied in destroying a ghurry named Bunnatica, and I have visited and carefully inspected a fort called Bholgongwa, which two places are all I can learn to be in his occupation. The latter place I conceive to be formidable to the Aumils; but I have declined destroying it, on his representation that it is used as a prison for refractory persons in the jagiers of her Highness the Begum, who maintains there a company of Sepoys and three toomauns of native troops for its protection. I would, however, wish to be favoured with your opinion on this head. Seetulla Bukhsh has most readily placed it at my disposal.

In regard to the state of the district of Puttee, and the circumstances and period at which the fort of Gowra, after its surrender to a force under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, was restored to Deen Sahy, to which you have called my particular attention in the second and third paragraphs of your letter, I shall submit to you, as soon as possible, what information I am able to gain; but I must avail myself of this opportunity to correct a misapprehension which appears in the papers accompanying your despatch, that Seetulla Bukhsh is in attendance on me. He has been several weeks with the Aumil, during which time he has frequently paid his respects to me, and is in no wise an attendant on my camp, and I carefully avoid interfering in any other way than using my influence to induce those who display reluctance to come in to the Aumil and superintendant, and which I have successfully employed, in many instances, to bring in Zemindars who never before could be persuaded to venture into their presence.

It has been represented to me, that Bowanny Bukhsh Talookadar is a person of excellent character, who has constantly paid his rents, always treated the Aumil with submission and respect, and in no instance availed himself of the strength of his fort, Gurrawlee, to offer the slightest opposition to the Government, but that he has the misfortune to be surrounded by enemies, which renders it highly expedient that he should be permitted to retain it for his protection: I should, therefore, be glad to be allowed to make this place an exception to the general orders to destroy all the forts and ghurries in the country.

Palmer.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that I yesterday received intelligence from Mohummud Ashruff, the Agent to his Excellency the Vizier, that a considerable number of people had taken up a position in the fort of Ahmarooah (destroyed by me last month), situated in a thick jungle which completely surrounds the place, and which they had strengthened by means of the stockades, and were committing great disturbances in the surrounding country.

I forthwith ordered against them a party consisting of a six-pounder, a troop of the Third Regiment of Cavalry, and two companies of the second battalion of the Eleventh Regiment, under command of Captain Agnew.

I have much reason to be pleased with the promptitude with which Captain Agnew executed my instructions, by sending forward the cavalry under Lieutenant Dunbar, with orders to surround the place to prevent their escape. All those who had not previously dispersed, on the arrival of the infantry and gun and the gate being forced open, were captured, to the number of twenty-seven men, among whom was the leader, a refractory Zemindar; and the detachment returned to camp in the evening, leaving a company to prevent their re-assembling.

The prisoners have been made over to the Vizier's agent.

The 23d February 1811.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to Government:

Sir

1. I am concerned to have occasion to transmit to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copy of a letter which I have received from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, commanding the troops in Pertaubghur.

2. Immediately on my receipt of that letter, I transmitted a translation of the substance of it for the perusal of his Excellency the Vizier, and I addressed a letter to his Excellency in the terms of the accompanying document, to which I was yesterday honoured with a reply, a translation of which, and translations of its several enclosures, are also conveyed to you by this despatch.

3. I have further the honour of transmitting to you a copy of another letter, more recently received from Colonel Palmer, and a copy of my despatch to that officer, under date the 23d instant.

4. I take this opportunity of acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated the 28th ultimo. The tenor of this despatch is gratifying to my feelings in the extreme, because it conveys to me the best possible reward of my humble though ardent exertions in the discharge of my public duty; the approbation of the Governor-General in Council. But it is also highly satisfactory, on the far more important ground of its affording that support to my exertions which must eminently contribute to their success, and ultimately tend to the reform of the corrupt and vicious system of his Excellency the Vizier's administration.

5. On my receipt of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency the Vizier from the Persian department, I shall be prepared to renew my efforts of remonstrance and persuasion on the various topics of that letter, and the general subject of your despatch, with additional energy and with improved means of success.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

I am under the painful necessity of making known to you, that contrary to the tenor of the Vizier's proclamation, "that the lands in this province shall be assessed at such reasonable rates as to render the payment of the revenue easy to the subject," his Excellency's Agent, Mohummud Ashruff, has lately, in various instances which have come to my knowledge, imposed the most burthensome and highest possible terms on many of the Zemindars, and I have the mortification to perceive that the presence of the British detachment under my command is made use of solely, though under other pretences, to intimidate such persons as venture a remonstrance into an agreement to conclude a settlement at the most exorbitant rates.

The obvious consequences of such behaviour of the Commissioner are a renewal of those discontents which have so long prevailed, and which the assurances contained in his Excellency's proclamation in a great measure caused to subside, a total distrust in such proclamations in future, and the difficulty which will attend the collection of the revenue, if the payment of it should not be altogether refused or evaded.

I deem it my positive duty to apprise you of these proceedings, that you may take such steps as you think expedient to prevail on his Excellency the Nawaub

Nawaub to put a stop to the unauthorized conduct of his servants, which necessarily tends to reflect discredit on the Government.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

With the greatest reluctance and concern, I submit, for your Excellency's information, the enclosed translation of a letter which I have this day received from Colonel Palmer.

Although the opinion which I originally formed of Mohummud Ashruff, from the contents of his own arzee to your Excellency, a copy of which was transmitted from the Presence for my perusal, has never in any respect been changed, and is exactly as now represented by Colonel Palmer; yet, having repeatedly submitted that opinion to your Excellency at an early period of Mohummud Ashruff's deputation to Pertaubghur, and having reason to believe that your Excellency's positive orders had been issued to him in the spirit of my suggestions, as well as supposing from Colonel Palmer's silence on the subject that those orders had been strictly obeyed, I refrained from urging your Excellency further on the subject, and contented myself with transmitting, in the discharge of my own duty, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, translations and copies of those letters which had passed between your Excellency and me, and which I had received from Colonel Palmer, on the subject of the proceedings in Pertaubghur.

But as Colonel Palmer has now represented the improper conduct of Mohummud Ashruff in such a light as to give evident grounds for the apprehension of the most serious disorders in the country, and even to induce the belief that the employment of the British troops in those districts has been rendered the instrument of extortion and oppression by the officers of your Excellency's Government, to the manifest injury and discredit of both states, I am again reduced to the necessity of submitting a solemn remonstrance against the ruinous conduct of those officers, and of calling on your Excellency to explain the cause of this departure from your orders, and from my repeated exhortations, in the propriety of which you have been pleased to acquiesce. If Mohummud Ashruff have asserted to your Excellency the justice of his assessments and demands, on grounds which seem worthy of consideration, let me be acquainted with those grounds, that I may immediately instruct Colonel Palmer to confront Mohummud Ashruff with the Zemindars; and, in the case of his establishing the justice of his demands, the Colonel shall be ordered to enforce them, or otherwise to protect the Zemindars. But if your Excellency shall reject this suggestion, it must then become my bounden duty, in pursuance of the orders which I have received, to depute an Ameen to the district to ascertain the real circumstances of the case, and report to me on the subject.

Letter

I have received your letter of the 21st instant, conveying for my information a translation of a letter to your address from Colonel Palmer. The case is this: no concern of my Government is ever concealed from you. Before my receipt of your letter I had received accounts of a similar nature, and in consequence issued my orders to Dyakrishen on the 18th instant, a copy of which is enclosed for your information, and from which you will not fail to be convinced that it is not my wish that the Ryots should in any manner be oppressed. Enclosure.

Translation of the Shookha addressed to Roy Dyakrishen. Dated the 18th January 1811.

Your arzee, dated the 12th instant, in answer to the shookha of the Presence, has been received, and I am directed by the Presence to inform you that the assessment of the kham Elakas, and the terms of the kabooleats, whether for three or four years, must be managed in such a manner as to ensure the realization of the revenue and preclude loss to the State, as well as the oppression of the Ryots and consequent discredit of the Presence. If exorbitant assessments be made, the revenue will not be collected and disturbances will be excited in the country. It is also desired that you make a settlement with the least practicable delay. It has been reported to the Presence, that the affairs of Sooltanpore are in a fair way; you must, therefore, after having made the settlement for Pertaubghur, proceed to the Elaka of Dalmow, and after settling that Elaka you must report to the Presence respecting the settlement of Sooltanpore, and act agreeably to the orders which may hereafter be issued to you. Many conversations took place in the Presence respecting the nankar of several mehaults, on which subject you were fully instructed before your departure; and it is very extraordinary that, though well acquainted with the wishes of the Presence, you should continue to act contrary to them.

With respect to what you have stated respecting the personal attendance of the former officers to compare the accounts, you must be well aware that the former Aumil, Peishcar and other officers cannot now attend you. You yourself formerly represented that the papers of Hoolas Sing were in confusion, and that the documents in the possession of the Zemindars must have been made out agreeably to their particular wishes and views, and were therefore totally useless. Your present representations on this subject are of course unavailing.

With regard to the security from Mohun Loll which you have stated, the case is, that that person was sent for by the Presence, and every mark of kindness shewn to him. He was desired to pay the amount which was settled in your presence; yet he has not hitherto paid any thing, nor come to any settlement whatever. If such be his conduct with regard to his own concerns, of what use is his security for others; therefore you must adopt some other measure.

With regard to farming the Elakas to Talookadars, and the terms of their engagements, which you have stated, you must endeavour, if possible, to make every Elaka Kham; and if this cannot be accomplished, you must adopt such other measures as may ensure the realization of the revenues.

A copy of the akhbar of Nowneith Roy is sent for your information, and you are ordered to make all the settlements in such a manner as to preclude disrespect to the Government, or oppression of the Ryots.

Enclosure.

Akhbar of Nowneith Roy, dated the 14th January 1811.

Nowneith Roy, Aumil, paid a visit to Colonel Palmer, returned to his tent, and about three o'clock p.m. went with the Ryots of Pertaubghur to Dyakrishen, and with him and Mohummud Ashruff transacted business relative to the settlement with the Zemindars. The above Aumil having returned to his tent at night, told Byreesal, the Talookadar of Rampore, that the orders of the Presence had in view the ease and convenience of the Ryots, but that the assessments of the the lands were made at a most exorbitant rate, and that if collections were made agreeably to those assessments the Ryots would inevitably be ruined.

Translation of a Shookha addressed to Mohummud Ashruff, 27th of Zeelijj, or 23d January 1811.

A copy of the Resident's letter, and a copy of the translation of one which was enclosed in it from Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, have already been forwarded to Roy Dyakrishen, and you are also directed to peruse those letters with attention. It appears from the contents of those documents, that your assessments are fixed at very exorbitant rates, notwithstanding the orders which were formerly issued, forbidding you to exact any increase which might be the means of distressing the Ryots, and eventually causing loss to the Government, both which are highly improper. You are further directed to make a just and fair settlement with Zubber Sing, in such a manner as not to give cause of distrust to others, nor to give any person cause to complain of your exorbitant assessments. Should Zubber Sing, however, prove refractory, you will, of course, apply to the Colonel for his assistance in punishing him; and if the Colonel agree, it is well, otherwise submit to the Presence the real circumstances of the case; but you are on no account to distress the Ryots unjustly.

I am directed to transmit to you a copy of a letter received from the Resident, &c., exactly as in the shookha to Mohummud Ashruff, with the addition of the following paragraph :

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your three separate despatches, dated the 4th, 17th, and 19th instant, the first and latter reporting your proceedings for my information, and that of the 17th instant describing the improper conduct of his Excellency the Vizier's Aumil, in imposing exorbitant rates of assessment on many of the Zemindars.

2. I entirely concur in your opinion of the expediency and necessity of putting an immediate stop to those unjust proceedings of the Aumil, and I have accordingly addressed an application on this subject, in strong terms, to his Excellency the Vizier, the result of which shall be conveyed to you hereafter.

3. In the meantime, I deem it proper to apprise you that Mohummud Ashruff, being probably aware of your opinion of his conduct, and of your intention of reporting that opinion to me, has anticipated your report of his proceedings by an arzee addressed to his Excellency the Vizier, in which he complains of your having threatened to return with your detachment to cantonments, unless he released from confinement, and delivered over to you, certain Zemindars and others belonging to the village of Amrooah, who were confined for arrears of revenue justly due to the Sircar.

4. A translation of the arzee in question is accordingly transmitted for your perusal, and with the view of enabling you to convey a satisfactory explanation of the circumstances of which the Aumil has complained.

5. I shall be happy with this explanation to receive a detailed account of the several instances of extortion, or exorbitant assessment, on the part of the Aumil, which are alluded to in your despatch of the 17th instant, and arzees from such of the Zemindars as may have preferred complaints upon this subject to you.

6. I take this opportunity of recalling your attention to the third paragraph of my letter of the 6th ultimo, having reference to the fortress of Gowra, which does not appear to be contained in any of the lists of fortresses dismantled under your authority that have hitherto been transmitted to my office.

Arzee of Mo-
hummud Ashruff.

Translation of the Arzee of Mohummud Ashruff, dated 16th January 1811.

About twelve o'clock to-day Colonel Palmer sent his Chupprassie to me, with a message that he would march in the morning. I was sitting at the time with Roy Dyakrishen, and stated to him that the Zemindars and Talookadars of Ahmetie had not attended, and if I left the Elaka now it would be a very difficult matter to make them attend hereafter, especially as most of them were refractory. I therefore thought it would be advisable to remain two days longer, as by that period the whole of the Talookadars in Ahmetie would have attended, when we could take them with us and remove to Sooltanpore, where the settlement of both Elakas, Ahmetie and Sooltanpore, might be made. The Roy replied, that he also was of the same opinion; and I immediately waited on the Colonel, and represented the above circumstances to him, when he said that it was of no consequence, and that he would remain two days longer at my request. Shortly after a Bengallee and a Sirdar bearer belonging to Colonel Palmer

Palmer came in, and said to the Colonel that the affairs of the Zemindars of Amrooah had not yet been settled, though he had been brought away in confinement, and consequently that the Colonel was the cause of the ruin of this Zemindar. The Colonel asked me what they were saying; to which I replied, that about twenty days ago the Tufreekdar of Amrooah had given in a kabooleat for the sum of four thousand rupees, and though myself, Roy Dyakrishen, and Nowneith Roy, had admonished the Zemindar to liquidate this amount, yet he would neither consent to pay it nor cause the attendance of the Assamees to render his Elaka kham; consequently, that we were compelled to take a kabooleat from one of the Hissadars: but even now, if the Zemindar would give security for the just assessment of the lands, after being measured by the Ameen of the Sirkar, that we were ready to put him in possession. The Colonel admitted that this was very fair, and asked what more the Zemindar could expect. I then took my leave, and returned. About four o'clock P.M. the above-mentioned Bengallee and the Colonel's Jemadar of Chupprassies came to me, and said the Colonel desired I would send to him all the Zemindars and Assamees of the talooka of Amrooah whom I had brought in confinement with me, or else that the Colonel would return to cantonments. I replied, that it was not a matter of such importance as to cause the Colonel's displeasure, and accordingly desired my Chobdar to accompany the Bengallee and Jemadar, with the Zemindars and Assamees in question, to the Colonel's, and to tell him that, as I was convinced he did not wish for any loss to the Government, he might do with those persons whatever he pleased. The Bengallee answered to this, that I must not send a Chobdar with him, but might send him another day. I replied, that he had received orders to take the prisoners to the Colonel immediately, or else the Colonel would go away; why, therefore, did he not take them with him? I then ordered Culloo Chobdar to go with them; and the Bengallee said he would explain the matter to the Colonel. I desired my Chobdar to tell the Colonel that the prisoners were sent to him agreeably to his orders: that I had offered them to the Bengallee and his Chupprassie, but that they would not receive charge of them. The Bengallee and Chupprassie went to the Colonel, and stated whatever they thought proper. When my Chobdar sent in word to the Colonel that he was in waiting, the Colonel said that he had no business with him, and would not then see him. The Colonel sent for the Havildar major, and told him within hearing of my Chobdar to collect the Sepoys who were dispersed in destroying forts. My Chobdar returned, and related the above circumstances to me. I have never deviated from the orders of the Colonel, and yet he appears to be displeased with me and to act in this manner, on that account. I dare not lessen the amount of the kabooleat formerly given in, to the loss of the Sirkar, without orders, and therefore I await your Excellency's orders on this subject.

I solicit the favour of your attention to the annexed translation of a letter which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, and I request that you will be pleased to inform me of the particular nature of the circumstances under which Mohummud Ashruff has urged the propriety of your halting in any Elaka, and you have thought it your duty to decline a compliance with his suggestion.

From his Excellency the Vizier, to J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow. (Received 29th January 1811.)

Mohummud Ashruff has represented to the Presence, that Colonel Palmer is extremely impatient on the subject of marching from one place to another; and that although, on one or two occasions, in consequence of Mohummud Ashruff's representation that the affairs in the neighbourhood of his camp were not yet settled, the Colonel had promised to halt, yet again he seemed equally impatient, and could not be prevailed upon to remain.

As the settlement of the Elaka of Pertaubghur is now nearly completed, if the Colonel remain there a little longer, I make no doubt that the whole Elaka will be properly arranged; and therefore I desire that you will be pleased to instruct Colonel Palmer to regulate his marches and halts, for the future, as Mohummud Ashruff may suggest, and whenever Mohummud Ashruff may inform him that the affairs of any particular Elaka are completely settled, then and then only to march to another Elaka. In this way the affairs of each Zilla will be properly settled in its turn; whereas, in the case of the Colonel's hurrying on from place to place, what has been settled will again fall into confusion.

Sir:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, communicating to me the contents of a letter to your address from the Vizier, in which his Excellency notices a complaint from Mohummud Ashruff, that I have, in various instances declined complying with his desire to remain in certain situations a sufficient time to enable him to conclude the settlement.

In reply thereto, I beg leave to observe to you that I have invariably halted a reasonable and sufficient period to admit of his effecting a settlement of the country, though I certainly had occasion to decline a compliance with his repeated solicitations for further delay, as conceiving that I should thereby unnecessarily postpone the execution of the line of operations prescribed to me, and which I conceive to be, in the first instance, confined to the capture and demolition of the forts and ghurries with which this country abounds, and to obtain possession of which the presence of the force under my command before them is indispensable.

I beg to call your attention to the obvious necessity which exists of my being furnished with positive instructions for my guidance in this respect, and defining the exact degree of attention to be paid to the desires and requisitions of the agent, Mohummud Ashruff, which has not yet been done. I am well aware of the necessity of the appearance of a British force, to awe the Zemindars into a compliance with even the most moderate and equitable assessments, and am most ready to afford every assistance in my power, but I am of opinion this object can be obtained by a detachment from my force to accompany and to remain with the agent, and I perceive extreme inconvenience from the constant delay delay of the whole force under my command, in awaiting the slow progress of his negotiations, to the first object of the detachment taking the field, that of destroying the fortresses.

Bengal Political

I beg the favour of an early reply to my proposal to furnish him with a party which would be sufficient for his purposes, and to proceed myself into the Sooltanpore district, after having destroyed the places in this province which the advanced period of the season renders desirable should be done with the least possible delay. The whole detachment can be united and exclusively employed, should it be the pleasure of his Excellency the Vizier, in the settlement of the revenues.

2. The explanation which you have given of the circumstances which were stated in the form of a complaint by Mohummud Ashruff, seems to me to be entirely satisfactory, and has been considered in the same light by his Excellency the Vizier.

3. You will, therefore, consider yourself as authorized to proceed to the district of Sooltanpore without any further delay, after the forts in Pertaubghur and Dalmow Barellic shall have been demolished, leaving only such a portion of your force in attendance on Mohummud Ashruff as may appear to you to be indispensable towards that Aumil's support, in concluding his settlements with the Zemindars on just and moderate terms.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter of yesterday's date, conveying, for my information, a translation of Colonel Palmer's letter to your address, suggesting the propriety of Colonel Palmer's proceeding to the district of Sooltanpore with the force under his command, for the purpose of demolishing the fortresses and ghurries in that Elaka, leaving a sufficient detachment with Mohummud Ashruff for the purpose of the settlements, &c., and requesting a communication of my sentiments on this subject, with a view to your issuing the necessary instructions to Colonel Palmer. Your suggestion appears to me to be highly proper; and you will accordingly direct Colonel Palmer to proceed to the Elaka at Sooltanpore, and destroy the whole of the fortresses in the possession of the Zemindars in that district, without any exception whatever. I shall issue my orders to Fuzl Alee, the Aumil of Sooltanpore, directing him to attend Colonel Palmer, on his arrival in the district, and to continue in waiting on the Colonel till the conclusion of the service in that district. From the constant attendance of the Aumil two benefits will be derived, viz., first, the regular supply of provisions, and of every article which the Colonel may require; and, secondly, that if any of the Zemindars in that zillah make false representations to Colonel Palmer, the Aumil will

Sir :

1. In pursuance of the intention which was expressed to you in my private letter of the 9th instant, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for your information and guidance, the enclosed copies and translations of letters which have recently passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, on the subject of commotion excited and public revenue withheld by certain refractory Zemindars in the district of Tanda Mobaruckpore, together with a statement of some small fortresses or ghurries in that district which it is his Excellency's wish to have destroyed ; and a copy of a letter having reference to the state of the district in question, and of the adjacent districts of Akberpore and Dostpore, which I addressed to his Excellency the Vizier on the 12th instant, with a translation of his Excellency's answer to that letter.

2. The commanding officer of the troops at Sooltanpore, and the officer commanding in Akberpore, will both be instructed to consider themselves as under your immediate command, from the date of your arrival within the district of Sooltanpore, and during the period of your encampment in that district ; and the latter officer will further be directed to convey to you the most accurate information which he can procure of the state of the country in general, as well as to report to you, in detail, his own particular proceedings at the requisition of the Vizier's Aumil of Akberpore, from the date of his arrival in that district.

3. The communications of these officers, and of his Excellency the Vizier's Aumils in Akberpore, Dostpore, and in Tanda, will be useful in aiding your judgment regarding the measures which it may be expedient to adopt, for the subjection of the refractory Zemindars and reduction of the several fortresses in the three districts in question ; and I am disposed to augur the speedy accomplishment of those objects as the result of your judicious proceedings, under the instructions now conveyed to you, without any necessity for your advance with Statement of the several Ghurries.

In Tanda eight Ghurries, viz.

Enclosure.

1st. In the village of Jelalpore, attached to Bypooreh, is the newly-built ghurry of Bhoolpore or Phoolpore, which has a ditch and bamboo fence, and is in the possession of Burear Sing, the Zemindar of Gowar, in pergunnah Sooltanpore, and is situated to the westward of the high road from Tanda to Lucknow, about five coss from the former place. Ten matchlockmen are constantly in this ghurry; and in cases of resistance they collect a great many men to assist them.

2d. In the village of Buchoopoor is Tendooa, a strong ghurry with a bamboo fence. It has been in the possession of Dulgeet Sing, the Talookadar of Chandapore Bidhur for some years; is situated about three coss from the fortress of Tanda, in a southerly direction. Five matchlockmen are always in this ghurry, and they can collect a thousand men to their assistance.

It is surrounded by a ditch and thorny trees. Two or three matchlockmen, servants of Hoossein Alec, live in this ghurry.

5th. In the village of Teekumparch is a bamboo enclosure, capable of making resistance. Within this enclosure Bhoojawun Sing, Bootakee Sing, and others, have laid foundations of houses. About one hundred men are in this place; and in cases of resistance, about one hundred more come to their aid from the village of Zeidpore, in the Elaka of Meyhouray attached to Akberpore, which is the zemindary of the above persons. They are principally assisted by Burear Sing Buntley Wallah.

6th. In the village of Sabekpore is the house of Busawun Mokordhun, within a bamboo enclosure and surrounded by a ditch. At the gateway, Pursun Sing Rhywar, an inhabitant of the village of Surwa Pergunnah Umsun, attached to Akberpore, with five matchlockmen, has a thannah. When they oppose the Aumil they can collect about one hundred men. This place is situated about seventeen coss to the westward of the fortress of Tanda.

7th. In the lands of Noor Mohummud Newaz Zemindar a new house has been erected, having loop-holes in the walls and two or three turrets capable of resistance. On the east-side of the wall is a large deep pit. Ten matchlockmen are constantly in the house; and in case of opposition they collect about one hundred men.

Sir:

I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the British Resident at Lucknow, that I yesterday received a visit from the Aumil, who told me he had received orders from his Highness the Nawaub to attack the forts of Paahpoor and Dhware, belonging to Iherawah Sing, and destroy them; after which, in the event of his not paying the rents due, he was to be turned out of his zemindary; and that the services of this detachment would be necessary to carry the above into effect.

I further think it my duty to inform you that Paahpoor is a small fort in the middle of a bamboo jungle, containing at most about thirty matchlockmen; but Dhware is a strong well-built fort, capable of holding about eight hundred men, nearly surrounded by deep nullahs, extensive and thick jungles, difficult of access, and about one coss distant from the Goomty.

Iherowah Sing has not yet complied with his Excellency the Vizier's order for retaining only one hundred of his followers. He still has about six hundred in his pay; and it is generally allowed that he could, on a short notice, raise from seven to eight thousand fighting men. The Aumil is further of opinion, that nothing can be done against Iherowah Sing without a larger force, accompanied with heavy guns, and which I think will be necessary to ensure success.

Aumil.

The Arzee of Hyder Alee, Aumil of Jugdeespore, dated the 22d Mohurum 1226.

Yesterday Fukeer Buksh Khan, Zubberdust Khan, and other refractory persons, went to the residence of Sekunder Khan, Subadar, situated in the village of Purvizepore, under the pretence of celebrating the nuptials of his daughter, with the design of setting fire to the houses of all the Ryots in the village. On hearing of this circumstance, I set off as quickly as possible to Purvizepoor with the few Sowars I had with me, for the purpose of dispersing the rioters and giving encouragement to the peaceable peasantry. The rebels hearing of my approach instantly fled from that place, and I sent my brother, Ghous Alee, with the Sowars, in pursuit of them. On his arrival at the village of Kullianpore in Jugdeespore, he found the rebels prepared for battle; and on his nearer approach they fired several shots at his party, by one of which my brother was severely wounded in his left eye. The horse of Assud Oolla Khan was also shot in the breast, and another horse belonging to Noar Mohummud Khan was shot in the leg. Kootub Khan was wounded in the thigh. Hashem Alee, a Sowar, with his horse, and my uncle, Mohummud Alee, were killed in the action, and have thus sacrificed their lives in your Excellency's service. In consequence of the wound which my brother received, I have been obliged to return with him to this place. The rebellious conduct of those people has exceeded all bounds; and the other Zemindars of the district having so bad an example before them, have also become turbulent in the extreme, so that the whole district is in confusion, and the collection of the revenue at a stand. I therefore humbly request that your Excellency will be pleased to adopt measures for the immediate seizure and exemplary punishment of those rebellious Zemindars, and that a detachment of the British troops from Sooltanpore be immediately ordered into the district.

I have received your Excellency's letter of the 20th instant, conveying a copy of the arzee of Hyder Alee, Aumil of Jugdeespore, and desiring that measures be adopted for the immediate suppression of the disturbances which have been reported to you by that Aumil.

As this Aumil is one of those persons against whose nomination to the charge of the district which he farms I took the liberty of remonstrating to your Excellency some time ago in earnest terms, on the ground of his unfitness for the office, and as there is every reason to believe that the disturbances excited in his Elaka have arisen from his own mismanagement, I leave it to your Excellency to decide whether or not the employment of the British troops on this occasion might, with apparent justice, have been delayed till a due investigation had taken place of the causes of those commotions: yet, as it appears from your Excellency's letter, that Fukeer Bukhsh Khan, Zubberdust Khan, and others, Zemindars of the above Elaka, have rebelliously opposed the Aumil, and killed and wounded several of your Excellency's subjects, I consider their punishment to be necessary; and, with this view, I request that your Excellency will be pleased to direct the Aumil of Jugdeespore to proceed immediately, or depute a confidential person, to wait on the commanding officer at Sooltanpore, and to furnish that officer with a correct statement of the number of the rebels in arms, the particular places of their residence, and a description of their fortresses, if they have any; when the commanding officer at Sooltanpore, in pursuance of my instructions conveyed to him by the accompanying letter, will adopt the necessary measures for the seizure and punishment of the offenders.

2. His Lordship's letter to the address of the Vizier was received from the Persian department on the 17th of February last, and was presented to his Excellency at the Residency on the morning of the 23d of that month. After hearing me read it to him with attention, describe the circumstances which had occasioned so serious a remonstrance from the Government in aid of my repeated and earnest advice, and comment on the justice and necessity of the measures recommended by the Government, as well as on the mild and conciliatory language in which the whole of the letter was expressed, his Excellency observed to me, generally, that he was disposed to acquiesce in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's suggestions to the utmost practicable extent, and added, that he would bestow the most deliberate attention on all the subjects of the letter, making his remarks on each, as he proceeded in perusing it with care, and would convey those remarks to me in writing, for my own consideration and discussion, before he should prepare his reply.

3. On the 2d ultimo I waited on his Excellency, by appointment, to receive and discuss the remarks which he had promised to prepare for my perusal, and I received them accordingly, in a document unauthenticated by his Excellency's signature or seal, but verbally avowed to be his, of which the enclosed is a translation. (No. 1.)

4. After perusing his Excellency's remarks, and making some cursory observations on the general tenor and intention of them, being desirous of putting him in complete possession of my sentiments regarding the several measures of meditated reform in his Government, and of explaining to him the details of those measures, which could not be explained at a conference, I solicited his Excellency's permission to carry home his remarks, and promised to submit my observations on them, in the form of an official note, with the least practicable delay.

5. On the morning of the 9th ultimo I delivered to his Excellency, at the palace, the document of which No. 2. is a copy, with a short letter on the subject of it, recommending the early adoption of the leading measures which I had described, and which appeared to me to require but little of his Excellency's consideration. Copies of the proclamation and other documents, which are referred to in my official note, and were subsequently conveyed to his Excellency, are also transmitted by this despatch. (Nos. 3 and 4.)

6. With a reference to the seventh article of my observations, it is proper in this place to apprise you, that a material alteration has been made in the language of a portion of that article from the terms in which it stood originally, and which I shall here transcribe for your information. "It follows, that your Excellency's consignment of those meahuls, under the engagements which are now pleaded, was in direct opposition to my advice, or in other words, to the counsels of the British Government, and consequently that your Excellency, in so consigning those meahuls, may be justly said to have committed a breach of your solemn engagements with the Honourable Company's Government."

7. On the morning of the 12th ultimo, three days after his Excellency the Vizier's receipt of my letter above referred to, with the official note which it contained, he sent a message to me by one of my own servants, importing that he had a particular favour to request of me, which should be conveyed by a letter in the course of the day, and earnestly begging, by anticipation, a favourable answer to his letter. A translation of this letter, and an English copy of my answer to it, forming numbers of this despatch, I shall not recapitulate the contents of them. (Nos. 5 and 6.)

8. On the 21st ultimo I received from his Excellency the Vizier, by the hands of a confidential servant, the truly extraordinary document, of which No. 7 is a translation; and immediately on the receipt of that document I addressed a letter to his Excellency in Persian, and in my own hand-writing, a translation of which is enclosed. (No. 8.)

9. In pursuance of the resolution which is announced in my letter of the 21st ultimo, I waited on his Excellency on the 23d, and commenced the discussion of his replies to my observations, with an expression of my sincere regret for having consented, at his earnest request, to withdraw the imputation of a breach of his engagements with the Honourable Company, which was conveyed, on the most obvious grounds, in the seventh article of those observations, and appeared to be more than justified by his Excellency's subsequent conduct. I adverted to the want of proper formality and of due consideration for the British Government and its representative, which were manifested by his Excellency in replying to my public letter, and to an official note under my signature, by an unauthenticated document, transmitted in a blank envelope, without any address or superscription, and to which therefore, if his Excellency now avowed and declared his adherence to the contents of it, I must demand his signature or seal, for the purpose of conveying it to the Government, with such suggestions, on my own part, as the occasion justified and required. I entreated his Excellency to reconsider the serious nature of the remonstrance, and of the appeal to his justice and good faith, which were contained in the Governor-General's letter; and I reminded him of his original promise to deliberate on and discuss with me, in a grave and dispassionate manner, the several important points which were stated in that letter, in order that the result of those deliberations and discussions might form the basis of a satisfactory reply. I called upon his Excellency to acknowledge, or disavow, the obligation which he had come under to the British Government by the terms, if I rightly understood them, of the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession with Marquess Wellesley, and now candidly to declare to me whether or not, in his own judgment, he had fulfilled, or attempted to fulfil, the purpose of that obligation. If he had not, it was his obvious duty, I observed, to consider the present remonstrance of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as a solemn demand of the fulfilment of a positive obligation on his part, by his adopting the plan of reform recommended to him by the British Government, with whose counsels he had engaged to conform, or by suggesting and carrying into execution some other plan of his own, which should be equally calculated to answer the purposes of that obligation, namely, to provide for the security and happiness of his subjects, and to relieve the Honourable Company's Government from the extraordinary and disreputable burthen of supporting by force of arms an unjust and oppressive administration.

10. If such were the nature of the remonstrance, appeal, and demand, conveyed by the Governor-General's letter, I begged his Excellency to reflect on the manner in which they had been treated in the document then in my hands. His Excellency, instead of declaring his cordial acquiescence in the general plan of reform recommended to him by the British Government, and of manifesting that acquiescence by an immediate and cheerful assent to the measures which I had suggested for his adoption, had purposely omitted to notice a few of the most important of those measures, to which no plausible objection could be found; had made frivolous objections to others, for the obvious purpose of protracting unimportant discussion, and procrastinating the work of reform; had stated some extraordinary assertions, the inaccuracy of which was well known, and could be very easily established; and had evinced, by the whole tenor of the document, which I now begged him to reconsider, a determined resolution to evade at least, if not to resist, the salutary counsel and advice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, conveyed to him in the language of friendship, and in the terms of existing treaties, which were equally binding on both, and a departure from which, on the one part, might exonerate the other from a responsibility essential to the existence of this Government, and to the exercise of his Excellency's authority. Was the document in question, I asked, to form the basis of his Excellency's reply to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter? Would his Excellency, on reflection, desire that the contents of this document should be made known to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as expressive of the real sentiments with which a perusal of the letter had inspired him? And did His Excellency mean to persevere in the measures of rigour and injustice towards Khanazad and Tujummool Hoossein Khan, against which the Governor-General had remonstrated, in contempt, or in total disregard of his Lordship in Council's advice? If such were his Excellency's sentiments after hearing all that my sincere regard for his interests and a sense of duty to my employers had now dictated for his consideration, tion, his Excellency had nothing to do but to authenticate the document in question, by a letter under his seal, and thus to put an end to the discussion, until the sentiments of the Government should be known; for I declared my firm resolution of rejecting the document entirely in its present irregular form, and declining to make any written reply to it if authenticated, as being obviously intended to evade the fulfilment of a positive obligation, under the express provision of a treaty, which his Excellency had now for the first time been peremptorily required to fulfil.

11. Perceiving the impression of the foregoing remarks upon his Excellency's countenance, and being assured, after a short pause by his Excellency, of his sincere intention to abide by his engagements with the Honourable Company, as well as of his resolution to withdraw from the document to which I had objected all such expressions and remarks as I might now shew to be at variance with the intention that had thus been declared to me, I proceeded to the discussion of his replies in the order in which they are conveyed by that document.

12. With a reference to the conduct of Mohummud Ashruff and the other officers of his Excellency's Government, in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, I remarked that what his Excellency meant, if I properly comprehended his meaning, in the first article of his replies, as a defence of the conduct of those officers, was in fact an obvious proof of the justice of my imputation of neglect and improper conduct to them, in as far as his Excellency admitted that the scheme of a settlement which they had furnished, after a lapse of so many months, was unworthy of his own approbation, and had therefore been withholden from my inspection. That the frivolous nature of the excuses alleged by Mohummud Ashruff, and conveyed by his Excellency to me, for the delay in forwarding this scheme, had been fully exposed in my former letters to his Excellency, copies of which had been submitted to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and were alluded to in his Lordship's letter; and that, if such had been the conduct of Mohummud Ashruff, Diakrishen, and others, the select officers of his Excellency's Government, possessing ample instructions for their guidance, and supported by a large detachment of British troops, in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, no further proof could be required of the existence of some radical evils in the system of his Excellency's administration, and of the necessity of removing those evils by a total change of the system, in the manner which the Governor-General had suggested.

13. In his Excellency's second reply, I observed that he had purposely passed over in silence the two important and indispensable preliminary measures of reform, which were suggested in the second article of my remarks, namely, the division and subdivision of his dominions into departments and districts, so as to render them susceptible of efficient government, and the selection and appointment of Ameens with my advice and concurrence. That he had been pleased to announce to me, in general terms, the orders for the selection of Ameens which had been issued to his Excellency's sons, whose proceedings, under those orders, had been reported to me, through various channels, as exciting the ridicule of every wise and intelligent person in his capital; and that his Excellency had farther, as I conceived, with the obvious view of procrastination, required me to repeat to him in detail the qualifications of proper Ameens, though those qualifications were sufficiently described by the Governor-General, and amply enlarged on by me in my answers to his original remarks. That he had finally, in the article under discussion, declared his desire of restricting the deputation of Ameens to a few particular districts, which I should consider and represent as in a state of the greatest disorder, forgetting, or seeming to forget, that the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council had described the whole of his dominions, or rather the whole of the population of Oude, as labouring under a baneful and pernicious system of assessment and collection of the revenue, to which no remedy whatever, save a complete and radical change, could be applied with any prospect of advantage. Under all the foregoing circumstances, and with a reference to the 2d article of his Excellency's replies, it was now my duty to require a decided and categorical answer to the following simple question: Did his Excellency agree, or refuse his assent, to the division and subdivision of his dominions, in the manner suggested by me, and and to the subsequent deputation of an Ameen to every district of the extent which was stated in my observations, giving previous information to me of the character and qualities of the Ameens, with the view of enabling me to judge of their fitness and capacity for the trusts which his Excellency might intend to confer on them?

14. His Excellency, after some time apparently spent in deliberation, announced his assent to the two measures which are first above described, reserving for future discussion the proposal of my being previously informed of the character and qualities of the Ameens, and entitled to a voice in their nomination. This proposal his Excellency was pleased to describe as of a tendency to subvert his authority, and contrary to his interpretation of certain provisions of the treaties of 1798 and 1801. I replied, that I had frequently perused and considered both those treaties with particular care and attention, and could scarcely be supposed to have suggested, for his Excellency's adoption or assent, a measure contrary to the letter or spirit of either. That the advantages of the measure in question were, in my judgment, manifest and great, if not essential to the perfect efficiency of the new system of assessment in his dominions, and that I was fully prepared to support the justice and expediency of my proposal, with a reference to the provisions of treaty, and to every other ground of objection which his Excellency might be pleased to explain; but that I should willingly wave, for the present, the farther discussion of the question, and receive on a future day his written objections to that part of my proposal on the subject of the deputation of Ameens, which I should consider maturely, and answer, as I trusted, to his Excellency's satisfaction.

15. With a reference to the third article of his replies, I observed that it was totally anticipated by the drafts of the proclamation and instructions which I then held in my hands and presented to him; and that after perusing those drafts with attention, his Excellency's observations, in the third article, might remain, or be cancelled, as he thought proper.

16. The fourth article of the document in question I described as containing some extraordinary assertions, which I was fully prepared to disprove; but being unimportant, if not irrelevant to the general subject of reform, I should, on this account, as well as from motives of personal respect for his Excellency, pass them over in silence, and proceed to recognize, in the sixth article of his Excellency's replies, the only wise and satisfactory assurance which was conveyed by the document in question, namely, his promise of establishing an efficient police and courts of justice throughout his dominions, when the administration of his revenue should be reformed, a period to which I might now look forward with hope, and after which I should not fail to submit to him such suggestions as the importance of the subject required.

17. I then proceeded to the discussion of the seventh article of his Excellency's replies, every sentiment of which I declared to be contrary to those just and natural expectations, which were founded on the liberal concession that I had made to him in answer to his letter of the 12th instant (No. 5 of the present despatch). His Excellency had stated in that article, that the measures of his Government, with a reference to the districts of Almass, were in conformity with ancient custom, and had been pleased to infer from this statement a total want of title, on my part, to object to, or remonstrate against, those measures. For the purpose of repelling an inference so unjust, and so subversive of every principle on which the true relation between the two States depended, it seemed sufficient for me to quote to his Excellency the words of the Governor-General's letter, which his Excellency must have necessarily overlooked while committing the above sentiments to writing. His Lordship in Council had not only been pleased to declare his entire approbation of my remonstrance, in the strict discharge of my duty, against the particular measures in question, but had conveyed that approbation to his Excellency, with the grounds of it, quoted from the letter of the treaty of 1801, and of his Excellency's subsequent engagement with Lord Wellesley. The words of that treaty and engagement, as quoted by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, were, that his Excellency promised "to advise with, and act in conformity to the counsel of the Honourable Company's officers," and, "to conform to the counsel of the British Government, in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of those dominions, and with the usual exercise of his Excellency's established authority." Was the adoption of an arrangement, I inquired, for the management of a portion of his Excellency's dominions, yielding an annual revenue of thirty lacs of rupees, a measure less important in his eyes than an affair connected with the ordinary government of his country, or with the usual exercise of his authority; and if not, could I, consistently with my duty, sit silent in the contemplation of such a measure, under all the circumstances which attended it, without submitting my opinion and advice; or could my right to advise be disputed? On the other hand, was it not his Excellency's duty, I asked, in the terms of the positive obligation above quoted from the treaty, to have informed and consulted with me, before he adopted a measure of such importance; and was not his failure to ask my advice, nay to comply with my earnest remonstrance on the subject of the measure in question, a direct infraction of the treaty of 1801, and of the subsequent engagement with Marquess Wellesley?

18. With a reference to the practice of former Residents, I observed that during the Government of the late Nawaub Asuf ood Dowlah, and even under his Excellency's administration, till the close of the residency of Colonel Scott, Vakeels or constituted agents, on the part of all the considerable Aumils, were in constant attendance on the Resident, who was in consequence duly apprized of the state of the country in general, and of the proceedings of the several Aumils. That the records of the Residency in my possession afforded numerous instances of the appointment and dismissal of Aumils proceeding on the Resident's recommendation: nay, that the chief Minister of the Government, in times by no means remote, had uniformly regulated his proceedings by the Resident's counsels, and had rarely adopted a measure of any importance without his previous knowledge and consent. That the relaxation in those salutary and becoming observances on the part of his Excellency, in latter times, could not, on any principle, be pleaded as a dereliction, on the part of the British Government or its representative, of a right established by treaty, as well as by the nature of the alliance subsisting between the two States, to interfere in the concerns of this Government, or to interpose their advice and remonstrance for his Excellency's honour and advantage, and for the happiness and prosperity of his subjects, when circumstances should require that interference; and that the urgency of the circumstances under discussion, with a reference to the districts of Almass, although his Excellency had pronounced those districts to be in perfect order, was such as, in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's judgment, to require his own direct interposition in aid of my remonstrance and advice.

19. In answer to the concluding remark of the 7th article of his Excellency's replies, I observed, that his implied reproach against me, by ascribing the present interference on the part of our Government to my suggestions, could be considered in no other light than as a proof of the conscientious discharge of my duty to both States, in having faithfully reported my proceedings at his Excellency's court, and the substance of our correspondence with each other; and that I felt persuaded of receiving from his Excellency's justice and candour, at some future period, the most ample credit for my motives in every stage of those proceedings and discussions, which had now excited his reproach.

20. On my concluding the discussion of this article, to which his Excellency listened in silence, and without the smallest interruption, he was pleased to express his intention of withdrawing the article altogether, if his doing so would prove agreeable to me; but I declined making any request on the subject, save with a reference to the particular words, "that you should have advised me to desist from it."

21. To the eighth article of his Excellency's replies, in which his measures of inhumanity and rigour against Khanazad Khan had been justified, on the ground of that person being his Excellency's slave, I applied a variety of arguments, having reference to the condition and services of the late Almass Allee Khan, to the uniform interference of our Government and its representatives in behalf of that Aumil and his dependents, and to the birth and condition of

Khanazad,

Khanazad, which were well known to his Excellency to be totally incompatible with a state of slavery; and, finally, I appealed, with apparent success, to his Excellency's natural desire of recovering some portion of the large balances of revenue which were claimed from Khanazad Khan, and which must inevitably be lost by his retaining that Aumil in confinement; since no degree of severity that his Excellency could legally inflict would ever induce Khanazad to surrender his personal wealth in discharge of arrears which were due by sub-farmers and other subjects of the Government; whereas, the liberation of that Aumil from confinement, and his concurrence in legal proceedings, or his institution of such proceedings against the persons indebted to him, might quickly enable him to liquidate his Excellency's just demands.

The further progress and result of my discussions, with a reference to Khanazad Khan, being detailed in separate numbers of this dispatch, I shall not here enlarge on them.

22. The conclusion of my conference with the Vizier on the subject of his replies to my observations had a reference to Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, his Excellency's assumption of which, I observed, had been supported on the most extraordinary grounds that could possibly be urged for such a measure. "Your Excellency is not inclined, (I remarked) to bestow lands in jagier, and therefore you have been pleased to resume, what?—the lands in possession of Tujumool Hoosein Khan, granted recently, no doubt, by yourself, and but for a time, or perhaps possessed by Tujumool under your Excellency's tacit consent, without a perfect or regular tenure: nay, the jagier of Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan, the father of the present possessor, conferred on him, for eminent services to the State, by your Excellency's predecessor, Asuf ood Dowlah, under an altumgha or hereditary grant, as complete and valid in every respect as your Excellency's title to the musnud, and recognized as such by your Excellency on the death of Tufuzzool Hoosein, under the guarantee of the British Government, in favour of his son and successor. Can your Excellency persist in this design? and is it necessary that I convey to you, in the words of the instructions in my hands, the sentiments of the Governor-General in Council, with a reference to this extraordinary measure, against which I originally remonstrated with an earnestness proportioned to my anxiety for your Excellency's honour and reputation? That the possession of lands in jagier by the subjects of any Government may be productive of public inconvenience, prejudicial to the paramount rights and authority of the sovereign, and even injurious to the good government of the country, is a proposition which I am disposed to admit, and the influence of which has been long felt and acknowledged in the Honourable Company's territory; but the resumption, on this ground, of a jagier in the possession of a faithful subject or dependent, under a valid hereditary tenure, without the consent of the Jagierdar, is a violation of personal property which no public necessity could authorize, and which the British Government can never acquiesce in, with a reference to Tujumool Hoosein Khan, or to any other Jagierdar holding lands in your Excellency's dominions."

23. A promise to restore the jagier in question, without delay, was now conveyed to me by his Excellency the Vizier; and he further requested me to furnish him with a draft of the several alterations which I required in the other articles of his replies; after which our conference broke up, and I took my leave of his Excellency, who appeared in perfect good humour, and reconciled to the result of our discussion.

24. In the course of the same day, after my return home, I prepared, and forwarded to his Excellency the documents, in my own hand-writing in Persian, of which Nos. 9 and 10 are translations. The subject and tenor of those documents do not appear, for the present, to require any remarks.

25. On the evening of the 29th ultimo, I received a short letter from his Excellency the Vizier, conveying and referring to, as authentic, his first amended replies, a translation of which is enclosed (No. 11.); and being greatly disappointed in my expectations with a reference to the amendments which are contained in it, I immediately sent a message to his Excellency, imparting my request request of another conference on the subject as early as might suit his convenience, to which he replied by my messenger, that he would breakfast with me on the following day.

26. At our conference on the morning of the 30th, I commenced with an acknowledgment to his Excellency, that all the important measures which I had suggested for his adoption, under the instructions of the Governor-General in Council, had been, with one exception, assented to, and that I was satisfied as to those points; but that his Excellency having been pleased to retain in his amended replies, the whole of the exceptionable arguments to which I had objected at our former conference, and the greatest part of which he had agreed, at my suggestion, to withdraw, it became my duty to repeat, on this occasion, the observations by which I considered those arguments to have been repelled, and to record the observations in question in the form of an official rejoinder, for the purpose of precluding future misconception or cavil on established or admitted points. As examples of the necessity of this measure, I referred particularly to the seventh, eighth, and concluding articles of his Excellency's replies, in the former of which the right of the British Government, or its representative, to interpose its counsels, or remonstrance, against a measure sanctioned by custom, however unwise in itself, or injurious in its consequences, is opposed on inadmissible grounds, and in direct violation of treaties; and in the two latter of which, though the principal points be conceded, the rights of property and resumption are maintained by the same untenable arguments. With a reference to the two latter articles, I remarked, that I had peculiar reason to complain of his Excellency's want of consideration, from the circumstance of his having requested me to prepare and submit drafts of the alterations which I proposed in their terms, and to which he had cheerfully acceded, as he had also agreed to expunge the highly exceptionable words in the seventh article of his replies.

27. His Excellency answered, to my surprise, that the insertion of those words, and of the arguments regarding Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, was to be ascribed to a mistake of his moonshee, which should be rectified without any delay; but that he still felt considerable reluctance to retracting his arguments and claim with a reference to Khanazad Khan, whom he viewed as the slave of Almass, and consequently as his own property. I replied to this observation in the terms of my letter to his Excellency under date the 2d instant, which forms a number of the present despatch, and I shall not recapitulate the contents of it.

28. We now proceeded to the discussion of the only unsettled point which remained, namely, his Excellency's refusal to admit of my participation in his choice of Ameens, on the grounds which are fully detailed in the second article of his amended replies to my observations.

29. On the general question of a right in the British Government to offer its opinion and advice regarding the selection and appointment of officers to stations of high trust and importance in his Excellency's administration, I observed that this right had been constantly exercised, and had never once been disputed, since the relation now happily subsisting between the two States was established; that it was founded on the very nature of this relation in itself, and was clearly recognized and confirmed by the spirit of the treaty of 1801, and of his Excellency's subsequent engagement with Marquess Wellesley, as well as by recorded instances in practice during the Government of the late Nawaub Asuf ood Dowlah, and since his Excellency's accession to the musnud; and that if his Excellency's obligation to conform to the counsels of the British Government "in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of his dominions, and with the usual exercise of his authority," did not imply an obligation to consult and to be guided by the counsels of the British Government, in the selection and appointment of officers to accomplish a reform in his administration, it could not, in my judgment, be susceptible of any other interpretation.

30. In answer to his Excellency's objection, on the ground that his authority would be diminished, and that the Ameens would be disobedient to his orders, if I should have a voice in their nomination, I remarked that this objection, if real, must be considered as equally applicable to every other measure of his administration, nistration, adopted with my concurrence or advice, and had an obvious tendency to subvert the radical principle of the alliance subsisting between the two States, namely, the acknowledged dependence of his Excellency's Government and authority on the protection and support, which he derived from the Honourable Company's guarantee, and which necessarily required, on the part of the protecting power, a certain degree of participation in the counsels and acts of the other. That the particular degree of participation in the exercise of his Excellency's authority, to which the British Government was entitled, was so expressly defined in the treaties as to leave no room for cavil or doubt; and that the words of the several treaties which his Excellency had quoted in the second article of his amended replies, in as far as they had any application to the point now in discussion, were in my judgment manifestly hostile to the position which his Excellency had maintained, and which was further expressly controverted by the terms of his engagements with Lord Wellesley. With a reference to his Excellency's apprehension of the effects of a general knowledge among the Ameens of their appointments proceeding on my recommendation, I observed, that this apprehension should have been removed by the terms of the concluding article of the paper delivered by Lord Wellesley, in which the Resident was strictly prohibited from anticipating a disclosure of the result of any conference or communication with his Excellency on subjects of secrecy or importance; and that my practice, in particular, had been uniformly such as to preclude the smallest ground of apprehension in his Excellency's mind regarding a disclosure of the subjects of our correspondence, or personal communications, since it was well known to his Excellency that I depended less than any of my predecessors on the assistance of native writers, and that all my memoranda, or notes for conference, as well as most of my letters on matters of any secrecy, were written in the Persian language by my own hand. I then proceeded to comment on the advantages which were, in my judgment, likely to arise from our concurrence in the fitness and capacity of the public officers of his Excellency's Government for the important trusts to be conferred on them, advertng chiefly to the nature and objects of the change to be produced in the system of his Excellency's administration, namely, the adoption of such a series of measures "as shall be calculated, in the judgment of the British Government" (using the words of the Governor-General's letter) "to counteract the evils of the present system without injury to his Excellency's rights," and which obviously required for its success the utmost possible degree of harmony and unanimity between his Excellency, by whom the measures were to be adopted, and myself, in the first instance the judge of their adequacy to the objects in view. I recalled to his Excellency's recollection the rapid and beneficial result of the measures which he had adopted, with my concurrence, in Baraitch, and particularly his appointment of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to superintend the affairs of that district. I reminded him of my more recent recommendation of the same person to the charge of the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, and compared the proceedings of his present officers in those districts, the nature of our correspondence regarding them, and the state of the districts in question, with the proceedings of Hukeem Mehdi in Baraitch, the general nature of our correspondence on that occasion, and the actual state of Khyrabad and the other inehauls under the charge of this efficient Amil. I appealed to his Excellency's candour to decide, whether or not the whole, or the greatest proportion, of the unpleasant discussions which had arisen, and the injurious effects which had sprung, from his Excellency's measures in Sooltanpore, and with a reference to the districts of Almass, might have been saved and precluded by his previously consulting with me, or attending to my respectful suggestions on the subject of those measures; and, under these circumstances, being persuaded of his Excellency's cordial desire to avoid, and to guard against the renewal of such discussions, and the recurrence of such baneful effects, I trusted that he would cheerfully acquiesce in the only effectual preventive which appeared to be practicable on this occasion.

31. His Excellency continuing inflexible on the point of my participation in his selection of Ameens, though he declined to make any reply to my remarks, and declared the limitation of his objections to those which were already detailed, I considered it to be my duty to refrain from urging the point any further on that occasion, and expressed my readiness to submit my proposal, and his Excellency's objections to it, for the consideration and decision of the Government, before the proposal should be renewed. He answered, that I was, of course, at liberty to act in that respect as I thought proper, but that his reluctance to the measure was unconquerable; and as he considered me to be vested with full powers, if I wished to befriend him on the occasion, I would at once depart from the proposal, instead of referring it to the Presidency, where the decision would naturally be guided by the arguments which I might adduce. I replied, that this was by no means a necessary consequence, since we were all liable to err, and my opinions and proposals, if unjust or at variance with the spirit of any treaty or engagement contracted by the British Government, would not certainly receive its support or confirmation, however speciously they might be urged: but that the motive of my present proposal was one which could not be mistaken, and would, I trusted, be approved; namely, a desire for the accomplishment of the just views of the British Government, by a reform in his Excellency's administration, to his own eminent advantage, and for the successful conduct of the details of that reform, without any interruption of the harmony and cordiality between the two States, and particularly between his Excellency and myself, which it was alike my duty, interest, and disposition to preserve.

32. I then submitted for his Excellency's consideration and reply, a few questions, proceeding on the supposition of his choice and appointment of Ameens without my previous knowledge or concurrence, admitting the possibility of the acquiescence of our Government in this measure, for the purpose of trying its effects. Was it his Excellency's intention, I inquired, not only to exclude me from participation in the choice of his Ameens and collectors, but to keep me, as heretofore, in the dark with regard to the proceedings of those officers? Did he intend, as formerly, to convey to me detached and desultory papers and articles of intelligence, transmitted by venal news-writers, in the pay of his several Ameens, and to withhold from me every paper of importance or authentic document, on the ground that it had not been, or could not be prepared, or that he himself considered it as unsatisfactory? And did he continue to entertain the wish, or indulge the expectation, of receiving the support of the British troops to the proceedings and demands of his Ameens and Tehsildars under the new system, as to those of his farmers of revenue under the old, without satisfying me, or enabling me to satisfy myself, of the propriety and justice of those proceedings and demands? If such were his Excellency's designs, it was now my duty to undeceive him, and to caution him, in a manner the most solemn, against the fallacy of such expectations. The repeated and positive instructions of the Government precluded my compliance with any future requisition for the aid of the British troops till entirely satisfied and assured of the justice and expediency of the measure which those troops might be required to support; and I should be wanting in candour to his Excellency, as well as in duty to my employers, if I neglected the present occasion of announcing those instructions to him, and the necessity of a strict adherence to them.

33. His Excellency was visibly affected by the influence of the foregoing remarks; and after some further conversation on the subject of them, he took down, in pencil in his own writing, the terms of an agreement, with a reference to the conduct of Ameens and Tehsildars, which he promised to insert as a qualification of his rejection of my original proposal, declaring at the same time, with earnestness and apparent candour, that it was never his intention to withhold from me any information that I might desire, but that the conduct of his officers had frequently been such as to prevent his deriving or conveying satisfactory information regarding their proceedings.

34. With this observation our conference of the 30th ultimo ended; and on the 1st instant I had the honour of receiving from his Excellency, in a short letter of that date, the second amended paper of replies, which forms the 12th number of this despatch, and which being still extremely unsatisfactory, occasioned first my short letter to the Vizier of the same date (No. 13), a translation of which is enclosed, and afterwards, on the 2d instant, a remonstrance of greater length, in the form of a letter also, of which No. 14 is a copy.

35. His Excellency took two days to deliberate on the subject of my letter above referred to; and his confidential minister, Diakrishen, having now returned from Sooltanpore, and being daily closeted with his Excellency, I had strong ground for suspecting that some further evasions were meditated, and that pretexts for those evasions had been furnished by the Dewan, and were actually under discussion.

36. With the view of counteracting the pernicious counsels and designs of this person, and accelerating the satisfactory conclusion of my own discussions with his Excellency, I waited on him on the morning of the 4th instant, and expressed my surprize and concern at the apparently unnecessary delay which had occurred in his bestowing official form and authenticity on those engagements which he had cheerfully contracted at our conference of the 30th ultimo, and had even committed to writing, with his own hand, in my presence. I reminded him of the long period which had elapsed since his receipt of the Governor-General's letter, and of the natural anxiety of the Government to be informed of his Excellency's sentiments and resolutions, with a reference to the important subject of that letter. I hinted at the strange reports which I had heard respecting the agitation of his Excellency's mind by the counsels of some new advisers, and entreated him dispassionately to compare the nature and character of their advice with the suggestions which I had conveyed to him, in the name of his best and sincerest friend, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

37. His Excellency frankly avowed, that his mind had been greatly disturbed since the receipt of my last letter; that he had actually written an answer to it in terms which he disapproved on reflection, and had now resolved to suppress; that he trusted entirely to my friendship; that his engagements should be inserted as agreed on, and transmitted in the course of the day; and that every thing being now amicably settled between us, the pleasures of our hunting excursion would, he hoped, be free from alloy.

38. A suitable answer on my part put an end to our conference of the 4th instant; and in the evening of that day I had the satisfaction of receiving from his Excellency the letter of which No. 15 is a translation, with (No. 16,) its inclosure, the concluding number of this dispatch.

39. His Excellency the Vizier moved out of his capital to camp, at the distance of five miles, on the morning of the 7th instant, and I have this day joined, and had the honour of breakfasting with his Excellency, who appeared in high spirits, and received me with perfect cordiality.

I have, &c.

Remarks by His Excellency the Vizier on the Governor-General's Letter.

Received 2d March 1811.

(First.)

The satisfaction with which I observed your Excellency's acquiescence in the judicious arrangements suggested by the Resident, with a view to the settlement of those districts on principles calculated to obviate the occurrence of those disorders which have so repeatedly required the employment of the British troops, and to secure the regular realization of your revenues, has been greatly impaired by perceiving the obstacles which the conduct of your Excellency's officers had opposed

to

I do not recollect that, with a reference to the affairs of Sooltanpore, I ever agreed to a proposition which was not carried into effect, nor that you ever suggested any measure that was not complied with; except, indeed, the proposal of sending Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan to those districts, which was set aside out of mere necessity, and from a consideration of the unsettled state of his own Elaka. You yourself have acknowledged that what you suggested was carried into effect, and that to the execution of the very measures which they were employed to facilitate.

I issued my orders to the Aumils in conformity with your suggestions.

I transmitted for your information the arzees which I received from Dyakrishen and Mohummud Ashruff, denying the exaction of any heavy assessments of the country. If you can produce any letters or written documents of mine, in which I first agreed to a proposal and then retracted my consent, be pleased to send them for my perusal.

(Second.)

And your Excellency further engaged always to advise with, and act in conformity to, the counsel of the officers of the Honourable Company.

With reference to this particular stipulation, the late Governor-General, Marquess Wellesley, in a paper which he delivered to your Excellency under his seal and signature, at the period of his visit to Lucknow in the year 1802, purporting to be a memorandum of the final result of the discussions between your Excellency and his Lordship, observed that your Excellency had engaged to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its councils, in the establishment of an improved system of administration within the reserved dominions, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of those dominions, and with the usual exercise of your Excellency's established authority.

I am perfectly disposed to comply with the suggestions and advice of the Honourable Company's officers, and to adopt the measures which they recommend for carrying into effect an improved system of administration, to be executed under my own authority and by my own officers, in the terms of the paper delivered to me under the seal and signature of the Marquess Wellesley, a portion of which is copied below. I shall accordingly appoint Ameens; and after consulting with you and discussing the subject fully, whatever we may both determine shall be strictly adhered to.

Copy of the portion of the paper delivered by Marquess Wellesley, referred to above.

" His Excellency has engaged to " establish within his reserved domi" nions such a system of administra" tion as shall be conducive to the pros" perity of his subjects, and be calcu" lated to secure the lives and proper" ty of the inhabitants. This system
" of administration is to be carried " into effect by his Excellency's own " officers and servants, and by his " own authority. His Excellency has " likewise engaged to advise with, and " act in conformity to the counsel of " the officers of the Honourable Com" pany.

" In the establishment, therefore, of " an improved system of administra" tion within the reserved dominions,
" and also in all affairs connected with
" the ordinary government of these " dominions, and with the usual ex" ercise of his Excellency's established " authority, the Vizier has engaged to " advise with the British Government
" and to conform to its counsels."

(Third.)

It would greatly facilitate the collection of the revenue, as well as increase

You will be pleased to state, in a distinct manner, how the real state and resources crease the future resources of the country, if the assessment of the lands throughout the country should be regulated by the real assets of the several districts, to be ascertained by actual investigation, and be fixed for a certain term, and if that assessment should be increased only in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the several districts, which might be expected to arise from an improved system of administration.

(Fourth.)

The districts should be given in charge to persons of established and respectable character, and of undoubted qualifications. Their tenure should be extended and secured to them whilst their conduct should continue to merit the confidence of their sovereign.

Fixed salaries should be assigned to them, and they should be allowed to derive a profit from the augmentation of the resources in their respective districts: an augmentation, however, which should depend not on the over assessment of the lands, but on increased cultivation and population, which will be the necessary consequence of the introduction of a just and moderate system of administration.

(Fifth.)

The revenues to be paid by the Zemindars, Renters, and Ryots, should be fixed, on a full investigation of the capacity of the lands, by written engagements, which should be guaranteed by the State, and no more than what is specified in those engagements, should on any account be exacted from the parties.

(Sixth.)

The Zemindars and others with whom these engagements are contracted, should have the privilege of appealing to the authority of the Government against any violation of them on the part of the Aumils, who would thus be restrained from oppression and exaction; and a similar restraint should be imposed on the landholders and farmers, with respect to the engagements which they may take from others.

(Seventh.)

And those districts have now, I understand, been parcelled out to a number of petty farmers, without any reduction of the terms, and under circumstances which preclude the possibility of the due realization of the reve-resources of the country can be ascertained.

You will also be pleased to state to me, where I can procure such persons of established and respectable character, and of undoubted qualifications, that when procured they may be nominated accordingly; but if afterwards they alter their conduct, so as to remove my confidence from them, you must also tell me where others, possessing those qualities, can be found, to be appointed in the room of the former, and how the qualities of men can be ascertained to my entire satisfaction.

You will be pleased to state, in what manner a full investigation of the proceeds of the several meahals can be made.

When I shall have ascertained, with your advice, the actual proceeds of the several meahals, I will then cause engagements to be taken from the Aumils, Zemindars, &c. agreeably to the tenor of the draft which may be furnished by you; and if any person act contrary to his engagements he shall be punished.

Whatever has hitherto been done by me, with a reference to those districts, has been in conformity to the established usage of this country, and after every practicable inquiry into the real state of the meahals; not a single complaint have I yet received from any of the Ryots, nor has any discontent or disturbance occurred in the making of the collections: nevertheless, if it be determined, with or without a good cause, to alter the present system, I desire that you will point out such a manner of carrying this change into effect, as may tend to my reputation, to the increase of the revenues of my government, and the prosperity of my subjects at large, and at the same time may not be contrary to those engagements already entered into by me, so as in any degree to affect my reputation, or cause pecuniary loss.

(Eighth.)

I have another motive, also, for adverting to this particular branch of the general subject, namely, a humane consideration for the fate of the dependants of your late faithful servant, Almass Alee Khan, who were unfortunately led to undertake the management of his districts on terms which it was not possible for them to fulfil, and who are exposed to the rigours of confinement, and menaced with the confiscation of their property, for the liquidation of the balances of revenue occasioned by an immoderate assessment of the lands entrusted to their management.

On this subject I shall transmit particular instructions to the Resident, to whose representations, urged as they will now be under the express sanction of my authority, I entreat your Excellency's favourable attention.

As the Governor-General has transmitted particular instructions to you on this subject, whenever you renew your representations, I shall be prepared to give you an answer.

Vizier's Remarks,

Resident's Answers to His Excellency the Vizier's Remarks on the Governor-General's Letter. Presented the 9th March 1811.

I have derived considerable satisfaction from the general tenor of many of your Excellency's remarks on the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, because they evince a conviction, in your Excellency's mind, of the importance and necessity of a complete and immediate reform of the system of assessment and realization of the revenue in your dominions, and a desire of obtaining information regarding the best practicable method of carrying that reform into effect.

As it is by no means my wish or intention to revive any former discussions of a disagreeable nature between us, or to suspend your Excellency's attention to the future important arrangements, by any retrospect of the past, I shall pass over in silence the remark with which your Excellency has commenced on this occasion, observing merely, with a reference to the conduct of your officers in the districts tricts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, that the scheme of a triennial settlement for those districts, which was the first and most essential requisite towards a just and beneficial arrangement for the future management of the districts, as repeatedly and earnestly suggested by me, and as often promised by your Excellency, has not even yet been produced; and that although both your Excellency and I have been frequently told by your Aumils, and by Mohummud Ashruff in particular, that a moderate assessment has been made, and an advantageous settlement concluded, or nearly concluded, in all the districts under his charge, neither your Excellency nor I have yet been informed of the jumma of any one estate or village in the country, nor has a single revenue paper, of any description whatever, been hitherto submitted by the Aumil, whose duty it unquestionably was to transmit copies of all the engagements of the Zemindars, and vouchers of the statements in those engagements, for your Excellency's knowledge and approbation, before the settlements were concluded.

In short, I consider the districts of Pertaubghur and Sooltanpore, notwithstanding all that we have heard from Mohummud Ashruff and the Aumils, to be at this moment, and after all the trouble which they have occasioned to both your Excellency and me, with the exception of the reduction of fortresses, which we owe entirely to the British troops, in a condition as far removed from good order and advantageous settlement, as they were in the time of Hoolas Sing. But the measures by which the future good order of not those districts alone, but of the whole of your Excellency's dominions, is to be restored and permanently established, are now in our joint contemplation, and to the delineation of those measures I shall therefore proceed immediately, and shall submit them for your Excellency's consideration, in the form of answers to your remarks.

Your Excellency, in the second of those remarks, has declared your acquiescence in my original proposals, that Ameens should be deputed to those districts, &c. (recapitulate.)

Before proceeding, however, on the present occasion, to the adoption of this measure, let us first consider to what places the Ameens shall be deputed, and what duties they shall be required to perform. It appears to me to be indispensable, that a division of your Excellency's dominions into four or five Zillahs or general departments, of proper extent, and then a subdivision of those Zillahs into districts yielding an annual revenue of from one to three lacs of rupees each district, be determined on and carried into execution with the least practicable delay.

Then let an upright and intelligent Ameen be selected for each of those districts; and when your Excellency shall have made the selection, be pleased to inform me of the name, and character, as far as known to you, of the persons thus to be employed in offices of so high importance, that I also may endeavour to investigate their characters, and submit my opinion for your consideration; after which let them be ordered to proceed to their districts, respectively, under written instructions for their guidance, a draft of which I shall have the honour of submitting for your approval.

In the third article your Excellency has doubted the practicability of ascertaining the true revenue and resources of your country, and has inquired how this is to be done, &c.

The investigation and ascertainment of the revenue form the grand and sole object, and will prove to be the happy result, of the deputation of Ameens, as I have suggested. The duty of these Ameens, as prescribed by the instructions which I shall submit, will be to assemble and conciliate, in the first instance, the Chowdries, Conoongoes, and Putwarries of the several districts under their charge, and then to require from those officers the whole of the revenue papers of every village distinctly, for a period of ten years, with the wasilbaukec accounts of the last and preceding years, and the scheme or register of the settlement for the year now drawing to a close. Those papers, after the minutest investigation which may be practicable, to be transmitted, under the signature of the revenue officers, to the Presence, when your Excellency and I shall consider them, them, and be enabled to form an accurate judgment of the real resources and assets of every district in your dominions.

Consultations,

In the fourth article your Excellency has desired me to inform you where intelligent and upright men are to be found.

The absence or deficiency of such men as your Excellency has described is, in my opinion, alone to be attributed to the unhappy system of administration which has long prevailed in your dominions, to the instability of employment under your Government, and to the danger of personal dishonour, as well as confiscation of property, which attends even temporary employment. When those obstacles shall be happily removed by the improved system of your administration, your Excellency will find many able and upright natives, desirous of employment in your service.

In the provinces which your Excellency ceded to the Honourable Company, a majority, if not the whole of the native officers employed by the British Government as Tehsildars, &c. were the subjects of your Excellency's dominions; yet they, having entire confidence in the Government, performed their duties with diligence, fidelity, and zeal, to the advantage and satisfaction of their employers. On the same principle, under an improved system of administration for your Excellency's dominions, your Excellency may be perfectly assured that many able and upright men will be found to fill those offices under your Government; and I will cheerfully take it upon myself to procure as many as may be necessary. The proofs of their capacity and integrity, if possessing those qualifications, will hereafter fully appear upon an examination of the documents which they transmit from their districts respectively to the Presence; and those only should be appointed Tehsildars, whose conduct as Ameens shall be approved of.

In the fifth article your Excellency desires to be informed of the means of ascertaining the real state of the mehals.

The real condition of the country will, I doubt not, be fully ascertained by the appointment of Ameens as I have suggested, and by their exertions in the manner pointed out in my answer to the third article, and in obedience to the instructions which I shall furnish.

Your Excellency has stated in the sixth article, that when, with my advice, &c.

The intention which your Excellency has declared in this article is highly commendable; but the views of the British Government, as hinted at in the passage of the Governor-General's letter, to which your Excellency has here referred, and detailed in his Lordship's instructions to me, are still more extensive in their nature, and far more beneficial in their consequences, than your Excellency would appear to have conceived. When a satisfactory settlement of your Excellency's land revenue shall be concluded, and when the appointment of capable Tehsildars in all the districts shall have taken place, the establishment of an efficient police, and of a court of justice in each Zillah will be earnestly recommended to your Excellency, as a measure manifestly indispensable to give complete effect to the salutary arrangements which precede, that so a separation and distinction of the department of collection of revenue, in all its branches, from that of the dispensation of civil and criminal justice throughout the country may take place; that the subjects of your Excellency's Government at large may have the gates of justice, and redress of grievances, open to them at all times; that the hand of oppression or extortion in the Aumils, and collectors of revenue, against the landholders and peasantry, may be restrained; that the just demands of those Aumils and collectors against the landholders and peasantry may be enforced, if necessary, by the regular process of the law, and the revenues of the Government may thus be duly realized; that the lives and property of the subjects may be protected, and the detection and punishment of thieves and murderers may be ensured.

Your

Your Excellency has stated, in the seventh article of your remarks, that your measures, with a reference to those districts, have been in conformity with the established usage of the country, &c.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Resident's
Answers to the Vizier's Remarks.

Although I have not heard that serious disturbances do actually exist in any other of those meahals than Jugdeespore, yet the ruinous consequences of the present system of farming are equally to be apprehended in all of them, while that system shall prevail : and on this principle it is, that a total change of the system has been so earnestly recommended to your Excellency by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as absolutely necessary and indispensable, to remedy the evils which exist. That the suggested reform will be productive of those benefits, will serve to increase your Excellency's reputation, and greatly tend to the increase of your revenue as well as to the welfare and prosperity of your subjects, cannot reasonably be doubted ; and, with regard to your Excellency's apprehension of a breach of your engagements with your farmers, it must be sufficient for me to remark, that having originally remonstrated against those engagements before they were entered into with the farmers, having repeatedly and earnestly represented to your Excellency the ruinous consequences which they would produce, and the failure of my representations having occasioned the Governor-General's remonstrance on the subject, it follows that your Excellency's consignment of those meahals, under the engagements which are now referred to, was in direct opposition to my advice, and to the counsels of the British Government ; and consequently that your Excellency's adherence to those engagements, or refusal to comply with my suggestions of reform on the ground of them, would necessarily now imply (which God forbid!) a departure from your engagements with our Government. Under these circumstances, I leave it to your Excellency to judge which of the two considerations is the most important. A departure from engagements with those farmers, which were entered into contrary to my advice, or in other words, to the terms of your engagements with the Company, if productive of loss to the farmers, may very easily be repaired, without injury to your Excellency's reputation ; whereas a breach of your engagements with the Company may be productive of the most ruinous effects, and an adherence to those engagements must be beneficial in every point of view.

Your Excellency has stated in the eighth article, that as the Governor-General has transmitted particular instructions, &c.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General has left little for me to add to his own earnest intercession in behalf of the dependants of Almass. Your Excellency cannot but be aware of the nature of my original instructions on this subject, which were issued on the death of Almass (vide Chief Secretary's despatch of the 10th of October 1808). In pursuance of those instructions, I have repeatedly, and on various occasions, had the honour of addressing your Excellency in favour of many of the dependants of Almass, and more particularly after the death of Ruhmut Alee Khan in favour of his women, and after the dismissal of Khanazad Khan (Mirza Jan), on the subject of the adjustment of his accounts, and the recovery of his demands from his subordinate Aumils. Your Excellency having been pleased to inform me, on one of the occasions in question, and in answer to my earnest representation, that I had nothing whatever to do with the affairs or accounts of Mirza Jan, nor any title to address you in his behalf, it became my duty to report this discussion to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, who has been pleased to notice it in his Lordship's letter to your Excellency's address, and not only to approve my former representations on the subject, but to direct that the discussion be now renewed, under the express sanction of his authority, and be carried on to a satisfactory conclusion, by the equitable adjustment of the balances which are claimed from this unfortunate Aumil, so as to increase your Excellency's reputation.

Your Excellency will, I trust, do me the justice to believe, that I am by no means desirous of occasioning your Excellency's loss in the adjustment of accounts with your Aumils ; and my recovery, on a former occasion, by your Excellency's

Consultations,

Resident's
Answers to the

lency's particular desire, of the balances which were due by Almass, is a proof of the sincerity of this assurance. I therefore take the liberty of suggesting, that your Excellency, as on the former occasion, will now also be pleased to furnish me with a statement of the demands against Mirza Jan, and of the several exemptions which he pleads, that I may be enabled to form an accurate judgment on the case, and then to suggest to your Excellency what may appear to be most advisable for the recovery of the just dues of the Sircar. Your Excellency may be fully assured, that after inspecting the documents which you may send to me, and ascertaining the just amount of your demands, I shall be ready to support those demands with all the influence of my station; and that in the case of Mirza Jan's refusal to discharge them, I shall myself submit to your Excellency the justice and expediency of his renewed and still more rigorous confinement.

The foregoing are my detailed observations in answer to your Excellency's remarks on the subject of the Governor-General's letter. The concluding paragraph of that letter, however, which relates to Tujummool Hoossein Khan's jagier, having been passed over by your Excellency in silence, and I having, in consequence, at our last personal interview, not only submitted my own sentiments on the subject, but also conveyed to you, in explicit though delicate terms, the sentiments of surprize and concern with which the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council had heard of the violation of rights, considered as under the guarantee of his Government, I naturally expected, as the result of those communications, that your Excellency would have ordered Tujummool Hoossein Khan to resume the management of his jagier. Disappointed in this expectation, I now most earnestly request that, from a consideration of the extraordinary claims of this family to the favour of both States, your Excellency will be pleased, without any further delay, to reinstate Tujummool Hoossein Khan in the unmolested possession of his jagier, as an act of justice on the part of your Excellency, which cannot fail to be gratifying to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council in the highest possible degree.

Proclamation.

Draft of Proclamation.

Be it known to the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, Putwarries, Cultivators, Ryots, and Peasantry at large of Pergunnah....., Zillah....., Soobah Oude.

That whereas the prosperity and happiness of my people must ever form the leading objects of my care, and whereas the present and long existing system of farming out the districts, with a view to the realization of the revenues, has appeared to be injurious to those objects, as affording to the farmers and Aumils the power of oppressing the landholders, and to the landholders of distressing their tenants, and others, the cultivators of the soil; therefore, and with the friendly advice and concurrence of the Honourable Company's Government, whose interests are identified with my own, I have now fully determined to abolish the system of farming for ever, and to introduce in the room of it a system of assessment and collection of the revenues, by which the landholders, cultivators, and peasantry, being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and farmers, may with confidence proceed in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, paying only the just revenues of the Government, without failure or delay, and be in no ways liable to the oppression, tyranny, or extortion of any farmers or Tehsildars; that thus the revenue and resources of the country may be yearly increased, the cultivation of the land be so extended and improved that in process of time no uncultivated land shall remain in my dominions, and that the frequent insurrections and commotions by which the landholders and peasantry are ruined, the expences of the Government increased, and general disorder excited, may now and for ever be at an end.

With

With a view to carry this system into effect, I have accordingly nominated and reputed able and upright Ameens into all the meahals of my dominions. These meens will immediately proceed to the several districts under their charge, here having assembled all the landholders, Malgoozars, cultivators, and others of the district, and having inspired confidence in their minds by apprizing them of my benevolent intentions, they will commence a diligent inquiry into the actual state and condition of every town and village in the mehaul. They will demand from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, and Putwarries of the district, a true and accurate description of each village and estate, of its waste and cultivated lands, of the condition of its inhabitants and peasantry, and the causes of their actual condition. They will further require from those officers the several revenue papers which are specified in a separate list with which the meens have been furnished, and they will submit immediately to the Presence the result of their investigations, respectively, with the several documents alluded to, with the least practicable delay.

Bengal Political

Proclamation.

You are therefore hereby commanded to attend the Ameen of your district immediately on his arrival within its limits, to confide in him as the servant of the Government, to convey to him every information regarding the state and condition of the district, which he may require and you possess, without the smallest partiality or reserve, and to produce and deliver every document which may be required by him without any hesitation or delay, being obedient to his orders in all things, and considering his favourable or unfavourable report, as advantageous or injurious to your interests. You are, at the same time, strictly prohibited from giving or offering to the Ameen, or to any of his deputies or servants, directly or indirectly, the smallest nuzzer, or bribe, or douceur, on any pretext whatsoever.

Consider these as the positive orders of the Presence, and act accordingly in every respect.

Article 1.

It will, therefore, be your particular care to execute this duty with the greatest assiduity and zeal, considering the duration of your employment as dependent on its satisfactory performance. You will demand from the several Seeghadars the whole of the revenue papers which are specified in the schedule annexed: you will examine those papers minutely, and after satisfying yourself of their accuracy, you will transmit them with a statement to the Presence.

5. Hesab-kird for the years 1217 and 1218, signed by the Seeghadars and Zemindars.

6. Copy of the kaboolcats granted by the landholders and farmers, attested by the Seeghadars.

7. A statement of the decrease of assessment of villages for the fusly year 1218, under the signature of the Seeghadars and Zemindars.

8. A statement of the increase of assessment of villages for 1217 and 1218 fusly, signed by the Seeghadars and Zemindars.

11. Detailed statement of the sayer duties, with a list of the several chowkees for the fusly years 1217 and 1218.

15. Itlak, or statement of tulbana, &c., exacted from defaulting landholders and farmers.

Article 3.

As it is obvious that the Zemindars of the country, possessing hereditary and valuable rights in the soil, are more likely, from an apprehension of the loss of those rights, to be faithful to the Government, and to pay their revenues duly, than any description of farmers, who, having no interest in the soil, do not scruple to embezzle the revenue, and to harass and oppress the cultivators, &c.; and as, independently of this consideration, it is desirable on every principle of justice, to maintain the Zemindars, and to make them responsible for the revenue, you will invariably keep those maxims in your view, and in no instance whatever, where the owner of the lands is to be found, will you transfer his rights to a farmer, nor commit any business to the latter which the former is willing and qualified to perform:

perform. In cases of disputed right to a zemindarry it will be your duty to investigate the claims, and to hold proceedings on the subject, transmitting the result of your proceedings with the sunnuds of every claimant for the final decision of the Government.

Instructions to Ameens.

Article 4.

As many mehals in my dominions are now under the management of farmers, and as they must have adopted their measures for the realization of the revenues of this year, by receiving and entering into engagements with the Zemindars and sub-farmers of their districts, taking security doubtless from some, it will therefore be the duty of the Ameens to inspect the engagements in question, and to enforce the payment of the just demands of the Aumils, agreeably to the kaboolat and Puttah, transmitting copies of those documents to the Presence, with regular accounts of the payments, under the signature of the Seeghars; and it is further particularly desirable, that no just balances of revenue should remain after the close of the month of Jeith, or at all events after the end of Assaur 1218, when the collections of this year must terminate.

Article 5.

As a triennial settlement of the whole of the mehals in my dominions has been resolved on, to commence with the ensuing fusly year 1219, so as to provide for the security of the landholders against any additional assessment till the end of the stipulated time, and also to secure to the cultivator the fair profits of his industry, under engagements entered into with the landholder, for the full term of the settlement, so that confidence and security may be established, in regular gradation, from the Government to the cultivator of the soil; with the view of carrying this settlement into effect, you are required, in the beginning of the month of Assaur, when the Zemindars shall be finally relieved from the demands of the present Aumils, and their lands shall be freed from the visits of Peadehs enforcing those demands, to commence a personal tour and inspection of the district, taking with you some intelligent person well acquainted with the state of the country, either a Chowdry, Canoongoe, or Mirdaha, and to visit every village and estate, observing as minutely as possible the quantity and quality of the lands, both cultivated and waste, the condition and character of the landholders, Mokuddums, and cultivators, comparing their assets and means with the amount of the present jumma, encouraging them in the improvement of their lands, and placing proper persons in each village to superintend the progress of the cultivation: ascertaining further the necessity of Tuckavee (for which if necessary, and hereafter granted to the Ryots, their bonds, with proper security, payable at the end of Aghun, with interest at the rate of twelve per cent, and obligations for the cultivation of their lands, are to be taken, agreeably to a prescribed form). By these means, when the period for the triennial settlement shall arrive, the country will be in a proper condition, the true assets of every estate will be easily and satisfactorily ascertained, the Zemindars will have no pretext for resisting a fair settlement of the revenues, and no loss will arise to the Sircar. Instructions for concluding the settlement will be issued in due time from the Presence.

Article 6.

A monthly allowance will be granted to you and your deputy, and other officers, at the rate of per lac of rupees of the jumma, to commence from the date of your appointment and continue till the end of Bhadoon, when your duty as an Ameen will terminate; after which, if your conduct be approved of, you shall be appointed to the office of Tehsildar, with a suitable salary and establishment. The appointment of your subordinate officers in the station of Ameen and Tehsildar will be left at your own discretion, and their allowances may be fixed by yourself. But you are hereby strictly prohibited from demanding, or receiving for yourself, or for any of your deputies or other subordinate officers, and from admitting of their receiving, directly or indirectly, any nuzers, bribes, or douceurs, from the Zemindars, Malgoozars, or Ryots, upon any pretext whatsoever, and under the certain and unavoidable penalty of severe

from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 12th March 1811.)

In your answer to the seventh article of my remarks on the Governor-General's letter, you have stated that my consignment of those melahs to the persons in question was in direct opposition to your advice, and to that of the British Government, and consequently that I might be said to have committed a breach of my engagements with the Honourable Company, &c.

The perusal of those expressions has occasioned the greatest distress and uneasiness to my mind. As I consider the introduction of such expressions into any of your letters as fraught with the most injurious consequences to myself, and totally unnecessary on this occasion, I return your official note, and beg of you, for the friendship subsisting between us, and with the view of relieving my mind, to withdraw the expressions in question, and send back your paper of remarks to me with the alteration which I require in its terms. A breach of engagement with the British Government was never, and can never be, in my thoughts. When you send back your remarks with the prescribed alteration you will also return this letter.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of this date. Being ever desirous of complying with your Excellency's wishes to the utmost practicable extent, I am perfectly ready to gratify you on the present occasion, by withdrawing the expressions which you object to, although I applied them after mature deliberation, provided that, by doing so, the accomplishment of the just objects of the British Government shall not be prevented or delayed.

I have accordingly made an alteration in the language of the seventh article of my remarks, which though it still serve to convey my decided and unalterable sentiments on the measure to which it has reference, will, I trust, be approved by your Excellency, as greatly softened in the manner.

Your Excellency's letter is also returned with the paper of remarks agreeably to your desire.

Replies by His Excellency the Vizier to the Resident's Answers. (Received the 21st March 1811.)

With regard to what you have stated in the first of these answers, namely, "that the scheme of a settlement for the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, which was the first and most essential requisite towards a beneficial arrangement," &c.

The case is this : that the causes of the delay in transmitting a perfect scheme of a settlement for the districts in question have already been explained to you, and that the non-arrival of a perfect scheme can only be ascribed to some of those those causes. In the scheme which I received from the Aumils, it is written that a correct statement of diminution and increase in the jumma would be afterwards furnished when the real assets were ascertained. I did not myself consider that scheme as satisfactory, and accordingly told you so at one of our personal interviews. A document, therefore, which was considered as incorrect by myself, for what purpose should I send it to you? With respect, again, to your observation of our not having received the jumma-bundy of any one village or estate; if a perfect scheme of the settlement had arrived, the jumma-bundy would have doubtless been contained in it: and with regard to your remark, that "notwithstanding Mohummud Ashruff's and the other Aumil's "representations," &c.; every paper conveying information of the conclusion, or approaching conclusion, of the settlement of those districts, which I have received, copies of them have invariably been sent to you, because it is not my wish or desire to conceal any thing from you.

The Vizier's
Replies to the Resident's Answers

In the second article you have stated, that "it is first necessary to consider "to what places the Ameens shall be deputed, and what duties they shall be "required to perform."

On the 18th Suffer 1226 (15th March 1811), I issued orders to my beloved sons, Shums-ood Dowlah and Nuseer-ood Dowlah, and to other officers, to search for and procure some upright and able candidates for the situation of Ameens, who shall first be sent to those Elakas which you consider as in an unsettled state. The draft of instructions which you furnish shall first be discussed between us. Such parts as I may not approve or understand, after consulting with you, shall be withdrawn from it, and final instructions shall then be prepared and delivered to the Ameens, with orders to pay strict attention to them. But you must first detail to me the necessary qualifications of Ameens, that persons so qualified may be selected. In short, the Ameens must be chosen and appointed by me; and with regard to the instructions to be furnished to them, those shall be determined on by mutual consent, and executed under my orders.

In the third answer you have stated, that "the duty of those Ameens will "be to require from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, and Putwarries, the whole of "the revenue papers," &c.

I shall issue my orders to the Ameens agreeably to what you have suggested; but I recommend that this measure be carried into effect by actual measurement of the cultivated and waste lands, and of lands capable of being cultivated, in which case the exact measurement of the lands, as well as the amount of the jumma, will be ascertained, and the boundaries of villages will also be fixed, so as to preclude future claims or disputes among the Zemindars on questions of unsettled boundary.

In the fourth answer you have stated, that "the deficiency of men of abilities "is," in your opinion, "alone to be attributed to the present system of adminis- "tration in my dominions, to the instability of employment under my Govern- "ment, and to the danger of personal dishonour," &c.

I have never broken my engagements nor retracted my promise in any way, so as to create want of confidence in the people: on the contrary, many of the Aumils have broken their engagements with my Government, and I have knowingly put up with the loss and released them from confinement. With regard to those who are still confined, I have frequently required them, in the first instance, to liquidate their arrears agreeably to the statements prepared by my officers, and afterwards to their own statements, giving credit for all their claims, nay for more than they could justly require; yet, destitute of shame as well as honesty, they still retain the just dues of the Sircar.

You suggest that "such Ameens as shall perform their duties properly shall here- "after be appointed Tehsildars." But, in this case, if the Ameens be previously informed, that after ascertaining the jumma of their Elakas and transmitting the revenue papers for ten years, with the wasil-baukee accounts, to the Presence, they will be appointed to the office of Tehsildar, it is probable that, for their own future advantage, they will knowingly lower the jumma and state a less than the real amount. I therefore think it would be more advisable to separate

separate the two offices entirely ; or, at all events, that no Ameen shall be appointed Tehsildar in the Zillah in which he may have acted as Ameen. In this latter mode the Ameens who are found to be deserving may still be rewarded, and the opportunity for fraud may be prevented.

In the sixth article you have stated, that " the views of the British Government, as hinted at in the Governor-General's letter to my address," &c.

After the new system of assessment and administration of the revenue shall be carried into effect, an efficient police, and a court of justice, as recommended by the Governor-General and by you, shall also be established by my orders.

In answer to the seventh article you have stated, that " to remedy the evils which at present exist, a total change of the system has been earnestly recommended to me by the Governor-General," &c.

What the Governor-General has recommended shall certainly be carried into effect. It is, of course, my particular desire, that the population of the country be increased, the happiness and prosperity of my subjects be provided for, that present or future loss of revenue to the Sircar be effectually guarded against, and that the revenues should yearly increase. If those objects can be accomplished by the change of the present system, it is well, and I have no objection whatever.

With regard to what you have stated, that " my apprehension of a breach of my engagements," &c.

Praise be to God, that as yet no breach of engagement has ever been committed by me, nor can any take place hereafter. I have not, on the present occasion, done any thing unprecedented or new, that you should have advised me to desist from it. What I have done was in perfect conformity with the long-established usage of the country, against which no Resident at this court had ever hitherto remonstrated ; and thanks be to God, that no bad effects have hitherto arisen from the measures. Neither would any objection have been made in Calcutta to those measures, if you had not written on the subject : but your representations have, of course, occasioned what has happened. It matters not : you will now consider me as intent on carrying the new system into execution.

In the eighth article you have requested me to furnish you with a statement of the demands against Mirza Jan, and of the several exemptions which he pleads, &c.

Khanazad Khan and his property were the property of Almass, and Almass himself belonged to me, consequently Khanazad too is my property, and you have no right to interfere. My intention towards Mirza Jan shall be communicated to you hereafter.

The conclusion of the eighth article of your observations relates to Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, &c.

I am not inclined to bestow lands in jagier, because but a small portion of my territory now remains in my possession ; and if I continue to distribute this by little and little to jagierdars, I shall by and bye have no authority whatever. Further, as I have no intention whatever with a reference to this jagier but the preservation of my own authority over it, and the clear revenue, after deduction of expences, will still be paid to the Khan, why not permit the jagier, as at present, to be managed by the Aumil of the Sircar, so that no loss may be sustained by the Khan ? My authority over the lands may be maintained, and disputes between the Ryots of the khalsa and jagier may be prevented.

With respect to my transferring the jagier to an Aumil of my own selection without having previously consulted you on the subject. The case is this ; the jagier has not been transferred to any new Aumil, but still remains in the hands of the person to whom it was formerly consigned, with the

the entire consent of the jaghierdar : in addition to all which you may recollect that I mentioned to you on a former occasion, my desire of including the jagier of Mudar-ood-Dowlah in the khalsa, for the reasons which are here stated.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

On my receipt of your Excellency's message by Ameer Hyder the day before yesterday, importing that your replies to my observations were nearly finished, and that procrastination was by no means your object, I had intended to submit to your Excellency, that as my observations contained little else than an explanatory detail of the subjects of the Governor-General's letter, a reply to them seemed to me to be unnecessary, and that an answer from your Excellency to his Lordship's letter, announcing the occupation of your mind in giving effect to the system which he had recommended, and your acquiescence in the two concluding points of his letter, namely, the just and moderate settlement of your Excellency's demand against Mirza Jan, and the restoration of Tujummool Hoosein Khan's jagier, appeared to me to be all that was required on your Excellency's part for the present.

I was accordingly occupied in preparing a letter for your Excellency to the foregoing effect, when a paper, containing your replies to my observations, was just now put into my hands by your Excellency's servant, Sooruj Bhan. It is impossible to describe to your Excellency the degree of surprize and concern with which I have perused and reflected on the contents of this extraordinary document. I shall not, for the present, convey to you the answer which it appears to require, because I am unwilling to place upon record the sentiments with which it has inspired me, without an obvious and established necessity that I trust will never occur ; and, therefore, on Saturday next, I shall have the honour of waiting on your Excellency, to explain those sentiments in person, to submit for your serious consideration what appears to me to be indispensable towards preserving and strengthening the bonds of amity between the two States, and to convey to you more explicitly than I have hitherto done, the instructions with which I have been honoured by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

Article Second.

In conformity with your suggestions, a division and subdivision of my dominions shall be carried into immediate effect, and for this purpose Roy Dyakrishen has already been summoned to the Presence, that the situation and extent of the several Zillahs and mehauls, and the amount of the jumma of each, may be ascertained from the records in his possession, after which, Ameens, possessing all the qualities, if possible, which are described in the Governor-General's letter, and in your remarks, shall be deputed to all the mehauls, and the instructions, proclamations, &c., drafts of which have been submitted by you, with such alterations as on discussion we may mutually agree to, shall be furnished to all the Ameens.

Article Eighth.

In compliance with the wishes of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the rigorous measures which have been hitherto adopted, with a reference to Khanazad Khan, shall immediately cease, and a statement of the just balances against him shall be sent for your investigation.

Concluding Paragraph of the Eighth Article.

Although no injury nor loss could, in my opinion, arise to Tujummool Hoosein Khan, from committing the management of his jagier to an Aumil of my selection, yet, in compliance with the Governor-General's desire, the jagier shall be restored to the Khan.

deputed by me to all the meahals. In short, the Ameens must be chosen and appointed by me, and the whole system must be established under my authority and by my officers with your advice. But the mode which you have suggested for the appointment of Ameens cannot be acceded to by me, because, in that case, it would be necessary that, after selecting proper persons for the office, I should write to you to inform me who should be appointed and who should not be appointed. You will naturally approve of some and reject others, and I should be obliged to comply with your suggestions on this point: hence it is obvious, that the selection and appointment, or rejection of the Ameens, would proceed under your authority, and that I should have no further power nor authority in the matter, but merely those of informing you and requiring your consent; and this circumstance being generally known, not one of the Ameens would be obedient to my orders nor regard my authority. I can never, therefore, consent to the appointment of Ameens in a manner which would diminish my authority, more particularly as it is stipulated in the concluding part of the seventeenth article of the treaty concluded with the British Government in the time of Sir John Shore, that "I shall possess full authority over my household affairs, hereditary dominions, my troops and my subjects;" and in the sixth article of the treaty of cession it is stated, "that the Honourable the East-India Company thereby guarantee to me, my heirs and successors, the possession of the territories which will remain after the territorial cession, together with the exercise of my and their authority within the said dominions; and I engage always to advise with, and act in conformity to the counsel of the officers of the said Honourable Company."

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter of this date, with your authenticated replies to the observations which I had the honour of submitting to you in my letter of the 9th ultimo.

Observing an essential difference between the terms of several articles contained in this document and those which were agreed on at our conference, and recollecting your Excellency's repeated assurance that this unpleasant discussion should terminate before your hunting excursion commenced, I am at a loss in what manner to reply to your Excellency's other letter of the same date, announcing the day of your march to be Saturday the 6th instant. For the present, in compliance with your Excellency's desire, I have instructed the commanding officer of the troops to hold a battalion of Sepoys in readiness to attend you. But I trust that your Excellency will lose no time in reconsidering the document which you have sent to me, reflecting on the terms of our agreement at our last conference, and informing me of the result of your deliberation.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 2d April 1811.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

Immediately on my receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 1st instant with its enclosure, I addressed a note to you in my own hand-writing, expressive of my concern at the essential difference which appeared to me between the terms of some of your Excellency's replies and those which were agreed on at our conference.

I now, in compliance with the desire communicated through the medium of Ameer Hyder, proceed to explain to your Excellency the difference to which I ha vealluded.

With a reference to the measure of appointing Ameens with my previous advice and concurrence, which your Excellency has expressly rejected, I had the honour of stating to you at our conference, that supposing, for the sake of experiment, the acquiescence of the British Government in your Excellency's appointment of Ameens, without previously consulting the Resident, in what manner, I would ask, was the conduct of the several Ameens, under the instructions which I have suggested, to be hereafter judged of by me, or corrected, if necessary, by your Excellency? And further, after the settlement of the country under the new system should be concluded, and Tehsildars should be nominated and established for the future collection of the revenue, in what manner was the Resident to be satisfied of the proper conduct of those Tehsildars, of their strict adherence to their engagements with the landholders, and of the justice of all their demands, which our troops might be called upon to enforce, and to which it was now my bounden duty to refuse my support or assistance, until satisfied of their justice in every respect?

After a long discussion of those questions, your Excellency was ultimately pleased to agree, with a view to my satisfaction on the first point, that all the proceedings of the Ameens, and copies of the several papers which they might transmit to the Presence, should be explained and forwarded for my information, and that my opinion of those proceedings and papers, after investigation and discussion with your Excellency, should guide the continuation of the Ameens, or their dismissal from the several offices to which your Excellency had originally appointed them.

For my satisfaction on the latter point, namely, the conduct and proceedings of the Tehsildars, your Excellency was pleased to assure me, that copies of all the engagements, whether kabooleat, putta, ekrar-namah, or other obligation whatsoever, which might be received or entered into by the Tehsildars, should be furnished for my information; and you were further pleased to declare, that an engagement to this effect should be inserted in the second article of your replies, and follow the detail of your objections to my original proposition regarding the Ameens, or should be conveyed by a separate letter to my address, under your Excellency's signature or seal.

Your Excellency, I admit, has inserted the former of those two engagements in the document which is now before me; but it is omitted in its proper place, and is subjoined to the third article of your replies, with which it has no connection whatever: and with regard to the second engagement, namely, that of your furnishing me with copies of the proceedings of the Tehsildars, your Excellency has not only introduced it in a wrong place, as the conclusion of the fourth article, but has also been pleased to limit its beneficial influence in a manner and degree which could never have been in my contemplation. In fact, by the terms of this second engagement, neither your Excellency nor I would possess nor be entitled to information, regarding the proceedings of any of the Tehsildars, until a commotion should be excited in the country, and then we should merely be apprized of the proceedings respecting such individual landholders or others as resisted the demands of the Tehsildar, and were actually in a state of rebellion.

Under these circumstances, it becomes my indispensable duty to request that, in pursuance of your Excellency's promise, the engagement having reference to the Ameens, be inserted in its proper place, as a qualification of the second reply, and in the terms of the conclusion of the third ; and that a satisfactory assurance, having reference to the conduct of the Tehsildars, be also subjoined to the second article, as a further indispensable qualification of your Excellency's continued dissent from my beneficial proposal.

In the eighth article of your Excellency's replies, having reference to Khanazad Khan, though your Excellency have been ultimately pleased to acquiesce in the just and humane intercession of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in behalf of this unfortunate Aumil, and the ends of justice and humanity be consequently answered, yet as your Excellency has persisted in the assertion of your right over the person and property of Khanazad Khan as over a slave, notwithstanding my repeated and apparently, nay avowedly, satisfactory arguments, against the legality or justice of this claim, it has now become my duty to convey to you, in more explicit terms than I wished, the grounds on which I solemnly deny that the right in question can be admitted.

Almass Alee Khan is declared and allowed to have been purchased, or acquired as a slave, by one of your Excellency's ancestors ; yet the original slavery of Almass, or the right of property in your Excellency's ancestors over him, if tried and determined by the tenets of the Mahomedan law, would be found to be utterly untenable ; in addition to which, the known circumstances of his having been employed as an Aumil or farmer of a large portion of the country during three successive Governments, and having annually required and obtained from his Sovereign acquittances of the revenue for which he was bound, are so totally inconsistent and incompatible with the condition of a slave, as to preclude the necessity for further argument. But admitting, for argument's sake, that Almass was your Excellency's slave, Khanazad is not the son nor the slave of Almass, that he should be the heir of his ancestor's bondage. He is a mussulman of known parentage, and the adopted child of Almass ; and that a mussulman, the adopted son of a mussulman, should be a slave, is as contrary to the Mahomedan law as it is contrary to reason and justice.

To conclude, if the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, under whose express sanction and command I have the honour of addressing your Excellency in behalf of Khanazad Khan, had considered this unfortunate person and his property in the light in which you have viewed them, your Excellency would never have been troubled with my intercession in his behalf.

I earnestly suggest the propriety of your Excellency's departing from this claim, and abridging the terms of the eighth article of your replies, as you have very properly done with a reference to the conclusion of that article.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, dated the 8th ultimo, reporting your proceedings under the instructions of Government, contained in my letter of the 28th of December 1810.

2. His Excellency in Council duly appreciates the arduous nature of the discussions which the peculiar character and disposition of his Excellency the Vizier produced, in the progress of your endeavours to obtain his Excellency's consent to the scheme of reform so earnestly recommended by this Government, and considers the conduct of the negociation to be highly creditable to your judgment, ability, and address. The issue of the application in favour of Mirza Jan, and for the release of Tujummool Hoosseïn Khan's jagier, is a subject of peculiar gratification to Government. The satisfaction which his Excellency in Council derives from the result of the negociation relative to the question of reform, as far as it has hitherto been made known to him, is however qualified by the reflection, that the Vizier's acquiescence in the main points of your proposed arrangements must be ascribed more to the energy and firmness with which you have urged them, than to a cordial admission, on the part of his Excellency, of the expediency of the suggested measures, and to a sincere desire to carry them into effect.

3. The system of proceeding which you proposed to the Vizier as the basis of a reform of the internal administration, appears to the Vice-President in Council to be generally judicious, and the most effectual that could be devised, under the disadvantages arising from the inherent vices and defects of his Excellency's Government. Upon one point alone the Vice-President in Council entertains considerable doubt; not, however, on the abstract ground of expediency, but upon that of public faith, as affected by a resumption of the farms before the expiration of the leases, and with or without the consent of the farmers. His Excellency in Council observes, that the Vizier himself has urged this objection; but he is not entirely satisfied of the solidity of the argument with which you met that objection, because, admitting even the constructive violation of his engagements with the Company which you have maintained, it could not be considered to affect the validity of a contract between the Vizier and his farmers, and it seems peculiarly unadvisable to commence a system of reform in the principles of an administration by a breach of public faith. Government would therefore recommend, in all practicable cases, a compromise with the farmers, but in none a compulsory resumption of the farms.

4. The only essential article of your propositions to which the Vizier appears ultimately to have withheld his consent, is your participation in the selection and appointment of Ameens. Whatever may be the opinion of Government with regard to the importance of this participation, his Excellency in Council approves your having ultimately yielded the point; first, because some doubt may be entertained of the right of the British Government to insist upon having a voice in the appointment of the Vizier's officers, even for the execution of measures prosecuted under the influence of its counsels; and secondly, because the object will, in some degree, be attained by the compromise to which his Excellency has assented.

5. The Vice-President in Council will be glad to learn that the Vizier has adopted the proclamation, and the instructions for the guidance of the Ameens, which you submitted to him, and which appear to his Excellency in Council to have been drawn up with much judgment.

6. The Government will expect with solicitude your report of the further progress, and effect of your endeavours for the accomplishment of an arrangement, not less important to the interests of the British Government than to those of the Vizier's Administration.

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the information of the Honourable the Vice President in Council, the enclosed copies of letters which have passed between me and Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, commanding the troops at Pertaubghur.

2. It will be satisfactory to his Excellency in Council to observe from these documents, that the highly important service, on which Colonel Palmer was employed, has been brought to a successful termination, without any of the casualties of warfare, and that the detachment has returned to its cantonments at a proper season of the year.

3. Both His Excellency the Vizier and myself are disposed to ascribe the peaceable surrender of so many strong fortresses, and the submission of all the Zemindars in the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur to the conciliatory and judicious conduct of Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, whose proceedings in command of the detachment have uniformly merited and received his Excellency's entire approbation.

I have the honour to report to you, that it is my intention to move from hence on the morning of the 11th instant towards Jugdeespore, from whence, as soon as I have quelled the present disturbances, and provided for the future tranquillity and security of that Elaka, I shall proceed onwards toward Dalmow, securing the forts in that district, and putting them in the possession of the Nawaub's officers, for the purpose of their being demolished, as soon as the necessary people for that purpose can be obtained, by which means I shall be able to return with my detachment to the cantonments at Pertaubghur by the middle of next month or the beginning of May at the latest.

I beg leave to call to your observation, that by the settlement of the two above-mentioned Elakas the object has been most completely obtained, in the entire adjustment of the revenues, and demolition of the various places of strength in the country, and the necessity of my detachment remaining embodied any longer in this season consequently does not exist.

I request that you will direct the commanding-officer of the detachment to furnish you with a particular report of the demolition of the forts and ghurries, describing the condition to which they have been reduced, so as to render them unfit for any further purpose of resistance, and that you will communicate the same for my information.

from the Aumil.

I formerly apprized your Excellency of the departure of the Colonel's Chupprassie, for the purpose of preventing the demolition of Bekeriole, belonging to Bhugwunt Sing, Talookadar of Bhawalpoor, and of other villages of Pertaubghur, and likewise acquainted you of the continuance of the Chupprassie with that Talookadar. I am informed by a Hircarrah just returned from Pertaubghur, that the Colonel's Chupprassie still remained with Bhugwunt Sing as late as the 30th ultimo.

Akhbar, 7th Rubbee-ool-azul, 1226, 2d April.

Akhbar.

Eseree Bukhsh, Talookadar of Gadewar and other villages belonging to Sooltanpore, was possessed of a serviceable fort in the former place, comprehending a space of five begahs, and having four bastions and a cavalier with loop-holes. The gateway is to the west, and has on the top of it a bungalow pierced also with loop-holes. The walls of the fort are made in the manner of dhus, that is, of several substances mixed with clay, to render it hard and durable. The side to the east is seven yards in thickness; that to the south is five; those to the north and west are ten; and all are twenty yards high. In the presence of the Colonel and Mohummud Ashruff, the rennee which surrounds the fort, the bungalow on the gateway, and five yards of the height of the wall only have been destroyed by your Excellency's bildars: three bastions and the cavalier in the curtain have been blown up. The fourth bastion to the south-west, in depth ten yards, and in length fifteen yards, with its rennee, is untouched, and the four sides to the height of fifteen yards are still remaining. The ditch which surrounded the fort was ten yards deep and seven broad. By the destruction of the rennee and part of the walls, three yards of the depth have been filled up: it still remains seven feet wide and seven deep.

Within the fort there is a house pierced with loop-holes, and three rantees. Before the gateway, towards the south, there is a walled enclosure with loop-holes, formed of the composition used in the walls of the fort, in breadth seven yards, and twelve yards high, and surrounded by a rennee with loop-holes also, which remains untouched. There is another unfinished enclosure which would take in three begahs in a state of forwardness. Two walls only of it to the north and east, formed with loop-holes, are finished and remain untouched. To the west and south of the fort, the jungle, extending a coss and a half, remains as it was.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 4th and 7th instant. As soon as the papers required in your first letter can be prepared, I shall have the pleasure of furnishing them for your information.

After a most careful and attentive perusal of the translations of the documents sent to you by his Excellency the Vizier, I conceive it is expected I should answer to an implied insinuation, that the fort of Koorwah (called in the arzee of Raee Sahib Ram, Gadewar) has not been sufficiently demolished to prevent resistance to the authority of the Government. I must here beg leave to express my extreme concern, that his Excellency should deem the false and insolent assertions of his news-writer, who has not now for the first time employed himself in drawing up accounts on which references to me have been afterwards made, worthy a moment's attention. I beg leave to state, that Koorwah was blown up in my presence, and both in mine, and in the opinion of the artillery officer professionally employed, is so completely dismantled as to be at all times accessible to an attack, and incapable of the slightest resistance, unless any repairs should be made, and the Nawaub's officers so neglectful of their duty as to omit giving timely information.

I trust this explanation will be deemed satisfactory ; and it will afford me great pleasure to find that his Excellency will place such reliance on my attention to my duty and zealous endeavours for his service, as will not be shaken by such unfounded allegations as those contained in the arzee of Rae Sahib Ram.

Respecting the demolition of Bekeriole belonging to Bhugwunt Sing, I have to state, that it is represented as being a mere dwelling place, and not of sufficient strength or consequence to deserve notice. However, as it is situated near the cantonments, I ordered it not to be touched until I had an opportunity of examining it, which I propose doing on my return.

Generally, on the subject of the present condition of the forts which have been visited by me and detachments from my force, I have the pleasure of representing them as defenceless, and incapable of resistance against a British force. But I really apprehend that, should a spirit of resistance against the Nawaub's officers induce the Talookadars to take up arms, the Aumils, unless assisted, would not be able to reduce them ; and indeed I don't believe they would dare to make an attack on a powerful Zemindar, or could attack one with a prospect of advantage, even if unsupported by a situation in a fort or strong position.

The entire settlement of the revenues of these provinces, previous to the force under my command quitting the field, will be so satisfactory to myself, and I conceive so wholly in concurrence with your views, that I have been induced to acquiesce, and submit to the various and vexatious causes of delay which have occurred to protract my departure so much beyond the time I had reason to expect, and occasioned some slight infringement of your instructions not to remain out after the 1st of May ; but I hope you will think a few days of no consequence, when put in competition with objects of such importance.

ferences with the Vizier during much of the intermediate time from the date of the despatch above referred to, and has restricted my proceedings under the instructions of the Government on this subject, to the discussions in the accompanying documents.

3. From those documents his Excellency the Vice-President in Council will not fail to observe, and he will notice perhaps with regret, that his Excellency the Vizier, after consenting in a gracious manner, and with apparently perfect cordiality, to the principal arrangements which were proposed to him, has given way to some groundless apprehensions, and has urged many frivolous pretexts for delay, with a reference to the adoption of the measures which he still considers himself bound to adopt, as well in virtue of the stipulations of treaty as in pursuance of his engagements with me.

4. The nature of his Excellency's apprehensions is sufficiently developed and exposed in the documents which are now submitted; and his suggestion of a partial and experimental, instead of a general introduction, of the new system of assessment in his dominions, as conveyed by his letter of the 21st ultimo, under a modification of the terms of the proclamation and instructions to Aumils, which were submitted by me for his adoption, seemed to my judgment so nugatory in itself, and so manifestly intended and calculated to defeat the objects of the Government, that I had no hesitation whatever in rejecting that suggestion entirely, and insisting on his implicit adherence to the plan which I had proposed, and in which he had declared his acquiescence, by a formal and authenticated instrument conveyed in his letter of the 4th ultimo to my address.

5. The tenor of your despatch of the 3d instant, which I had the honour of receiving on the 21st, though it exhibit a more liberal view than I was at first prepared to admit, of some branches of the general subject, has not tended to suggest to me, after mature deliberation, the necessity of any material change in the character of my proceedings or discussions with the Vizier.

6. A resumption of any of the farms, which had been granted by his Excellency to individuals, before the expiration of their leases, and without the consent of the farmers, was certainly never in my contemplation; and it was only with a reference to the districts which were formerly managed by Almass, and in which the recent arrangements had proceeded in direct opposition to my advice, that I considered the British Government as entitled to throw the onus of a compromise on the Vizier, and to resist his arguments against reform, arising solely out of those engagements which he had contracted, in violation, as I presumed, of his promise to abide by our counsels in every important concern of his administration.

7. At the same time, I was credibly informed, and had every reason to believe, that the actual expiration of those leases with the present fusly year would make room for the proposed arrangements, without any breach of his Excellency's faith, and to the manifest advantage of the State, as well as of the farmers themselves, who might otherwise be induced, by vain hopes of their own, or by compulsory measures on the part of this Government, which are practised every day, to renew their engagements with his Excellency, to their own certain ruin, and to the further devastation of their districts.

8. On the other hand, I was perfectly aware that my early admission of his Excellency's plea, on the ground of those particular engagements, would immediately have suggested to his Excellency a more general and plausible pretext for postponing the reform in his Government, without any limitation of time, since my knowledge of his character and disposition pointed out to me as the certain consequence of such an admission on my part, his granting leases of, perhaps, the whole of his dominions, even pending the present negotiation, with a reference to periods and dates which must completely have frustrated the objects of this important discussion.

9. Under these circumstances, I thought it my duty, in the first instance, to resist, by an argument which appeared to my judgment to be strong at least, if not not entirely satisfactory, a plea of which the early and unqualified admission must have led to the total failure of the negotiation committed to my charge, suggesting at the same time an expedient by which the public faith of this Government might be preserved, namely, a reparation to all the farmers of any losses which they might eventually suffer, and further securing to the farmers the realization of their balances of revenue for the current fusly year, or credit for those balances with the Government, by the terms of a notification to the farmers, which was drafted for his Excellency's approval, and transmitted to him on the 6th ultimo, forming the first number of this despatch.

10. Since my receipt of your letter above noticed, after satisfying myself by the most accurate information which I could obtain, as well as by the Vizier's acknowledgement to a certain extent, that all the leases in his dominions, with the exception of those of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, and a few other inconsiderable districts under the charge of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, do actually expire at the close of this fusly year, I have thought it my duty to declare to his Excellency, in direct and explicit terms, that the introduction of the new system of assessment into those particular districts, though expedient in the highest degree on general grounds, and for the sake of uniformity in his administration, ought not, in my judgment, and cannot, with my sanction, be permitted to take effect, but by a compromise with his Aumil, Hukeem Mehdi, whose disposition to accede to his Excellency's views cannot reasonably be doubted, and whose management of the districts under his charge during the remaining period of his lease will, at all events, be less injurious to the country than that of any other farmer in his dominions.

11. It is a singular and remarkable circumstance, if it be true, as I have reason to suspect, that the extension of Hukeem Mehdi's lease has been made within these few days, and subsequently to the above declaration on my part. His Excellency the Vizier, after acknowledging the fact of the expiration of a number of leases with the present fusly year, announcing to me the death of one of his principal farmers, Balek Ram, and hearing the above declaration, replied to a question on my part respecting the terms of his engagement with Hukeem Mehdi, that he had forgotten the terms of that engagement, and was ignorant of the number of years which it had to run, but that he would inquire of the Hukeem and inform me in the course of the following day. He has accordingly since informed me, that a period of three years is to run in the lease of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, and has added, that he will speak to Hukeem Mehdi about a compromise, and let me know the Hukeem's determination.

12. The conversation above referred to took place on the morning of the 25th instant, when his Excellency did me the honour of breakfasting with me; and the circumstance, related as it occurred, is so descriptive of the Vizier's disposition, and of the general character of this negotiation, in as far as his Excellency is concerned, that I could not with propriety neglect the present occasion of recording it.

13. A circumstance equally characteristic, having reference to the excuses of the Ameens, is also worthy of being noticed, and may be considered as an authenticated fact. Of the six Ameens whose arzees were conveyed to me by the Vizier in his letter* of the 8th instant, two had been formerly in my employment while agent to the Governor-General in Bundelcund, and from those persons I received, through an indirect channel, the information of their having been furnished by the Vizier's orders with drafts of the arzees which they were required to seal and present to him, under pain of his Excellency's displeasure.

14. A further report of my conference with his Excellency the Vizier at the Residency, on the morning of the 25th instant, comprizing a detail of the arguments by which I endeavoured to remove his apprehensions with a reference to the original plan, and of the modifications which his Excellency suggested in the execution of that plan, shall be submitted in a future despatch for the Honourable the Vice-President's information.

15. In the mean time, I have no hesitation in expressing a sanguine hope of the successful issue of the negociation, to the utmost extent which could have been contemplated by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council at the date of my original instructions.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 4th April 1811.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter of this date, with your final replies to my observations, amended in the terms which were agreed on, and to my entire satisfaction. The document formerly transmitted is returned, agreeably to your desire, and I shall have the honour of submitting to your Excellency a draft of the instructions to Aumils, which you have now been pleased to require from me, in the course of to-morrow or next day.

Enclosure.

Draft of a Purwannah to be addressed to Aumils, or Farmers, referred to in the annexed Letter, and submitted to His Excellency the Vizier by the Resident, on the 6th April 1811.

Whereas the property and happiness of my people form the leading objects of my care, and whereas the present and long existing system of farming out the districts, with a view to the realization of the revenues, has appeared to be injurious to those objects, as affording to the farmers and Aumils the power of oppressing the landholders, and to the landholders of distressing their tenants and others, the cultivators of the soil; therefore, and with the friendly advice and concurrence of the Honourable Company's Government, whose interests are identified with my own, I have at this auspicious season determined to abolish the system of farming for ever, and to introduce in the room of it such a system, that the Zemindars, cultivators, and peasantry, may with confidence and security employ themselves in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, and pay the just revenues of the Government without any failure or delay: and as this measure cannot properly be carried into effect without first ascertaining the condition and assets of the several mehals in my dominions, I have now deemed it proper to appoint and depute able and upright Ameens, with particular instructions for their guidance, to collect and transmit to the Presence all revenue papers connected with the several mehals.—..... Ameen, has accordingly been deputed to your Elaka; and you are hereby strictly commanded, immediately on his arrival in your district, to attend on him, and assist him as much as possible in the performance of the duties of his office, more particularly in the collection of the papers which are detailed in the sunnud of amanut. You will cause all the Zemindars and Seeghadars to attend on the Ameen without delay, and to produce the papers which may be required by him. You will yourself, at the same time, continue to make the collections of the arrears of your Elaka, agreeably to the kabooleat and putta, till the end of the month of Bysak and eventually of Jeth, so that no balances may remain due in the district at all events by the end of Jeth; and if any of the Zemindars should be dilatory in paying up the arrears which may be due to you, the Ameen will assist you in realizing them, agreeably to the orders of the Sircar, till the commencement of the month of Assaur, when your authority will finally cease, and you will have nothing to do with the collections.

But as it is not my wish or intention that any of the farmers in my dominions should suffer loss by this change of the system, it is hereby particularly enjoined, with a reference to all Zemindars who may be in an impoverished condition, and may not have the means of liquidating their balances to the State, that you, in conjunction with the Ameen, do minutely investigate the circumstances, and if satisfied of their incapacity to pay, that bonds for the just balances be taken from them, attested by the Chowdries and Canoongoes : in which case the amount of those several bonds shall be carried to your credit with the Government at the time of settling your accounts.

Having made some alterations in the draft of the proclamation, instructions to Ameens, and orders to Aumils, I return them to you, with a separate paper, containing a statement of my apprehensions and fears on the subject of the new system. The several Ameens are in attendance, and when you return the above-mentioned documents the Ameens shall be deputed to their stations. You will peruse with attention at your leisure the separate paper, and submit your answer when you have done so. As the Right Honourable the Governor-General has proceeded on the public service to a distance, I request that you will furnish me with the proper form of address, that I may write to his Excellency Lieutenant-General Hewett.

Translation of the separate Paper enclosed in the above Letter, containing the Fears of His Excellency the Vizier, on the subject of the Introduction of the new System of Administration.

Enclosure.

The measures recommended for the settlement of my country shall be adopted ; but I am apprehensive that in the hurry to carry those measures into effect, many mehauls which are now in perfect order, have no occasion for the aid of troops, and of which the revenues are regularly paid, may fall into confusion, and the payment of their revenues be withheld. Further, it does not appear to me to be possible, that the voluminous reports and other documents which will be submitted by the Ameens from the different Elakas in my dominions can be attentively perused by me in a short space of time, nor that you will be able to peruse them when sent to you ; and as such a system as the present has never yet been introduced into my dominions, I am apprehensive that it cannot now be accomplished, more especially in so short a period as four months. It appears, indeed, to me to be a matter of the greatest difficulty, and therefore, with a view to information, I ask you the following questions.

How is the correctness of the documents under the new system, which may be furnished by the Ameens, to be ascertained, so that no omission or inaccuracy shall remain in them ? In what manner are the Ameens to ascertain the real state of the revenue from original papers in Hindec, unless they be translated into Persian ? and what a length of time it will take to put these documents into Persian ?

I am convinced that, whenever the Ameens shall proceed to their districts, the authority of the Aumils will be done away ; and in this case, till the period for appointing Tehsildars shall arrive, after the removal of the present Aumils, who is there to collect the revenues of the Sircar ? If it be intended by the introduction of the new system to do away the necessity for the aid of British forces, the accomplishment of this object seems to me to be totally impossible, by reason of the rebellious conduct of the Zemindars ; because, even in the Company's dominions, notwithstanding their power to punish and the good order order which is maintained, the Zemindars frequently oppose the British troops and erect forts in their estates. Further, in the districts which are subject to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, and in the meahals which were lately farmed by Khanazad Khan, as well as in the district of Baraitch, and other places, where the kists are regularly paid and there is not the smallest disorder, I see no occasion whatever for changing the present system. You have yourself observed the flourishing state of the cultivation from Lucknow to this place. If the Zemindars and the cultivators were oppressed or disaffected, we should not have seen the fields in such a state. From witnessing this abundant cultivation we may infer with certainty, that the peasantry are perfectly satisfied with the present system of administration; and I am only fearful that this flourishing state of the country may be altered, and that I shall suffer great losses in consequence. If, therefore, you concur in opinion with me, I suggest the propriety of introducing the new system merely for trial into one Elaka for the present, which may be considered as in the greatest disorder; and if the result of this experiment prove satisfactory, it can be introduced by degrees into the whole; but if you deem it proper to send Ameens at once into all the districts, it shall certainly be done at your desire.

I have stated to you all my apprehensions; and I desire, that after mature and deliberate consideration, you will remove my fears by your advice, suggest such measures as may preclude any loss of my revenue, and state your answers in such a manner as may completely obviate my apprehensions.

Article 2.

Regarding those Zemindars who may enter into engagements with the cultivators and peasantry of their estates, it seems proper that copies also of their engagements should be recorded in my office, with a view to the settlement of disputes, or will you suggest any other mode for this purpose?

Obligations should also be taken from all the Zemindars to the following effect: that they will not repair any fortresses which have been destroyed, and will not construct any new ones, nor disobey the orders which they may receive, nor afford protection to robbers, nor take any of that class into their service; and if any traveller be killed, or the property of any person be stolen in their Elakas, that they are responsible for such property and will make it good, otherwise forfeit their zemindaries.

Draft of the Proclamation, as amended by His Excellency the Vizier, and received with his Letter to the Resident, under date 21st April 1811.

Be it known to the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, Putwarries, Cultivators, Ryots, and peasantry at large, of Purgunnah....., Zillah....., Soobah Oude.

That whereas the prosperity and happiness of my people must ever form the leading objects of my care, I have therefore, at this auspicious season, determined to introduce in my dominions a system of future arrangement, by which the Zemindars and cultivators being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and farmers, may with confidence proceed in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, paying the just revenues of the Government without failure or delay, and be no ways liable to the oppression, tyranny, or extortion of any farmers or Tehsildars; that thus the revenue and resources of the country may be yearly increased, the cultivation of the land be so extended and improved that in process of time no uncultivated land shall remain in my dominions, and that the frequent insurrections and commotions by which the landholders and peasantry are ruined, the expences of the Government increased, and general disorder excited, may now and for ever be at an end.

With

With a view to carry this system into effect, I have accordingly nominated and deputed able and upright Ameens into all the meahuls of my dominions. These Ameens will immediately proceed to the several districts under their charge, where having assembled all the landholders, Malgoozars, cultivators, and others in the district, and having inspired confidence in their minds by apprizing them of my benevolent intentions, they will commence a diligent inquiry into the actual state and condition of every town and village in the meahuls. They will demand from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, and Putwarries of the district, a true and accurate description of each village and estate, of its waste and cultivated lands, of the condition of its inhabitants and peasantry, and the causes of their actual condition. They will further require from those officers the several revenue papers which are specified in a separate list, with which the Ameens have been furnished, and they will submit immediately to the Presence the result of their investigation, respectively, with the several documents alluded to, with the least practicable delay.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 25th April 1811.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 21st instant (recapitulate its contents).

The only ground of apprehension which has ever arisen in my mind, with a reference to the introduction of the system recommended by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, is connected with a circumstance which my genuine regard for your Excellency's interests and welfare induces me candidly to state. It is the want of a cordial concurrence on your own part in the necessity of the measures proposed, and a sincere resolution of adopting and carrying them into execution, in a manner to ensure their success. If your Excellency could be induced to consider the salutary arrangements in question as they are viewed by the British Government and by me, and to bestow your attention accordingly, there is not the shadow of a doubt in my mind of their easy and successful conclusion, to the incalculable advantage of the State, and to the relief of your Excellency's mind from every degree of fear or anxiety.

I have observed with attention, and with concern, some corrections which your Excellency has made in the drafts of the proclamation and instructions that were submitted by me for your consideration. Those documents were prepared, after mature and deliberate reflection on my part, with a degree of care and attention proportioned to the importance of the subject, and to my interest in the successful accomplishment of the salutary measures proposed. Every sentence was weighed before I inserted it, and in each particular expression I contemplated some particular advantage with a reference to the objects in view. Your Excellency's rejection of certain clauses, without stating any grounds for having done so, or objections to the clauses themselves, has therefore disappointed my expectations in a degree which I cannot describe, and might justly be considered as a proof of your reluctance to admit of the reform, and of your intention of frustrating its objects.

The nature of the friendship and alliance subsisting between the two States is known to the whole world, and to every description of your subjects. Is there a landholder or inhabitant of your Excellency's dominions, who can be ignorant that the good order of the country at large, the support of your Excellency's authority, and the punishment of your refractory subjects, depend on the British Government, and on the aid of the Company's troops? and, under such such circumstances, what possible injury can arise, nay, what obvious benefit may not be expected, from the admission of the words which I suggested, and which your Excellency has been pleased to expunge, viz. "with the advice and concurrence of the British Government:" the manifest intention of them is, that the landholders and peasantry of the country, who have hitherto been greatly oppressed under the influence of the baneful system of farming, and who have submitted to the rapacity of the farmers through the terror of the British arms alone, should now have the satisfaction of knowing that your Excellency, sensible of their condition, and of the baneful nature of the former system, has, of your own free will and accord, abolished that system entirely, and with the friendly advice and concurrence of the British Government, has resolved to introduce a better system of administration, under which their condition must be improved. Apprized of this happy reform, and ascribing it to the united wisdom and power of both States, their confidence, in the first instance, in your Excellency's benevolent intentions, will facilitate the introduction of the system and the execution of the measures of reform; and the inclination as well as the power, on their parts, of opposing your Excellency's authority, or resisting those salutary measures, will at once and for ever be at an end. In short, the admission of this particular clause into the proclamation and orders to the Aumils seems, to my judgment, indispensable to their success, and its rejection injudicious and unbecoming: more especially as your Excellency must be aware, that I have already, in the discharge of my duty, submitted to the Governor-General in Council a translation of the documents in question; and in the case of their approval by our Government, or indeed in any event, the rejection of such a clause as this by your Excellency must appear to be indelicate in the extreme.

To some other corrections which have been made, though they too appear to be objectionable, I am rather disposed to assent, than to oppose your Excellency's wishes in any save essential points; and on this ground I will cheerfully agree to the omission of that part of the preamble, or introductory clause, in which the oppression of former times is described, because I by no means wish to preserve unpleasant reflections on the past, while contemplating happy prospects for the future. I have accordingly prepared new drafts, and transmit them for your Excellency's consideration, in the hope that no further alterations may take place, and that the present forms may be admitted without regret, on a sincere conviction of their utility.

From motives of respectful consideration for your Excellency's feelings alone, though I cannot avoid considering all your apprehensions as imaginary, I have submitted on a paper apart, my answers to the doubts and alarms which are conveyed by the enclosure in your letter, and I sincerely hope and expect that they will completely remove your apprehensions.

With regard to the proper style of address to be used in writing to General Hewett, who is now Vice-President, and vested with the same authority as the Governor-General in Council, during his Lordship's absence from the Presidency, your Excellency having many precedents before you must be perfectly able to decide, independently of my suggestions; but as you have been pleased to make a reference to me, I recommend that some addition be made to the usual form of address in writing to his Excellency General Hewett.

Answers to His Excellency the Vizier's Objections to the Introduction of the System of Administration recommended by the British Government.

Enclosure.

The apprehensions which your Excellency entertains, that the melauls of your dominions, which are now in good order, may fall into confusion, and the payment of the revenue be suspended, immediately on the arrival of the Ameens, seem to my judgment to be totally imaginary, and the expediency of hastening the departure of the Ameens, with a view to the speedy collection of the revenue papers required, for the performance of which duty the remainder mainder of the present month of Bysaak, the ensuing month of Jeth, and a few days of Assaur, are all the time that remains to us, is established on the obvious ground, that any further delay in their departure may very possibly preclude the introduction of the new system of assessment during the ensuing fushy year.

If the present Aumils of the several mehauls which your Excellency considers as in perfect order be indeed, as your Excellency supposes, both trustworthy and efficient in their situations, but a trifling, if any, portion of the revenue can remain to be collected in their districts, at the period when the Ameens shall arrive; and for that portion, as indeed for the whole of the revenue of this year, those active and intelligent Ameens would most probably have obtained security at the dates of their settlements with the landholders, or will at all events take that security now, while the Rubbee harvest is still standing, or cut down, at the disposal of the Aumils, under their shuhnus, affording ample security to the Government for any just balances which may be due, and susceptible of immediate attachment, so as to prevent any loss to the Sircar. In addition to which, as the Ameens have been strictly enjoined to assist the Aumils in the realization of the just balances of revenue, instead of impeding the collections, I see no reason to doubt that the whole of the revenue of those mehauls will be realized by the end of the month of Jeth.

With regard to what your Excellency has stated, that "it does not seem possible to you to peruse such voluminous documents in time," &c., it is not necessary or probable, that the whole of the documents required from the Ameens should be prepared and submitted to the Presence at once. They will necessarily be sent in gradually from the different mehauls, and your Excellency will, I doubt not, have full time to peruse them as they arrive. Besides, as from the date of the despatch of the Ameens, if they be now in readiness to depart, until the time of concluding the settlement, which is usually in the months of Maug and Phagoon (January and February next), there seems more than abundance of time for every degree of necessary investigation.

With regard to what your Excellency has stated, that "as such a system as the present has never been practised in your dominions," &c. If the system which is now recommended were harsher in its principles or practice than that which it is intended to supersede, your Excellency's argument might be applied to it; but as the contrary is manifestly the case, and as the system now recommended has obviously for its basis and intention the happiness and comfort of the landholders, and of every description of your subjects, no reasonable doubt can be entertained of its easy introduction and progress, nor of the confidence and satisfaction with which it will be received by all ranks and descriptions of people; but if any doubt can remain, let us look to the Company's territory surrounding your Excellency's dominions on every side, in which the same system of administration once prevailed, and in which the beneficial arrangements that are now recommended to your Excellency have been gradually but easily introduced, to the obvious advantage of the Government, and the acknowledged happiness of its subjects. Your Excellency's cordial concurrence in the adoption of similar arrangements can alone be wanting to their success.

In answer to your Excellency's question, "how the papers submitted by the Ameens," &c., I submit for your present satisfaction, that as the annual revenue of the whole of your Excellency's dominions has been collected and paid into your treasury for a great number of years, it is impossible that the amount of that revenue should be unknown to you, or that documents should be wanting among your records, and among those of your farmers and Aumils, a comparison of which with the documents to be furnished by the Ameens will form one important criterion for ascertaining the accuracy of the latter. For example: if, in the papers of any Ameen, a very material increase or diminution of assets be alleged, without a satisfactory explanation of the cause of it, there will certainly be ground for suspecting the accuracy of the statements of that Ameen, and the general propriety of his conduct; whereas, if the comparative statements of the present and former years shall deviate but in a small degree, and the causes of that deviation be explained, there will be manifest ground for considering the statements of the Ameens as correct, or approaching near to correctness; and since since perfection, or perfect accuracy, is not to be hoped for at once, we can only calculate on approaching it by degrees; at all events if the Ameens whom your Excellency has selected, or may hereafter select, be in any degree qualified for the office, by integrity, diligence, and former experience of the art, and act agreeably to those instructions which I have prepared for their guidance, the information to be gained by their proceedings will doubtless be found to exceed in its character, extent, and importance, what your Excellency has hitherto possessed, regarding the revenue and resources of your dominions.

Resident's Letter.*

With regard to your Excellency's question, having reference to original papers in Hindee, I entertain not the smallest doubt that a majority, if not the whole of the revenue officers in your Excellency's dominions, like those of the Company's provinces, have their revenue papers both in Persian and Hindee; but allowing this difficulty in some districts to exist, the task of translation into Persian may easily and quickly be performed, by a few additional writers attached to each of the Ameens.

With regard to your Excellency's conviction, that "whenever the Ameens shall proceed to those districts, the authority of the Aumils will be done away," &c., I can only assure your Excellency that I foresee no possible disorder nor loss from the introduction of the new system and appointment of Ameens, as suggested. The present farmers and Aumils will collect the balances of this year, with the assistance and support of the Ameens, as already suggested, until the term of their leases and authority shall expire, by which time the most important duties of the Ameens will also doubtless be concluded; and on the removal of the Aumils and farmers, if any part of the duties of the Ameens shall remain, and Tehsildars under the new system shall not have been appointed before the ordinary commencement of the collections for the ensuing fussy year, namely, the beginning of the month of Kooar, in that case your Excellency can authorize the Ameens, as was done on a similar occasion by me, to commence the collections of the khureef, or first harvest, agreeably to the former jumma, or to the actual produce of the khureef; and thus it is impossible to conceive how any loss or disorder can be occasioned by the absence of Tehsildars.

In answer to your Excellency's remark, that, "if it be intended, by the introduction of the new system, to do away the necessity for the aid of the British troops," &c., I have great pleasure in assuring you, as I do without the smallest hesitation, that if the system recommended by our Government be carried into complete effect, and in the manner which the Government has recommended, by a cheerful and uniform compliance with its advice, your Excellency's title to demand the constant aid of its troops will then be confirmed in a degree which can never afterwards be questioned; and the just and natural hesitation which has lately so often been stated, with regard to the employment of our forces in support of the authority of your Aumils, and for the suppression of refractory Zemindars, can never again be entertained.

With a reference to your Excellency's observation respecting the districts of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, &c., I am fully prepared to acknowledge the ability and efficiency of that Aumil, and I will never recommend to your Excellency to discharge from your service or employment a person of such eminent talents, while I entertain a good opinion of him in other respects. On the contrary, as this person in the situation of a Moostajer, or farmer, has managed his district so well, has manifestly improved its condition, and has regularly paid the revenue of the Sircar, being satisfied that his knowledge and talents might be applied to a still more beneficial purpose, and to far more advantage to the State, under the influence of the system of reform, I would earnestly recommend to your Excellency that, on the division of the country into Zillahs, in pursuance of my original suggestion, and of your Excellency's repeated assurance, the charge of a principal Zillah, with a suitable salary and establishment, be committed to this efficient officer, who seems so worthy of your Excellency's regard, and so sincerely attached to your interests.

With a reference to the second and concluding article of your Excellency's remarks, I entirely concur in the propriety of every measure described in it,

*Draft of the Proclamation, as again submitted to His Excellency the Vizier.
(Dated the 25th April 1811.)*

Be it known to the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, Putwarries, cultivators, Ryots, and peasantry at large of purgunnah, Zillah, Soobah Oude, That whereas the prosperity and happiness of my people must ever form the leading objects of my care, I have, therefore, at this auspicious season, with the friendly advice and concurrence of the Honourable Company's Government, determined to abolish the system of farming for ever, and to introduce in the room of it a system by which the landholders, cultivators, and peasantry, being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and farmers, may with confidence proceed in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, paying the just revenues of the Government without failure or delay, and be in no ways liable to the oppression, tyranny, or extortion of any farmers or Tehsildars; that thus the revenue and resources of the country may be yearly encreased, the cultivation of the land be so extended and improved that in process of time no uncultivated land shall remain in my dominions, and that the frequent insurrections and commotions by which the landholders and peasantry are ruined, the expenses of the Government increased, and general disorder excited, may now and for ever be at an end.

With a view to carry this system into effect, I have accordingly nominated and deputed able and upright Ameens into all the meahuls of my dominions. Those Ameens will immediately proceed to the several districts under their charge, where having assembled all the landholders, Malgoozars, cultivators, and others in the district, and having inspired confidence in their minds by apprizing them of my benevolent intentions, they will commence a diligent inquiry into the actual state and condition of every town and village in the mehaul. They will demand from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, and Putwarries of the district, a true and accurate description of each village and estate, of its waste and cultivated lands, of the condition of its inhabitants and peasantry, and the causes of their actual condition. They will further require from those officers the several revenue papers which are specified in a separate list, with which the Ameens have been furnished, and will submit immediately to the Presence the result of their investigations, respectively, with the several documents alluded to, with the least practicable delay.

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to attend the Ameen of your district immediately on his arrival within its limits, to confide in him as the servant of the Government, to convey to him every information regarding the state and condition of the district, which he may require and you possess, without the smallest partiality or reserve, and to produce and deliver every document which may be required by him without any hesitation or delay, being obedient to his orders in all things, and considering his favourable or unfavourable report as advantageous or injurious to your interests. You are, at the same time, strictly prohibited from giving or offering to the Ameen, or to any one of his deputies or servants, directly or indirectly, the smallest nuzzer, or bribe, or douceur, on any pretext whatsoever. Consider these as the positive orders of the Presence, and act accordingly in every respect.

Draft

Second Draft of a Purwannah to be addressed to the Aumils, or Farmers, amended by the Resident, and transmitted in his Letter to the Vizier, under date the 25th April 1811.

Bengal Political Consultations,
21 June 1811.

Enclosures in
Resident's Letter.

Whereas the prosperity and happiness of my people form the leading objects of my care, I have therefore, at this auspicious season, with the friendly advice and concurrence of the Honourable Company's Government whose interests are identified with my own, determined to abolish for ever the system of farming the revenue, which has hitherto prevailed in my dominions, and to introduce in the room of it such a system, that the Zemindars, cultivators, and peasantry, may with confidence and security employ themselves in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, and pay the just revenues of the government without any failure or delay: and as this measure cannot properly be carried into effect without first ascertaining the condition and assets of the several meahals in my dominions, I have now deemed it proper to appoint and depute able and upright Ameens, with particular instructions for their guidance, to collect and transmit to the Presence all revenue papers connected with the several meahals....., Ameen has accordingly been deputed to your Elaka; and you are hereby strictly commanded, immediately on his arrival in your district, to attend on him, and assist him as much as possible in the performance of the duties of his office; more particularly in the collection of the papers which are detailed in the sunnud of amanut. You will cause all the Zemindars and Seeghadars to attend on the Ameen without delay, and to produce the papers which may be required by him. You will yourself, at the same time, continue to make the collections of the arrears of your Elaka. agreeably to the kabooleat and putta, till the end of the month of Jeth, or eventually of Assaur, so that no balances may remain due in the district at all events by the end of Assaur; and, if any of the Zemindars should be dilatory in paying up the arrears which may be due to you, the Ameen will assist you in realizing them, agreeably to the orders of the Sircar, till the commencement of the month of Sawun, when your authority will finally cease, and you will have nothing to do with the collections.

But as it is not my wish or intention that any of the farmers in my dominions should suffer loss by this change of the system, it is hereby particularly enjoined, with a reference to all Zemindars who may be in an impoverished condition, and may not have the means of liquidating their balances to the State, that you, in conjunction with the Ameen, do minutely investigate the circumstances, and if satisfied of their incapacity to pay, that bonds for the just balances be taken from them, attested by the Chowdries and Canoongoes, in which case the amount of those several bonds shall be carried to your credit with the Government at the time of settling your accounts.

Consider these as the positive orders of the Presence, and act accordingly in every respect.

We have been honoured by the receipt of the drafts of sunnuds, appointing us to the office of Ameens, and we have understood your Excellency's commands for collecting the revenue documents, &c. We accordingly submit to the Presence

Bengal Political

Vizier's Letter.*

Presence our sentiments regarding such orders as we can perform, and such as we consider to be impossible. Agreeably to the orders we have received we will stick up the proclamation in the Sudder Kutcherry, and explain its contents to the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Mokuddums, Putwarries, and Zemindars, whom we shall assemble for that purpose; we will further cause copies of it in Persian to be promulgated in the villages and other parts of the country. But we request that your Excellency will be pleased to point out to us, what measures are to be adopted towards Talookadars who do not attend the Kutcherry and pay no attention to our summons.

We will submit a list of all the villages in the Purgunnah, both aslee and dakhilee, under the signature of the Seeghadars; but, with a reference to the jumma for the last ten years of such villages as may have been held by Talookadars under one general kabooleat, the gross amount of the kabooleat only can be ascertained from the documents with the Seeghadars, and it is of course impossible to ascertain the jumma of each separate village. We request that your Excellency will be pleased to point out the mode of accomplishing this object, and we wait your orders on that head. We shall demand from the Seeghadars the jumma-wasil-baukee accounts of the last and present years, and shall submit those documents to the Presence.

An account of the assessments of all settled villages, though this can be ascertained from the wasil-baukee account, shall also be forwarded to the Presence.

An account of the jumma bundee of unsettled, or kham, villages, if it be found in the possession of the Seeghadars or Aumils, shall likewise be submitted to the Presence.

We shall also demand the hissab-kird from the Seeghadars and Aumils, and transmit it in obedience to your orders.

We will collect from the Seeghadars and Aumils such copies of puttass and kabooleats as they may have and forward them to the Presence; but as, in many cases, puttass are not granted to the Zemindars, what can be done in those cases?

Although a statement of the increase or decrease of assessment of villages be usually inserted in the wasil-baukee accounts, yet it shall be prepared and transmitted separately as directed.

A statement of the rent-free or exempted lands and villages, as also of nankar villages and lands, and of ready money nankar, with such sunnuds as may be found among the papers of the Canoongoes, shall be transmitted, but we cannot investigate the validity of any of the sunnuds in question.

The dustoor, and a mowazena of durbundee and biggethee of all such districts as possess any, shall be forwarded under the seal of the Seeghadars; but in many places they are not in use, and consequently cannot be obtained.

Detailed statements of sayer duties, with established rates of sayer, and a list of the different chowkies, shall be submitted under the seal of the Seeghadars.

The deductions are always stated in the wasil-baukee accounts of the villages; but a separate statement shall be prepared and transmitted agreeably to orders. We will also investigate into the beheree and present the particulars to the Presence.

Although the Itlak can be of no real use, yet, in conformity to your Excellency's orders, we will get it from the Aumil's Mutusuddies, and submit it to the Presence.

Agreeably to your Excellency's orders, we will attend to the rights of Zemindars, and will not transact business with any other person; and in cases of Zemindars' disputes, the sunnuds of both parties shall be examined, and copies of them, with a statement of the case, shall be submitted for your Excellency's decision.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
21 June 1811.

Vizier's Letter.

Aid shall be afforded to the farmers in the recovery of the balances which may be due to them from the Zemindars and others, agreeably to the engagements which they may have entered into. Those engagements shall be minutely inspected, and copies of them shall be transmitted to the Presence, under the signature of the Seeghadars; but the realization of all that may be due to the farmers from the Zemindar is impossible in all the month of Jeth, or even Assaur, because it is the custom in several mehals to withhold some of the instalments till the month of Sawun and Bhadoon, and consequently the balances can never be realized in Jeth or Assaur.

The mode laid down in the instructions for a triennial settlement may be adopted when Tehsildars shall be appointed, and the strictest orders may be issued to the Zemindars and principal Malgoozars to abide by their engagements with the cultivators and Assamees during the stipulated time; but it is totally impossible to make the Zemindars of this country accede to these proposals.

In the end of the month of Assaur, or when the Zemindars may be relieved from the demands of the present Aumils, we shall commence a personal tour and inspection of the districts, taking with us some intelligent persons acquainted with the state of the country, as ordered, and in the particular manner prescribed, &c., as in the words of the drafts.

A mowazena, or statement of the number of beegals in every district, ascertained by actual measurement, cannot possibly be furnished, in the short time which is prescribed, with any number of assistants.

The gross collections of the villages, under all their numerous heads, in which are included the expenses of the Zemindars and Talookadars, will never be furnished by the Putwarries, through fear of the Talookadars, until the Talookadars shall be expelled from the villages, or seized and put in confinement; and many of the Talookadars have no Putwarries in their Talookas, and consequently, in both cases, it will be impossible to perform this duty as your Excellency has been pleased to command.

The nuzzurana, douccurs, &c. &c. of the Aumils and other officers, which have been yearly and regularly paid to them by the Zemindars, may certainly be known from the papers in possession of the Seeghadars; but what has been given occasionally and secretly, to answer particular ends, can never, of course, be ascertained.

A statement of the monthly allowances and charges which may be required for Mutusuddies, Zillahdars, Peadas, Hircarrahs, and others, will be submitted to the Presence, when the name of the district and the rate of salary per lac shall be made known to us.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 9th May 1811.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

As the several persons in question have engaged to perform most of the duties which were prescribed in their instructions, and have offered a valid excuse for their probable inability to furnish one or two of the papers described, such as the mowazena or measurement of the district, which would certainly require a considerable period of time, although other excuses which they have offered appear to me to be frivolous, I shall postpone my remarks upon those, and submit to your Excellency hereafter a mode of accomplishing the objects which they have pronounced to be unattainable, as well as more particular instructions for the guidance of Tehsildars on some points which the Ameens have referred to, and which are totally foreign to their duty.

Letter

Lucknow.

Upon the whole, I am fully convinced that, after the business is fairly commenced, your Excellency will soon see and acknowledge the facility with which it will proceed, and the whole of the necessary documents be collected and transmitted to the Presence. I am only concerned to observe that your Excellency should allow yourself to be moved by such trifling impediments as those, which serve merely to procrastinate the important business in hand, and to occasion a loss of time which might otherwise be more profitably occupied. The division and subdivision of the country, in the manner suggested and approved, as the first indispensable step to the adoption of the subsequent measures, has not yet been arranged, I presume, or I should have been apprized of the arrangement; and yet this is a measure connected with your Excellency's records alone, which might have been settled in the course of a day, and followed up long ere now, if your Excellency had been so disposed, by the nomination and dispatch of the Ameens, so that, in the month, or more, which has already been unprofitably spent since the date of your Excellency's agreement, a considerable progress might have been made in the execution of the duties of the Ameens. Even now, if they be appointed and dispatched, a great deal may still be performed before the lapse of the season of investigation. I, therefore, repeat my expectation, that your Excellency will be pleased to announce to me the particulars of the division of the country, and of the appointment of the several Ameens, which must, ere this, I presume, have been determined, or otherwise that your Excellency will be pleased to give your attention to those important arrangements without any further delay.

With regard to what the Ameens have stated, respecting the custom in several meahuls of receiving the last instalments of revenue in the months of Sawun and Bhadoon, &c., it seems to me to be very surprizing, that they should have learned this circumstance so soon; but as, at all events, the continuance of the authority of the farmers till the end of the month of Bhadoon would, in my mind, be highly injurious to the progress and influence of the new system of assessment, I suggest for your Excellency's consideration, that the collection of those two instalments, in the districts where so pernicious a custom may prevail, be committed to the Ameens of those districts, and that credit for the amount of them be given to the several farmers, whose authority with their leases should cease in Assaur.

I return the statements of the Ameens, having taken a copy of them for the office.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 11th May 1811.)

I have received your letter of the 9th instant, in answer to mine of the 8th, with three arzees of the Ameens, copies of which have been returned by you.

With regard to what you have stated, that as the several persons in question have "engaged to perform most of the duties which were prescribed in their "instructions," &c., the case is this, that the plea advanced by the Ameens of their inability to furnish the mowazena, or measurement of the district, has been considered by you as a valid one, and you have not thought proper to dispute it; if therefore, the measurement of the district cannot be submitted to the Presence within the prescribed period, how can I agree to a settlement at the commencement of the ensuing year, from which loss will of necessity arise to me; or indeed, how can the settlement of all the Talookadars be accomplished? And further, if the revenue documents for the last ten years of each village distinctly cannot be procured in the Elakas of several Talookadars, which the Ameens have also declared to be impracticable, how, in this case, can the real jumma or assets of such Elakas be correctly ascertained? and if the registers of the collectors of kham or unsettled villages be not transmitted to the Presence, for which the Ameens have likewise offered an excuse, how can the real condition of those villages be made known?

You

You have further stated your conviction, that "when the business is fairly commenced, I shall soon see and acknowledge the facility with which it will proceed," (recapitulate; &c.).

Bengal Political

Letter
from the Vizier.

Rest assured, that I have no hesitation whatever as to the introduction of the system recommended, and, on the contrary, that I am zealously employed in putting it into a train of adoption; but it was absolutely necessary that the contents of the draft of instructions should be clearly explained to the Ameens, and this being accordingly done, what they have submitted has been sent for your information. I have also issued orders to Dyakrishen to arrange all the documents in his hands, with a view to the division of my dominions, and such documents as he may possess he will of course arrange accordingly.

With regard to what you have stated of the delay in the nomination and dispatch of the Ameens, &c.

The appointment and dispatch of the Ameens is my sincere wish and intention, nor have I any desire to delay it; but as this is a business of importance, how can it be done in a hurry?

The Ameens must first receive their sunnuds from the Presence, and prepare the subordinate officers who are to accompany them; must give in their Hazir-Zaminy bonds, their tussuroof-zaminy obligations, and moochulkas; and having done so, they may be dispatched; in the accomplishment of this business hundreds of men will be employed. God grant that the new system be speedily introduced, and that my revenue may be increased by it, that the comfort and happiness of my subjects be established, and that no loss whatever be incurred by me in its progress.

With regard to what you have stated, that "it is very surprising that the Ameens should have so soon learned that it is customary in several mehauls to suspend the last instalments of revenue in the months of Sawun and Bhadoon," &c., the case is this: As the Ameens are inhabitants of my dominions, they are of course well informed of the above circumstance, which indeed is generally known.

With regard to what you have stated, that "if it be the custom in several of the mehauls of my dominions to collect the revenues in Bhadoon the Ameens can collect those instalments," &c.

I desire that you reconsider attentively the draft of the perwannahs to Aumils, in which they are directed to investigate the condition of such Zemindars as may be unable to liquidate their balances, in conjunction with the Ameens of their districts, and, in the event of their actual inability to take bonds from them, attended by the Chowdries and Canoongoes, that credit in account may hereafter be given to the Aumils for the balances of such Zemindars; thus the collection of balances from indigent Ryots only will be the duty of the Tehsildars to be hereafter appointed, and not the collection of instalments for Sawun and Bhadoon, the duty of the present Ameens; exclusive of which the Ameens have positively refused to collect any part of those instalments, and thus I shall suffer a heavy loss of my revenue, and several lacs of rupees will never be realized. How then can you recommend to me a measure, by the adoption of which I must sustain so heavy a loss? Formerly, in the draft of the perwannah addressed to Tehsildars, I deemed it proper to insert Assaur instead of Jeth, because the kistbundy from the Moostajers or farmers concludes with the month of Assaur; but now the Ameens having stated that instalments in many mehauls go on till Sawun and Bhadoon, it seems necessary that the period in the draft of the perwannahs to Aumils be altered for Sawun and Bhadoon, in order that I suffer no loss.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 16th May 1811.)

I have received your letter of the 25th April, in answer to mine of the 21st of that month, containing your answers to my statement of apprehensions in the case of the deputation of Ameens, and introduction of the proposed system, together with three amended drafts of the proclamation and instructions to Aumils and Ameens.

You have stated, that my cordial concurrence in the propriety of the proposed measures, and sincere resolution of carrying them into complete effect, are all that can possibly be required to ensure advantage and success.

The case is this: That as, immediately on the introduction of the new system, the present settlement of the country must be entirely subverted, and no part of it can remain, and consequently the failure of the new system, or the delay or impossibility of carrying it into complete effect, must be productive of certain loss and injury to me; it follows, that a want of attention and diligence upon my part to give effect to the system in question, cannot on any ground be supposed. But with regard to a system of administration, the adoption and execution of which is extremely difficult and impracticable, my attention and diligence must of course be totally unavailing. If, on the other hand, you will be pleased to suggest such a plan for the administration of the proposed system, as shall be conformable with the terms of the treaty, compatible with the perfect exercise of my independent authority, so as that no injury nor falling off, the most minute, in my authority can be occasioned, nor any the smallest loss of revenue from whatever cause, can arise, and you satisfy me as to all those particulars; how then can I refuse to comply with and adopt your suggestions?

With regard to your observation, that my "rejection of certain clauses in the drafts, without stating the grounds of it, was contrary to your natural expectations, and that the insertion of the words, with the advice and concurrence of the British Government," &c., the case is this: The rejection of the sentences in question, and especially of the abovementioned words, cannot in reality be considered as effecting in any degree the particular object in view, namely, the introduction of the new system; but, on the contrary, those particular words must be considered as totally redundant: and having perused them with the minutest attention, I cannot, upon any principle, consent to their insertion in the drafts, nor shall they therefore be inserted. And with regard to your statement of the sentiments with which the British Government may view my rejection of those sentences, as you cannot fail to recollect that, at the commencement of this business, I stated to you my intention of perusing and altering the drafts, and discussing the terms of them with you before they should be finally admitted, notwithstanding which you transmitted them in their original state to the Presidency, I leave it to yourself to decide what answer I can make to your statement. Your alterations respecting expelled Zemindars in the draft of instructions to Ameens are approved and admitted, and I enclose my replies to your answers regarding the fears which I have expressed on the introduction of the new system.

Vizier's Letter.

Replies to the Resident's Answers by His Excellency the Vizier. (Received with His Excellency's Letter of the 16th May 1811.)

You have stated, that "the farmers of the above-mentioned meahals have doubtless, in most instances, taken security from the landholders at the period of the settlement, and at all events now as the rubbee crop must be cut down," &c. The fact is this: That in those meahals both rules are adopted. From some security is taken, and from others it is not usual to demand security; consequently from such landholders as have not found security for their rents in the case of disorder arising from the new system, the dues of Government cannot be realized.

With regard to what you have stated, that "it is not necessary nor probable that the whole of the documents required should at once be submitted to the Presence," &c.

Bengal Political
Consultations
21 June 1811.

It does not seem to me to be possible to peruse such voluminous documents in time; and when you see the number of papers that will be received, you will be convinced of the impracticability of perusing them.

Enclosure in the Vizier's Letter.

You have stated, that "the new system of assessment being much milder than the former, and tending evidently to the comfort and happiness of the Ryots, and to the ease and security of the landholders," &c.

Although the new system appear milder to you, and though it be also my wish that this system should be successfully administered, yet the fact is, that the Talookadars and the whole of the Zemindars in my dominions have long been in the habits of concealing and withholding the real assets of their lands; and the new system being calculated to bring those practices to light, and to expose the real capability of each particular estate, it is impossible, in my judgment, to expect that this system should be agreeable to them; and, on the contrary, I am greatly apprehensive that its introduction will cause the Zemindars to retire, nor can we possibly expect that it will be established in the manner we wish, since it has not yet been properly carried into effect in the Honourable Company's ceded and conquered provinces, although upwards of ten years have elapsed since its first introduction into those provinces. Of what avail, therefore, will be my cordial concurrence in a system, which it is impossible or extremely difficult to accomplish?

With respect to your observation, that "as the revenues of the country have been hitherto yearly collected under my authority, and consequently that the jumma of every district, as hitherto realized, may be known by a reference to the records," &c.

The revenue documents of such Elakas as may be found in my office may, of course, be compared with the documents furnished by the Ameens; but how are the documents of the Elakas to be examined respecting which I may have no records in the office; and in this case, how are the real assets of the whole of my dominions to be ascertained?

In answer to your observation, that "the perfection of any measure or system is not to be expected at once, but attainable by degrees," &c.

As you have yourself thus acknowledged the impracticability of the settlement of the whole country agreeably to the new system at once, and I also am thoroughly convinced that it is impossible, why not acquiesce in my proposition for commencing, by way of experiment, in one Elaka in the first instance; to which proposition you have hitherto declined to reply?

With regard to your remark, that "if the Ameens whom I have selected be really capable persons, and discharge the duties of their office," &c.

The best persons who could be found here after a diligent search have been fixed on for those offices, but they have declared the performance of some of the duties prescribed by the instructions to be impossible: and with respect to your observation, that "the whole of the Seeghadars must have Persian documents in their possession," &c., if this be really the case, the delay will not be so great as I have calculated, but otherwise the appointment of Amlah will be of no avail, and my present fears will be realized.

With regard to your remark that "you cannot conceive how the introduction of the new system," &c., my confidence is not at all increased by this remark, because whenever the Ameens shall be appointed to their respective districts, and it shall be known that on their arrival the authority of the present Tehsildars is to cease, it is impossible that disorder should not arise; and though I by no means wish to dispute further with you on the subject, yet my mind is by no means satisfied, and I cannot but expect loss and disorder in the country. But you will yourself witness the losses that I shall suffer by those measures. My fears on the subject have been explained to you, and every point on which I am dissatisfied has been written.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
21 June 1811.

With regard to what you state, that "if the system recommended," &c.

I have only to say, that whatever you have suggested has been done; and if, hereafter, any disturbance or disorder should arise, I look to the Honourable Company for its suppression.

With regard to your recommendation of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan.

The Hukeem and all other persons, who have regularly paid the revenue of the Sircar, shall be honoured by the commands of the Presence.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 16th May 1811.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter dated the 11th instant, in reply to mine of the 9th.

As it is my decided opinion that any further altercation or correspondence regarding the excuses, whether valid or frivolous, alleged by the Ameens, can tend only to procrastinate the introduction of the salutary system of reform recommended by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council; as not one of those excuses of the Ameens, even admitting their validity, is of a nature to preclude the introduction of that system, or to impede its progress in the manner which the British Government desires, namely, to the immediate amelioration of the condition of your Excellency's landholders and peasantry, and to the consequent advantage of the State, as well as the future increase of its revenue; as, further, it can be no duty of my station to obviate the excuses of those Ameens selected by your Excellency exclusively, nor is the subject, in any point of view, a becoming subject of correspondence for your Excellency and me to engage in; in addition to which it is remarkable that two of those very Ameens, whose excuses your Excellency has furnished, were employed under my authority in Bundelcund, and performed all the duties which are now prescribed to them without the smallest objection or excuse, and to my entire satisfaction: under these circumstances, I can only repeat my suggestion of the expediency of your dispatching those Ameens, and others equally qualified, to every district of your dominions without any further delay; delivering to them, however, before their departure, the proclamations, purwannahs, and instructions, which I submitted to your Excellency in the terms of my original drafts.

A perpetual, or even a decennial settlement of the revenue, which would require a minute investigation to ascertain the real assets of the lands, has not been recommended to your Excellency, nor is it advisable for the present; on the contrary, a triennial settlement, at a moderate rate of assessment, for the purpose of giving confidence to the Zemindars and peasantry, and encouraging the cultivation of the soil, is all that has been suggested to your Excellency, and all that our Government would recommend; and for this beneficial purpose, the duties engaged for by those six Ameens, and the documents which they have promised to furnish, if executed and prepared with fidelity and zeal, in the spirit and terms of my instructions, by all the officers whom your Excellency may appoint, will, in my mind, be amply sufficient. And further, a triennial settlement, proceeding on the labours of those Ameens, if concluded agreeably to my suggestions, will fully answer the ends which the British Government, and your Excellency I trust, have in view, by the introduction of the new system, in its commencement.

To conclude: as your Excellency must recollect, that in the early stage of this discussion, with the manifest view of precluding those altercations which have now taken place, and facilitating the progress of the reform, I suggested to you, in an earnest manner, the selection and appointment of Ameens and other officers with my previous knowledge and concurrence, and your Excellency rejected that suggestion, it follows as a necessary consequence, that your Excellency,

Excellency, in calling upon me to obviate the excuses which those Ameens may be taught, or may think proper, to submit, is imposing on the British Government a task which we are not bound to perform, and which on my part would be endless and impracticable.

Sir:

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. His Excellency the Vice-President in Council has perused with great interest and attention your despatch of the 28th ultimo, reporting in continuation your proceedings and your communications with the Nawaub vizier, on the subject of the meditated reform of the internal administration of the country. His Excellency in Council considers you to have manifested in the progress of your proceedings the same degree of meritorious energy and ability that has distinguished their commencement; and Government has only to regret that the object of your exertions has necessarily been not merely to devise and regulate the details of a new and improved system of assessment and collection, but principally to remove the objections, and counteract the obstacles which the Vizier himself, either openly or secretly, has opposed to the introduction of it.

2. It is evident that the Vizier, while he admits the necessity of a reform because he can neither deny the facts nor resist the arguments on which that necessity is founded, and while he acknowledges the obligation imposed on him by treaty of executing such reform at the suggestion and with the advice of the British Government, does not desire that it should take effect, and that, under the influence of this disposition, his efforts are employed to render the proposed system abortive, by means consistent with an ostensible solicitude to promote the success of it.

3. It is to be apprehended, that the inclination of his mind will lead him, and his unlimited means of clandestine influence and control will enable him to realize all the difficulties and impediments which he has represented as opposing the practicability of the meditated plan of reform, but which do not really belong to it. He will then be disposed to triumph in the fulfilment of his predictions, to charge the British Government, as in fact he does at present, with the pursuit of a chimerical system of theoretical improvement, tending only to produce confusion and loss of revenue, and to deduce, from its failure, the practical superiority of that mode of assessment and collection which, having been established from distant time, is, however defective, best adapted to the habits and genius of the people, and best calculated to realize the resources of the country.

4. In truth, those enlarged principles of polity which embrace a consideration for the comfort and happiness of the people, which provide for the security of the rights and property of the subjects of the realm, for their protection against the abuses of power, for the control of injustice and oppression, which reject the allurements of immediate pecuniary advantage in favour of the more distant but solid benefits arising from the purity of the administration and the general prosperity of the country, are foreign to the character of the Vizier, and adverse to the natural propensities of his mind and disposition. These now appear to be too firmly established to admit of the expectation which Government was willing originally to indulge, that they might be made to yield to the force of argument and reason, addressed to an understanding certainly of no ordinary class, and supported by all the influence of the British power, the stipulations of treaty, and your zealous and able agency.

5. These reflections, which His Excellency in Council is reluctantly compelled to form, but which the general tenor of your reports, and especially the contents of your despatch, now acknowledged, naturally suggest, preclude any sanguine expectation of the ultimate success of your efforts for the attainment of the important objects of the Governor-General in Council's instructions of the 28th December. The purpose of stating these reflections, however, is not to discourage rage the continuance of your efforts, but partly to afford you the satisfaction of knowing that the Vice-President in Council is fully aware of the difficulties which oppose them, and will not be disposed to ascribe their too probable failure to any defect of ability, or exertion, on your part, and partly to place you on your guard against those arts, by which the just and benevolent intentions of the British Government, in urging the reform, might be converted into the charge of having occasioned a material defalcation of his Excellency's revenues, and involved his country in confusion, by effecting the subversion of a long established system of assessment and collection, without substituting another, either efficient in its operation or adequate to the purposes for which it was proposed. While you persevere in your endeavours, therefore, to accomplish, at least, a partial reform of the Vizier's administration, you will be careful not to suffer the effects of his Excellency's open, or clandestine, obstruction to be charged upon the inefficacy of the system itself, as recommended to his adoption.

6. I am directed to add, that the explanation contained in the sixth paragraph of your letter, on the subject of the resumption of the farms, is entirely satisfactory to his Excellency in Council.

The 5th July 1811.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. At a conference with his Excellency the Vizier on the morning of the 25th ultimo, referred to in my despatch of the 28th, I used every argument that I could think of to remove the groundless apprehensions which his Excellency had thought proper to urge as a pretext for postponing the arrangements for the necessary reform in his administration.

2. I stated to him, that the result of our conference on the 4th of April last, before quitting Lucknow, and particularly, the gracious manner in which that conference ended, had impressed me with the firmest belief of his being at length happily convinced of the necessity of a general reform in his Government, and of his having approved, and resolved on conviction to adopt, the principal measures which I had suggested for that purpose. That every one of the measures in question had been discussed at considerable length ; nay, that the drafts of the proclamation and instructions had been many days in his Excellency's possession, and must, of course, have been frequently perused, before the date of his engagement to give effect to the several arrangements, which he seemed now to be labouring to subvert. That the apprehensions, doubts, and excuses, which he had subsequently thought proper to detail, had they existed at the date of his engagements, would doubtless have been stated at that time, and however groundless and imaginary they appeared, might then have been entitled to consideration ; though even then, it was sufficiently obvious that they could not have been successfully pleaded in bar of the fulfilment of obligations which former treaties imposed. That the obligation to establish an improved system of administration in his Excellency's reserved dominions, as expressed in the Treaty of Cession, was manifestly absolute, and unqualified by any provision whatever for the removal of doubts or apprehensions which its fulfilment might subsequently induce.

That his Excellency's engagement with Marquess Wellesley to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its counsels, in the establishment of an improved system of administration, was equally positive and unconditional ; and that, finally, the four principal and most important points of his agreement with me, under date the 4th of April, were as absolute and unqualified in their terms as any of the foregoing engagements. Under these circumstances, stances, it was obvious, I maintained, that his Excellency's statement of doubts delivered on the 21st of April, had been exhibited a great deal too late to entitle it even to a hearing, as a pretext for delaying the arrangements to which he had previously agreed; and that the attention which I had bestowed on that statement, from motives of respect for his Excellency, or the endeavours which I had made, and was now about to make, for the removal of his imaginary fears, could not, on any principle, be considered as a dereliction, in the smallest degree, of my title to insist on the performance of every one of his engagements.

3. Having applied the foregoing remarks as a precaution against any improper advantage which the Vizier might be disposed to take of my continuing the discussion of his doubts, I proceeded to re-examine the grounds of the various objections which he had stated, in the order in which they are detailed in the enclosure of his Excellency's letter under date the 16th May.

4. As a prelude to the examination and exposition of the frivolous objections which he had urged, I adverted to the extraordinary remark, which is contained in his Excellency's letter giving cover to the document in question, having reference to the insertion of the words "with the advice and concurrence of the British Government," in the drafts of the proclamation and instructions. "Your Excellency's objection to the above clause in the drafts," I observed, "is conveyed in the following terms—'The rejection of the abovementioned words cannot be considered as affecting in any degree the particular object in view, but, on the contrary, those words must be considered as totally redundant,' (that is I presume neither useful nor injurious to the object,) 'and therefore you have determined to reject them.' Is it not singular, I will ask your Excellency, and does it not obviously admit of an inference hostile to your avowed sentiments of friendship for the British Government, as well as desire to conform with its advice, that the rejection of a clause in a public document, which I have pronounced to be essential to the success of the contemplated arrangements, should be accompanied by an admission on your own part, that the clause is merely redundant, neither useful nor injurious to the important purposes in view; and if such be the nature of your Excellency's cavil against a public declaration to your subjects of the legitimate source from which a reform in your administration should spring, namely, the united and identified counsels and interests of your own and the Company's Government, what reasonable hope can be entertained of your Excellency's cordial concurrence in any of the subsequent measures?"

5. His Excellency interrupted me here, for the purpose, as it appeared, of explaining to me the real motive for his rejection of the abovementioned clause in the drafts. "If these words be admitted," he observed, "my subjects will immediately infer, that the remaining part of my dominions, like the ceded territory, has been transferred to the Honourable Company, and that nothing remains to me but a name."

My answer to such an argument as this can scarcely require to be recorded. "Every measure of the meditated reform," I observed, "is to be adopted under your Excellency's exclusive authority, every officer to be employed is a person of your own selection, as well as a natural subject of your government. The reports of those officers are to be made exclusively to yourself; their conduct to be judged of by you; the revenues of the country, as usual, to be paid into your Excellency's treasury; your dominions and your authority over them secured under the Company's guarantee to yourself, your heirs, and successors."

6. The above answer receiving no immediate reply, I proceeded to the examination of his Excellency's doubts, with a reference to the measures of reform.

1st. "In some meahauls security is taken, and in others it is not usual; consequently, from such landholders as have not given security, the dues of Government will not be realized."

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To an objection so indefinite as this, I observed, it could only be necessary to offer an answer in general terms, namely, that for the just dues of the Government, in cases where the Aumils had neglected to obtain personal and collateral security, the only security which existed was the proceeds of the crop on the ground, and that this could not at all be affected by the appointment of Ameens to investigate the state of the districts; in addition to which, the delay that had already occurred in the appointment and deputation of Ameens would preclude their arrival in their districts till the season of collection for the current year was at an end.

2d. " Although the new system appear milder to you, yet the Talookadars and the whole of the Zemindars in my dominions having been long in the habits of concealing and withholding the real assets of the lands, and the new system being calculated to bring those practices to light, &c., I am apprehensive that its introduction will cause the Zemindars to retire; nor can we expect that it will be established as we wish, since it has not yet been properly carried into effect in the Honourable Company's provinces after the lapse of a period of ten years."

" The intention of this argument," I replied, " in as far as I understand it, is to oppose the wisdom and justice, as well as the practicability, of a reform in the system of assessment and collection of the revenue in your Excellency's dominions. The landholders and peasantry of your country are stated to be the oppressors, the embezzlers of your revenue; the government to be the sufferer and the oppressed. Your Excellency has been pleased to arraign the wisdom and justice of the Company's administration in its own territory, to assert that disorder exists in the ceded provinces after all the labour and attention which have been bestowed on them during a period of ten years, and to infer from those premises, that we meditate additional disorder in your dominions and a loss of revenue to yourself. Is this a true picture of the relative condition of your Excellency's and the British dominions? Has the manifest and avowed system of coercion and arbitrary exaction, which prevailed and does now prevail throughout Oude, supported for a series of years by a numerous irregular army at the beck of a mercenary farmer, and of late years by a British regular force, yearly, nay constantly employed in the suppression of refractory Zemindars and demolition of all the strong-holds in the country, left the power as well as the inclination in the landholders to resist the just demands of the State, or to embezzle any part of its revenues? and is the alleged practice of concealing and withholding the real assets of the lands compatible, in any degree, with the alleged efficiency of your Excellency's present Aumils, supported as they have constantly been by detachments of the British troops, both at the periods of their assessment and collections? Are the condition of the landholders and peasantry of Oude, the facility of the collection of its revenue, the state of the country at large, to be compared with those of the Company's provinces, where not a sepoy, far less an army, is ever employed to support the assessment or collections, and where the gradual increase of the revenue, as well as the happiness of the people, is secured by the influence of the system proposed, under certain necessary modifications, for your Excellency's immediate adoption? The answers to those questions, I trust, if your Excellency consider them candidly, although many more of a similar tendency might be asked, will be a ready and ingenuous disavowal of the apprehensions which you have hitherto entertained."

At the words " gradual increase of the revenue" his Excellency interrupted me, to state that this increase might be otherwise accounted for by reflecting on the low valuation at which the Ceded Provinces had been transferred; and I answered, that there were no documents nor authentic information before me, to establish or controvert this assertion generally, but that, with a reference to the district of Rohilcund, the fact was certainly otherwise.

3d. His Excellency's third ground of apprehension, I observed, was like the first, indefinite as well as frivolous, and seemed totally unworthy of a reply.

" The

"The revenue documents of such districts as may be found in my office may be compared, &c., but how are the documents to be examined of those districts respecting which I may have no records?"

Did his Excellency wish to be supposed ignorant, or to want the means of ascertaining the amount of the revenue hitherto derived from any district in his dominions; and if he were really ignorant, what argument did this ignorance afford, save for the necessity of an immediate investigation, in the manner which I had proposed. Regarding the conclusion of this part of his Excellency's objections, namely, "his proposal for commencing by way of experiment in one district in the first instance," I observed, that it was, in my own opinion, totally nugatory and vain, as well as in direct opposition to the tenor of my instructions, and of the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency, and was therefore out of the question. His Excellency had manifestly the power, and I feared also the inclination, of perverting such a partial experiment as this into an argument for the continuance of the present vicious system, by frustrating the beneficial arrangements suggested in any one district of his dominions, and even by sacrificing a portion of the revenue of that district for the attainment of the object in view.

4th. The fourth ground of apprehension had a reference to the excuses of the Ameens, and to the difficulty of rendering the revenue documents into Persian; and as all the excuses of the Ameens had been already satisfactorily discussed in my letter of the 16th of May, to which his Excellency had not favoured me with an answer, I considered that portion of the subject to be exhausted.

5th. The fifth and last ground of apprehension, namely, disorder to be generally excited in the country by the supersession of so many public officers at once, on the appointment and deputation of an Ameen to every district in the country, appearing somewhat more specious and plausible than any of the foregoing pretexts, gave rise to a longer discussion. I observed, in the first place, to his Excellency, that the whole force of the argument on his part, with a reference to this ground of alarm, was deduced from the unhappy procrastination ascribable solely to himself, in the adoption of the salutary measure which I had originally proposed to him so far back as the 9th of March.

At the period to which I alluded, the Rubbee harvest was still standing, or cut down under attachment by the Aumils, and guarded by the Sebundee troops of the State. The landholders were all in attendance for the purpose of concluding their settlements. Many, if not all of them, had given bonds for their personal appearance, when called for, during the remainder of the season of assessment and collection of the revenue; and all of them had that obvious interest in the produce of the harvest on the ground, which would have secured their personal attendance, and precluded disorders in their districts till the actual arrival of the Ameens, and the promulgation of his Excellency's proclamations should have inspired confidence in their minds, and have put an end to every rational fear of any future insurrection or commotion. Even supposing the inclination, in a few turbulent landholders, to take advantage of the meditated change for the purpose of exciting disorder in their districts, still the season of the year was then by no means so advanced as to preclude the employment of troops for the purpose of suppressing such disorders; and it was unnecessary for me to remark, with what genuine satisfaction I should, under those circumstances, have complied with any requisition from his Excellency for the aid of the Company's forces. The present advanced period of the year, I admitted, and the approach of the periodical rains, though they gave no ground whatever for the fear of insurrection or commotion in consequence of the deputation of Ameens, might tend greatly to limit the exertions of those officers in the investigation committed to their charge, and the advantages of those exertions; since many obstacles might be opposed to the investigation and collection of papers by the intrigues of the present Aumils, if permitted to remain in authority in the districts till the end of Sawun or Bhadoon, as his Excellency proposed, as well as by the occupation of the landholders and peasantry in the necessary duties of husbandry during the rains, by their known aversion to attending on the officers of of Government during those months, the want of efficient support on the part of the Ameens, and finally, the local circumstances of the districts. But all these disadvantages, I maintained, were by no means of a nature to preclude or suspend the adoption of the meditated arrangements, nor to limit the beneficial effects which must ultimately and permanently flow from them; while, on the other hand, the disadvantages in question, or any other difficulty, which might occur in the execution of the proposed arrangements, being ascribable solely to his Excellency's own procrastination, could, on no principle, be admitted as a valid pretext for a refusal to fulfil his engagements.

7. Some further and more general conversation ensued on the subject of his Excellency's engagements, during which he repeatedly recognized and admitted the obligation of all his agreements with me, and expressed his desire to fulfil them, if a mode of fulfilling them could be devised to remove the principal apprehensions which still preyed on his mind, namely, the fear of disorder in the country, and of a diminution of his independent authority; and by this conversation we were led to a retrospective perusal of the four articles of agreement contained in his Excellency's amended replies of the 4th of April last.

8. Those articles of agreement I now proceeded to abstract for his Excellency's reconsideration, connecting each article in its turn with one of the four fundamental principles of reform, as stated in the instructions of the Government, under date the 28th of December, as follows: viz.

First. A division and subdivision of his dominions into Zillahs and mehaults, with a view to facilitate the adoption of all the subsequent arrangements. This preliminary measure his Excellency declared to be totally unobjectionable, as far as it was practicable, and offered of his own accord to send his Dewan, Diakrishen, to me for the purpose of concluding the arrangement.

Secondly. The deputation of Ameens to all the mehaults, to investigate the state of the country and collect revenue documents, with a view to the moderate assessment of the lands. To the immediate and universal adoption of this measure his Excellency opposed his apprehension of general disorder in the country by the supersession of all his officers at once, and also his engagements with some farmers who deserved well of his Government, and whose districts were in excellent order. This latter objection by his Excellency occasioned an inquiry, on my part, into the number and extent of the engagements to which he alluded, and an observation that, if I were rightly informed, the whole of the leases in question were now about to expire, and that, indeed, the practice of his Government, in as far as I had observed it, had always restricted those leases to the term of a single year. His Excellency admitted this fact generally, adverted also to the recent death of one of his principal farmers, and mentioned particularly the districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, under the charge of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, whose lease did not certainly expire, he observed, with the present fusly year, though he was ignorant of the term of its duration. From his Excellency's further remarks, I gathered, that a moiety, if not more, of his dominions was already under the management of amaunee Aumils, or officers corresponding in some degree in their functions with those employed by our Government as Ameens; and this circumstance suggested a proposal, which I was about to make for the removal of his Excellency's apprehensions, when he interrupted me by stating it himself, namely, that the investigation and collection of revenue papers, should be committed to the officers already employed in those districts, under the instructions which I had suggested, and with the further benefit of the proclamation in his Excellency's amended terms. By this arrangement he admitted that a number of his apprehensions would be removed; and it was agreed that this proposal should be committed to writing, and maturely considered by his Excellency, who promised to signify his determination in the course of a few days.

The third and fourth articles of agreement were now read to his Excellency, namely, a provision for a triennial settlement with the landholders, &c., at a moderate rate of assessment, under a gradation of engagements for that period, to be guaranteed by the Government, and ultimately the establishment of a court of justice and efficient police in each Zillah, when the settlement of the revenue revenue should be concluded. To both those articles his Excellency implicitly adhered; and our conference of the 25th ultimo broke up with a promise, on my part, of submitting the heads of it in writing in the course of that or the following day.

Consultations,

9. In the evening of the same day I transmitted accordingly to his Excellency an abstract of the heads of our conference, a copy of which is enclosed; and on the 29th ultimo I had the honour of receiving from his Excellency an answer to that abstract, a translation of which is enclosed, and in which the Honourable the Vice-President in Council will not fail to observe that his Excellency the Vizier has still professed his adherence to all the articles of agreement, though the fulfilment of them be declared to be dependent on the removal of a few remaining apprehensions, for which his Excellency has been pleased to refer me to documents already in my possession, having no connection whatever with the modified arrangement proposed.

10. In reply to this latter reference, so characteristic of the Vizier's disposition, and to some other objections which he has offered in his answer to the abstract of our conference, I thought it my duty to address a letter to him, under date the 30th ultimo, a copy of which is enclosed, requiring an explicit detail of all his remaining objections; and to this letter I have not hitherto been favoured with a reply.

11. His Excellency's health has been recently reported to me, by himself and by several others, to be affected in some degree by the extraordinary occupation of his mind in the progress of this discussion, or by casual imprudences of his own, and this circumstance, combined with the death of a grand-daughter and one of his sisters, has precluded my urging him for a reply to my letter of the 30th ultimo, or bringing any other important question under his view.

12. I shall, however, take an early opportunity of soliciting the favour of a reply to my letter above noticed, and of urging the immediate adoption of the several measures of reform, and I shall not fail to apprise you of the result of those proceedings, for the further information of the Government.

25th May 1811.*

Resident's Letter.

1st. Recalled to his Excellency's recollection the four fundamental and indispensable principles which must form the basis of a reform in his administration, namely; First, A just and moderate assessment of the revenue to be settled with all the landholders of the country; Secondly, A settlement for a fixed term, not less than three years; Thirdly, The conclusion of engagements, in regular gradation, from the Aumil to the Ryot; and Fourthly, The guarantee of those engagements by the Government, and the establishment of a mode of obtaining redress in the case of a departure from those engagements.

2d. His Excellency, reminded of his absolute and unconditional engagements, voluntarily entered into with me, to give effect to the foregoing principles to which his engagements had reference, as follows: viz. First, A division and subdivision of his country into Zillahs, or departments, and meahuls. Secondly, The appointment and deputation of an Ameen to each mehaul, for the purpose of ascertaining its condition and collecting the revenue papers, with a provision that those papers should be submitted to my inspection, and if approved, should form the basis of a triennial settlement. Thirdly, The conclusion of a triennial settlement, under a gradation of engagements from the Tehsildar to the Ryot, with a provision that those engagements should be submitted for my inspection and satisfaction, in every case of a requisition for the aid of British troops to coerce the landholders or others; and Fourthly, The establishment of courts of justice and an efficient police in all the Zillahs and meahuls.

Consultations,

Enclosure in
Resident's Letter.

3d. His Excellency entreated to reflect on the obvious impossibility of his having been influenced by the extraordinary fears and apprehensions which are detailed in his recent letters at the time when he voluntarily and cheerfully entered into the foregoing engagements with me, since the fulfilment of any of those engagements, or the observance of any one of the fundamental principles of reform, seems totally incompatible with the existence of the apprehensions now entertained; while, on the other hand, a dereliction of any of the foregoing engagements, on my part, and a removal of his Excellency's doubts and apprehensions, all of which are, in my mind, imaginary and groundless, must appear to be equally impracticable. For example, if his Excellency assert that the deputation of Ameens will occasion loss of revenue, and as no loss of revenue, either present or future, must be incurred, that the Ameens cannot be deputed; and I answer to this objection, that a trifling present loss, even admitted, as the ordinary consequence of a reform, if tending to great and manifest future advantage, is in reality no loss whatever, and his Excellency persist in indulging a groundless apprehension, or maintaining an unestablished assertion, what argument can in such a case be applied? Again, if his Excellency assert that the system of assessment proposed to him has been tried in the Ceded Provinces for a period of ten years and has failed; nay, that the Ceded Provinces are now in disorder, and consequently that a similar system must create disorder in his dominions, and I answer to this objection, that the system in question has been entirely successful, that the Ceded Provinces are in perfect order, that agreeably to treaty we are entitled to require the adoption of similar measures in Oude, and that the success of those measures is easy and certain, if his Excellency will but concur in them; and his Excellency's reply to those arguments, that his fears are by no means removed; what further remedy can be offered for apprehensions so totally groundless? Yet such is the manifest nature of every doubt which his Excellency has urged. And those doubts and apprehensions being inconsistent with his Excellency's engagements, the alterations further which he has thought proper to make in the drafts that I submitted to him, being destructive of the objects of those drafts, I cannot possibly consider the deputation of Ameens, under such circumstances, and with such modifications of the drafts, as a fulfilment of his Excellency's engagements; more particularly under the influence of the assertion which his Excellency has been pleased to add, that in so deputing the Ameens he is acting by my advice, on the nature of which assertion I beg his Excellency to reflect.

4th. If the Ameens are not to be deputed in the manner, and with the proclamation, instructions, &c., suggested by me, what then is to be done, and how are his Excellency's engagements to be fulfilled? Under this head, a proposal mutually suggested for the purpose of obviating the apprehension of disorder, and loss of revenue, by the appointment of Ameens, namely, that, a large portion of the country being already amancee, the persons now in office be employed to collect the necessary papers under instructions agreeable to my draft. That in the districts now farmed, and of which the leases expire with the present year, such as the districts lately under Khanazad Khan, and Baraitch (the farmer being dead), &c., the measure of deputing Ameens, agreeably to my plan, be adopted, or some other equally effectual means of investigation be pursued, under his Excellency's exclusive authority, without advice or responsibility on my part; and with regard to Khyrabad and Mohumdie, the lease of which has some time to run, and cannot therefore be broken without the consent of the farmer, that his Excellency shall satisfy the farmer, for the sake of uniformity in his administration, and institute the necessary investigation in the manner above proposed.

5th. His Excellency finally reminded of the obvious propriety of answering the Governor-General's letter without delay.

Resident's Letter.

The first, second, and third fundamental principles, as stated in the heads of conference, coinciding with the articles of agreement which I transmitted to you on the 4th April last, I agree to. The fourth principle, respecting the guarantee of the engagements with the landholders and cultivators is also agreed to, to this effect, that the observance of the engagements in question will be under the guarantee of the Presence; and in the case of any breach of those engagements, redress shall be afforded to the Ryots under my authority.

The division and subdivision of the country, also the deputation of Ameens, the triennial settlement, and the introduction of the new system in the terms of the articles of agreement under date 4th of April, are all agreeable to the Presence; but as there is a small difference between what you have now submitted and the terms of my engagements abovementioned, I can only abide by those terms; and in the introduction of the new system, the removal of my doubts and fears is necessary according to promise. The insertion of those sentences, which I rejected from your drafts, cannot be admitted, because it will be productive of injurious effects.

With regard to the proposal for committing the investigation and collection of papers in the several districts, which are amaunee, to the officers already in charge, the adoption of this measure will certainly obviate many of my fears; but even then, a few of the doubts which are stated in the document before transmitted will still remain: and with regard to the investigation and collection of papers in the mehaults that are now farmed, by deputing Ameens as you suggest, if Ameens be deputed to those mehaults, the same fears and apprehensions will arise.

With regard again to Khyrabad and Mohumdie, there are three years and four months of the lease to expire; but I shall issue orders on the subject to Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, and forward his answer for your information.

In short, I still abide by all that I have written to you on this subject, and an answer to the Governor-General's letter shall be prepared, when all these matters shall be settled.

To His Excellency the Vizier, 6th Jemadee-ool-awul 1226, 30th May 1811.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's written answer to the personal communication which I made to you on the first of the month of Jemadee-ool-awul (25th May), an abstract of which was subsequently submitted to you in writing, as a reply to your Excellency's letter of the 22d of Rubbee-oos-sanee (16th May) and to the document which was enclosed in that letter

Letter

Lucknow.

Your Excellency having been pleased to remark that the abstract in question differs in a small degree from the contents of the articles of agreement under date 9th of Rubbee-ool-awul (4th April) I beg that your Excellency will specify the difference to which you allude, that I may explain it without any delay.

Your Excellency having further observed, that you cannot consent to the insertion of those words in the drafts, because they involve injurious consequences, and there being nothing further from my intention, and that of the British Government, than to insist on any measure productive of injurious effects, I request that your Excellency will detail to me the injurious consequences in your contemplation from the insertion of those words in the drafts.

Again, your Excellency having stated that, though the adoption of the new measures proposed with a reference to the amaunee Aumils would certainly remove a number of your doubts, yet that certain others described in the original document would still remain in your mind; as, previously to the conference alluded

alluded to, no mention whatever was made of the plan of issuing orders to the amaunee Aumils and renters whose leases are about to expire, that should have created doubts in your Excellency's mind regarding the effects of this measure, I beg that your Excellency will now be pleased to explain to me, in detail, the few remaining doubts to which you have here alluded.

With respect to what your Excellency says regarding Hukeem Mehdi Alec Khan, of whose lease a period of three years and four months is stated to remain, &c. &c., as your Excellency designs to address the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council after the whole of the discussion shall have been concluded, I hope that you will lose no time in settling this matter also with the Hukeem, and apprizing me of the result, that I may communicate to your Excellency what to my judgment may seem proper, after a deliberate review of the whole of the circumstances under discussion.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Chief Secretary to the Government.

Sir :

In pursuance of the intention which was stated to you in the concluding paragraph of my despatch of the 12th instant, and having reason to believe that his Excellency the Vizier, misled by the pernicious and interested counsels of his present sole adviser, Hukeem Mehdi, to whose advice he has seemingly abandoned himself during the last two months, had determined on evading a reply to my letter of the 30th ultimo, and was preparing an answer to the Governor-General's letter in terms which I could not but disapprove, I considered it to be my duty to address a letter to his Excellency, in strong but respectful language, pointing out to him the extraordinary delay which had taken place in the fulfilment of his engagements, and requiring his immediate adoption of the principal measures of reform.

2. A copy of the letter which I addressed to his Excellency on this occasion is transmitted for the information of the Government ; and the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, in perusing this document, will observe that with the view of rendering the immediate adoption of the important measures in contemplation more agreeable to his Excellency the Vizier, I thought it proper to make two concessions to his Excellency, in the hope that, by those concessions, every possible objection might be removed, and his cordial concurrence ensured in all the subsequent arrangements.

3. Those concessions are, first, the point of deputing new Ameens to the districts ; in lieu of which I have agreed to his Excellency's recent proposal for committing the investigation of the state of the districts, and the collection of revenue papers, to the Aumils now in authority, under the new character of Ameens, and with the benefit of the proclamations and instructions ; and, secondly, my acquiescence in the alteration proposed by his Excellency the Vizier in my original draft of the proclamation, namely, in his omission of the words " with the advice and concurrence of the British Government."

4. I have been influenced in the first of those concessions by a consideration of the sentiments of the Government, conveyed in your despatch of the 3d of May last, with regard to the original question of my participation in the choice of Ameens, and by the obvious reflection, arising out of those sentiments, that if the British Government were not entitled to a voice in the appointment of officers to execute the measures of reform, it was of little consequence to us whether the duties of the Ameens should be performed by the officers already in charge, or by new officers of the Vizier's independent selection ; while, on the other hand, the satisfaction of his Excellency's mind was a manifest advantage to be gained by this voluntary concession on my part : and as the proceedings of the investigation proposed, whether conducted by new Ameens or by the present incumbents, would still be submitted to my inspection, and subject to my my ultimate approval, the real extent of the concession was a matter of small consideration, in comparison with the advantage to be gained.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

5. To the second concession I was urged partly by a doubt excited in my own mind, of our positive right to demand the insertion of the words in question in a public proclamation to be issued under the Vizier's seal to his subjects, partly by the nature, however frivolous, of his Excellency's objections to their insertion, and partly by reflecting that the general objects and result of the discussions between his Excellency and me would soon be universally known throughout Oude, and would of themselves produce the conviction, which it was my particular wish to inspire, that, the measures of reform in this country being dictated by British counsels, the future details of those measures, and the engagements to be executed under them, would be influenced by the same counsels, and entitled in a certain respect to the Honourable Company's guarantee, or that, at all events, a general knowledge among the people of the source from which the new system of administration had sprung, would operate as a caution to the public officers of this Government, and to the principal classes of its subjects, against a future departure from their engagements, or a breach of their duties to the State.

6. My letter to his Excellency the Vizier, as conveying those concessions so apparently conducive to his satisfaction, might have naturally been expected to produce a cordial concurrence, on his part, in the adoption of the modified arrangements, and a sincere disposition to facilitate, by all the means in his power, the progress of the measures of reform.

7. With equal mortification and concern I report, for the information of the Government, that they have hitherto apparently produced a directly opposite effect. His Excellency's answer to my letter received on the 16th instant, (a translation of which is enclosed,) is in my judgment a production characteristic truly of his Excellency's mind and disposition in every other respect, save that it wants the usual gloss of artfulness to cover his habitual evasion, and conveys, what I do not yet suppose him to entertain, a fixed and determined resolution of departing from his solemn engagements.

8. It were a useless occupation of time to canvas the various absurdities, inconsistencies, and unsupported assertions, with which this short letter abounds.

The plea on which his Excellency has attempted to evade a satisfactory reply to my letter of the 30th ultimo, by referring me to his statement of his doubts, having obvious and exclusive reference to a former stage of the discussion, and to circumstances totally different from those under which my letter was written, is a sufficient specimen of the whole force of his argument for suspending the fulfilment of his engagements; and the advantage which he has attempted to take of a short letter from me, conveying a remonstrance against the partial and nugatory commencement of the general measures of reform, is alike descriptive of his character and of his reasoning in the present negotiation.

9. I lost no time in preparing and transmitting a reply to the extraordinary production in question; and by the terms of my reply to his Excellency, (a copy of which is enclosed,) I have, to the best of my ability and judgment, refuted every argument which he has used, and removed every reasonable objection to the immediate fulfilment of his engagements.

10. The effect of this last letter remains yet to be seen. I cannot relinquish the hope of his Excellency's being ultimately induced to evince a cordial concurrence in the just views of the Government, for his own eminent advantage, as well as the comfort and happiness of his people; and I am further encouraged to indulge this expectation by reflecting, that the expiration of the current fiscal year will shortly of itself supersede the existing revenue arrangements, and that, as his Excellency can scarcely entertain the design of renewing the leases of the farmers, in direct opposition to the advice of the British Government, as conveyed by the Governor-General's letter, nor can he propose to himself at any future period the support of the British troops to the exercise of the present system of his administration, he must soon see the necessity of adopting the measures of reform, or of sacrificing wantonly a large portion of his revenue.

11. I have this day announced to his Excellency my intention of waiting on him at breakfast on the morning of the 22d instant; and I shall take that opportunity of soliciting his serious attention to the circumstances above stated, which may hitherto have escaped his observation.

I have, &c.

Letter

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written 20th Jemadee-ool-awul 1226, or 13th June 1811).

Two months and eleven days have elapsed since I had the honour of receiving from your Excellency the articles of agreement contained in your letter to my address, under date the 9th of Rubbee-ool-awul (4th of April).

In the paper containing those articles, your Excellency, after mature deliberation and discussion, declared your unqualified assent to four fundamental measures which I had suggested for your adoption, and which are detailed in the document in question, as well as in the abstract of our conference on the 1st of Jemadee-ool-awul (25th of May).

When, after the lapse of nearly twenty days, your Excellency was pleased to convey to me some doubts which seemed subsequently to have arisen in your mind, with a reference to the adoption of those measures, although it was by no means incumbent on me to enter on the discussion of your doubts regarding measures which you had absolutely agreed to, yet, from motives of respect for your Excellency, I have been induced, both in writing and conversation, to exhaust every possible argument which the nature of the subject afforded, for the removal of the apprehensions which you described.

Under these circumstances, I leave it to your Excellency to determine, whether or not the delay which has hitherto taken place in the fulfilment of your Excellency's engagements, can be ascribed to any other cause than a spirit of procrastination on your own part, and whether or not the further period of fifteen days which has elapsed without my receiving a reply to my letter of the 6th instant (30th of May) may be considered as an additional proof of your Excellency's disposition to defer the fulfilment of your engagements. Reluctantly compelled, as I am, to view those delays in this light, it is now my duty to request that, in pursuance of the first article of agreement, a sketch of the division and subdivision of your dominions, which may be prepared in the course of a day, be immediately transmitted for my information, or that Diakrishen be directed to attend me with the necessary documents for this purpose, as proposed by your Excellency at our conference. That, further, your Excellency will be pleased, with the least practicable delay, to adopt the necessary measures for the collection of the revenue papers and investigation of the state of the districts, by deputing Ameens, as I proposed, or issuing your instructions to the Aumils; that so, at the appointed time, the triennial settlement may be concluded, and this important measure, as agreed on, may be followed in due time by the establishment of courts of justice and police in every Zillah of your dominions.

With regard to the appointment and deputation of Ameens, or the employment of the present incumbents, and whether the proclamations, the sunnuds for the Ameens, and the perwannahs addressed to collectors and farmers, shall be issued in the terms of the drafts submitted by me, or in those suggested by your Excellency, being ever desirous of consulting your Excellency's pleasure to the utmost practicable extent, although the adoption of my original proposals seems still to be highly expedient, if not essential to the objects in view, I am prepared to acquiesce in your modified proposal and amendment of the drafts, if, on further mature consideration, your Excellency shall deem those alterations indispensable to the removal of your doubts, and to create confidence fidence in your mind, with a reference to the contemplated arrangements, the immediate or early adoption of which is, in my mind, so important an object.

To conclude, as more than two months have already unprofitably elapsed, and as, after the conclusion of solemn and positive engagements between two States, it can never justly be required by either of the contracting parties to listen to, or obviate, the doubts of the other, with a reference to the fulfilment of those engagements; as, for example, if, with a reference to the fulfilment of the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession in 1801, or to the concluding article of the agreement with Marquess Wellesley, your Excellency should now be pleased to entertain, or describe, any scruples or apprehensions of loss, the British Government could be under no obligation to remove them; and as, in like manner, your Excellency's doubts, with a reference to the plan of reform proposed by the British Government, after the declaration of your assent to that plan in the authenticated document of the 9th of Rubbee-ool-awul (4th of April) are no longer entitled to consideration as an excuse for your rejection of that plan, I must therefore repeat my expectation, that your Excellency will no longer delay to give effect to those salutary arrangements, so eminently calculated to promote the true interests of your Government, and no less beneficial to yourself than indispensable with a reference to your engagements.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter, dated the 13th instant (20th of Jemadee-ool-awul.)

You have stated that two months and fifteen days have elapsed, &c. (recapitulate the remark.)

As, in the case of the deputation of Ameens, I continue to apprehend the subversion of my authority, the retirement and disaffection of my subjects, and general disorder in the country, as well as suspension of the collections, total loss of balances, and other injurious effects, from the ignorance of the Ameens, and the want of a measurement of the lands, therefore the fulfilment of what was written in the document under date the 9th of Rubbee ool awul (4th of April) has been suspended till the removal of my apprehensions, which has not yet taken place, and a promise for that purpose is between us: Further, as whatever I had to write on this subject has been written several times, if I answered your letter of the 6th of Jemadee-ool-awul (30th of May,) it would only be to repeat my former writings.

With a reference to your request of a sketch of the division and subdivision of the country, and of the immediate adoption of measures for the collection of revenue papers; as my apprehensions regarding the deputation of Ameens have not yet been removed, the other measures which you propose must also be suspended till this take place.

In answer to your argument of the inadmissibility of my doubts, and their not being entitled to a hearing after a conclusion of the agreement, &c. (recapitulate the remark). The case is this: That, as, after receiving the said articles of agreement, and subsequently the statement of my doubts, you wrote to me, in your own hand, that the dispatch of the Ameens should be delayed till the removal of my apprehensions, and afterwards told me, at a conference, that as many of those apprehensions as could be removed by yourself should be obviated immediately, and that the Governor-General would obviate the remainder; after which, at our conference of Tuesday, you informed me that the statement of my doubts had been forwarded to the Presidency, and that you had yourself prepared an answer to them in writing; it follows that the dispatch of Ameens having been suspended, at your own request, till the removal of my doubts,

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written 18th June 1811.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The surprise and concern with which I have perused your Excellency's letter of the 16th instant are not to be described.

The result of our conference of the 25th ultimo, at which it was proposed to commit the investigation of the state of the country, and collection of revenue papers, to the officers now in employment, had impressed me with the natural belief, that the greatest number, if not the whole, of your Excellency's apprehensions had been happily removed, and your answer to the heads of that conference, transmitted by your own desire, contains an express acknowledgment to this purpose. My subsequent request of a detail of the particular apprehensions which remained has not yet been honoured with a reply; and your Excellency's extraordinary delay to convey, or rather your apparent resolution to evade, a reply to that letter, combined with the repetition, now before me, of every doubt which you originally described, and some new additional apprehensions, can in my mind be ascribed to no other purpose or view, than that of a departure from your engagements with me, and an evasion of the obligation imposed on you by the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession.

I shall now, for the last time, adhering, however, to my argument of the inadmissible nature of your Excellency's doubts, and disavowing most solemnly and sincerely my having ever promised to remove them (for the correctness of which disavowal I refer to my letters in your possession), submit for your Excellency's consideration the following simple statement, which seems to me to be amply sufficient for the removal of every apprehension that can possibly actuate your mind, with a reference to the measures in contemplation. It is this:—

In the year of our Era 1801, or 1216 Hijree, a portion of your Excellency's territory, yielding a revenue of a crore and thirty-five lacs of rupees, was ceded to the Honourable Company, and immediately after the cession, the measures which are now recommended to your Excellency were adopted in that portion. The country was divided and subdivided into Zillahs and pergunnahs, or mehauls; Ameens were deputed to investigate the condition and assets of those mehauls; a settlement for a term of years was concluded; courts of justice and a police were established; without the occurrence of any one of the evils which your Excellency is pleased to apprehend. No subversion of public authority, no retirement nor disaffection of the people, no general, nor even partial, disorder in the country, no material injurious effects from the ignorance of Ameens, nor from the want of immediate measurement of the lands; and, on the contrary, the landholders and peasantry of that portion of your Excellency's former dominions were raised at once to a condition of comfort and confidence which they had never before experienced, and which has since been gradually increasing. Your Excellency's present dominions form the reserved portion of that territory which was ceded, more compact in its local situation, and more susceptible of efficient Government under the same system than even the portion which was ceded to the Company. And where, then, are the grounds of your Excellency's fears, so hostile to every principle of reason, and to the unerring test of experience in circumstances exactly the same? In short, though as before observed, the tenor of the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession, of the subsequent engagement with Lord Wellesley, and of the ultimate agreement with me, would have fully justified my refusal to listen to one of your Excellency's doubts, (since no obligation to remove them can be quoted from any of those documents,) I have listened with patience and respect, I have laboured with much assiduity, and, if reason and experience be our guides, I must maintain that I have laboured with success, to remove your Excellency's apprehensions; consequently, I am now at liberty to declare, that your delay in giving complete effect to the salutary arrangements proposed to you is as unworthy of your enlightened mind, as the adoption.

adoption of those arrangements is indispensable, with a reference to existing engagements.

Bengal Political

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The refusal which your Excellency has now, for the first time, expressed of transmitting a plan of the division and sub-division of your country, and of adopting any measures for the investigation of the state of the country, and the collection of revenue papers, is still more extraordinary, if possible, than the remark with which your letter has commenced.

What possible connexion, I will ask, has the measure of deputing Ameens with the division and sub-division of the country which may be arranged from your Excellency's records, without any fear or apprehension, in the course of a single day; and even admitting your groundless fears to remain, those fears had a reference exclusively to the deputation of new Ameens, not surely, your Excellency will admit, to the employment of the present incumbents: a modified proposition of your own, and to which I afforded a qualified assent, with a view to your Excellency's satisfaction, requiring shortly after a detail of the objections which might still be proposed by your Excellency, in the case of my consent to this arrangement.

That no real objection remained, and that your Excellency was unable to devise any, is obvious from your delay to detail them, and your ultimate evasion of a reply to my letter, in which that detail was requested.

Your Excellency has been pleased to take advantage, in an equally extraordinary manner, of the note which I had the honour of addressing to you, in my own hand-writing, with the sole and obvious view of preventing the partial deputation of Ameens to a few districts already amaunee.

Can your Excellency have ceased to recollect the two modes of introducing the plan of reform which were originally the subject of our discussion? One, its general and universal introduction, at the same time, into every district of your dominions, under the details suggested by me, with the benefit of the proclamation and instructions, of which I furnished you with drafts. The other, a partial and experimental introduction of it into one district at a time, as explained by your Excellency in writing, for the first time, in your statement of doubts under date the 26th of Rubbee-ool-awul (21st of April), in the following words: "I suggest the introduction of the new system first into one Elaka, which may be considered in the greatest disorder; and if this be settled according to my wish, let it then be introduced into another."

Of those two modes of introducing the system of reform, the first was my original and uniform choice. To the second I always objected in strong and decided terms, for various reasons, which it is now unnecessary to mention; and, consequently, on my hearing a report of your Excellency's intention to depute one or two Ameens to the districts of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, already amaunee, without even giving them the proclamation or instructions suggested by me, I observed the necessary precaution of writing to dissuade you from this measure; but that the general deputation of Ameens to all the districts of your dominions at one time, in the manner, and with the benefit of the documents, which I had proposed for your adoption, should have been suspended by my desire, on any ground, or under any circumstances whatever, is, indeed, a most extraordinary assertion. It is, in other words, that I should have prevented the adoption of a measure, which was uniformly, and is now, the first object of my anxiety and desire, as being eminently advantageous to your Excellency, and unattended by any solid ground of apprehension, whatever your Excellency may think of it.

That I mentioned to your Excellency at our conference my intention of removing your doubts, as far as possible, and of referring them for the consideration of the Government, is totally out of my recollection, though, as your Excellency has stated the fact, I have too much respect for you to dispute it: and, indeed, to this extent it is certain, that every one of your Excellency's letters and writings has been regularly transmitted to the Presidency. But as, at our conference of the 1st of Jemadee-oool-awul (25th May), an abstract of which is in the Presence, a modified proposal had been made, superseding the deputation of Ameens, and obviating, as I imagined, every doubt in your Excellency's mind, nay, acknowledged to have obviated most of them, and your acknowledgment to that effect being on record, the necessity for a reference to Government, or of awaiting the result of any reference hitherto made, is in my mind totally removed; and the division and subdivision of the country, the investigation of the state of the mehauls, and the collection of revenue papers, with all the subsequent measures to which your Excellency has solemnly pledged yourself, cannot, on any just principle, be suspended, or dependent on the deputation of new Ameens, to which your original apprehensions had alone and exclusively a reference.

The Board observe, that the tenor of the foregoing despatches from the Resident at Lucknow appears amply to confirm the opinion stated in the instructions issued to the Resident, under date the 21st ultimo, and to demonstrate that the Vizier's acquiescence in the plan of reform, as proposed to him by the Resident, would not, in the actual disposition of his Excellency's mind, secure the effect of it; and that it therefore seems advisable to direct the Resident to cease all further urgency, on the ground of the impracticability of adopting the requisite preliminary arrangements before the expiration of the fusly year. Previously, however, to the preparation of these instructions, his Excellency the Vice-President in Council deems it proper to await the receipt of the Resident's report of his further proceedings, that may be expected to comprehend the close of his negotiation.

Ordered accordingly, That the preceding despatches from the Resident at Lucknow do lie for consideration.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 6th instant.

Agreeably to the instructions therein contained, I have directed the artillery and cavalry to march to-morrow morning for their respective lines, and intend to follow them the day after.

Deeming the surrender of Chandapore advisable during the time the detachment remained in the field and in force, I summoned, and, am happy to say, have added it to the lists of the forts surrendered.

Allow me to express a hope, that the services of the detachment, during the limited period it has been employed, have been such as to merit the approbation of his Excellency the Vizier and yourself. On my part, I can with safety aver, that I have every reason to be pleased with all the officers composing the detachment.

The different fortresses and ghurries have been delivered over to his Excellency's Aumil; and as nothing remains to be achieved, agreeably with your orders I shall return with the troops to their cantonments.

1. I have the honour to acquaint you, that the division of my battalion recently and independently employed in the districts of Akberpore and Tanda, under the command of Major Drummond, joined me yesterday at this post, with the exception of one officer (Lieutenant Hawthorne) and ninety men, directed to remain there for the purpose of demolishing the Fort of Chandapore, and some others of less importance already in his possession.

2. This officer is instructed to inform me if he should find it requisite to have his detachment reinforced, in which case I shall adopt the necessary measures for accomplishing it.

3. From the report made to me by Major Drummond, and the means stated to be furnished Lieutenant Hawthorne for executing the duties in which he is at present employed, it is probable that the destruction of Chandapore, &c. will take near one month; after which period, I make no hesitation in stating to you as my public and professional opinion, that the services, or even the exertions of British troops in these districts can be of little or no avail, as the period of the year and low situation of the country are such as must prove insurmountable obstacles to military operations, and be the means of materially injuring the men's arms, ammunition, and discipline.

Lucknow.

1. The primary objects of my visit to his Excellency the Vizier on the morning of the 22d instant, which was announced in my despatch of the 20th, were the adjustment of some disputed points between his Excellency and the two Begums, the restitution of a considerable portion of the revenue of Tadjumool Hoosein Khan's jagier collected by his Excellency's officers during the period of the resumption of the jagier, the payment of a portion of Casim Alee Khan's stipend unjustly withheld, and the settlement of a few subordinate questions, in all which the unhappy disposition of the Vizier, and his vindictive spirit of resentment against the dependants of the British Government, have induced him to impose upon me the disagreeable but indispensable duty of remonstrating against his injustice and oppression, and, in some cases, his real inhumanity towards the most respectable of the connections of his family.

2. After a partial degree of success in the discussion of those subordinate points, and a conversation of some length regarding the provisions of a supplemental treaty for the decision of questions of disputed boundary between the two States, to which his Excellency has recently started some frivolous objections, I put on the appearance of taking leave, without making any reference to the important question of reform, in the hope of his Excellency's being induced, by a recollection of the contents of my letters, which were still unanswered in his hands, to commence the discussion himself and to make some proposition for its adjustment.

3. Disappointed in this hope, I remarked to his Excellency that though the primary objects of my visit were an inquiry regarding his health, and an adjustment of the subordinate questions which we had just ceased to converse on, I could not, consistently with the duties of friendship for his Excellency, neglect any opportunity that occurred of endeavouring to convince him of the wisdom, justice, and necessity of the several measures of reform recommended to him by our Government, for his own eminent advantage, and of the striking impropriety of his delay to carry those measures into effect, after his faith had been pledged for their adoption.

4. I lamented, in the most impressive terms which I could use, that his Excellency should have, even for a time, allowed himself to be so misled by the pernicious and interested counsels of a few designing individuals, as to evince a serious intention of departing from his positive engagements, and to place among the records of the British Government and his own, a series of written inconsistencies and evasions, so unworthy of his high character for great talents and wisdom, and so injurious to his reputation for good faith, and for sincerity in his professions of friendship to the Honourable Company's Government.

5. Considering the discussion with his Excellency on my own part, in as far as just argument, sound reasoning, and conciliatory language extended, to be now entirely at an end, I discharged an ultimate duty of friendship to his Excellency, in submitting for his serious consideration that the present fiscal year was drawing very near to its close, that his present arrangements for the realization of his revenue would, of necessity, cease with this year, and that some new arrangement must be adopted, with a view to the future security of the revenue; that a renewal of any of the leases which were now about to expire, or the consignment of any portion of his dominions to the future management of farmers, in direct opposition to the advice of the British Government, and to the express terms of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, could not be, I trusted, in his contemplation; that the future assistance or support of a single soldier of the British army to the present baneful system of assessment and collection, or to any of its instruments in the persons of his Excellency's Aunils, was totally out of the question; and that, under all those circumstances, it behoved his Excellency to consider under what so beneficial an arrangement as the plan suggested suggested by our Government the resources of his country could be realized, and the internal tranquillity of his dominions secured against the probable insurrection of the landholders, the effect of their oppression and despair.

6. The Vizier seemed sensibly affected by the influence of the foregoing remarks, which he desired me to leave with him in writing, and promised, in a conciliatory manner, to make a personal communication on the subject of them in the course of a few days. I declined committing to his Excellency the rough abstract of the remarks which I held in my hands at the time, and excused myself from copying it in the palace, on the ground of my having already detained him too long; but I added, that the remarks were of too serious a nature to be quickly forgotten by his Excellency, and that, if necessary, I should submit them to him in writing on some future occasion.

7. On the morning of the 24th instant, his Excellency retired to Beebeepore, at the distance of five miles from the city, without apprizing me of his intention, or referring in any respect to his promise of a verbal communication, which, on the contrary, he has manifestly evaded by this sudden retreat to Beebeepore: and I had, in consequence, prepared a letter for his Excellency, recalling to his recollection the substance of my two former letters, dated the 30th ultimo and 18th instant, and recapitulating, for his serious consideration, the remarks which were submitted to him at our conference; when, on the evening of the 26th instant, to my unspeakable surprise and concern, I received the extraordinary letter, a translation of which is enclosed.

8. The contents of this letter from his Excellency having no tendency to supersede, or to suggest alteration in the substance of my letter already prepared, I transmitted it on the following morning with a second short letter, acknowledging the receipt of his Excellency's, and promising an answer to such parts of it as seemed worthy of reply, when a prospect might hereafter present itself of my communications on this subject being received with that attention which they deserved. Copies of both the letters alluded to are transmitted by this despatch.

9. On a retrospect of the whole of the proceedings in this arduous and important negotiation, His Excellency the Vice-President in Council will, I doubt not, do me the justice to believe, that every possible exertion of my judgment and zeal has been applied, in the first instance, to prevail on his Excellency the Vizier to acquiesce in the salutary arrangements proposed to him by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council; that, further, no argument which the instructions of the Government suggested, or the nature of the case and subsequent occurrences required, has been omitted on my part, with the view and for the purpose of inducing his Excellency to banish his imaginary fears, and to adhere to his original engagements; and that his Excellency's ultimate denial of those engagements, in direct opposition to the terms of a written document authenticated by a letter under his seal, when every argument, and even plausible pretext for further delay had been repelled, is a circumstance which I could never have foreseen, and which no exertion of my judgment could, at any time, have enabled me to guard against.

10. I am still encouraged to hope for some favourable change in the mind of his Excellency the Vizier as the effect of my last letter; and I shall not fail to take advantage of such a change, if produced, for the purpose of renewing the discussion, and of prosecuting it to a satisfactory conclusion.

11. A firm and decided refusal of the future assistance of our troops to support the proceedings of the Aumils, or coerce the defaulting Zemindars, must of necessity have the desired effect in a very limited time; and a declaration of this resolution, on the part of the Government, in a direct address from the Honourable the Vice-President to his Excellency the Vizier, would, I humbly conceive, be of use in accelerating the accomplishment of the object.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter, dated the 25th of Jemadec-ool-awul (18th instant), in reply to my shookha of the 23d.

You have stated that "the result of our conference on the 1st of this month," &c. (recapitulate the remark.)

In my answer to your abstract of the heads of that conference, it was written that, "in the case of committing the duties of Ameens to the present amaanee Aumils, most of my doubts would certainly be removed, but that some " would still be remaining ;" and as nothing was afterwards settled about issuing orders to those Aumils, if any thing had been afterwards settled, I should have declared my remaining doubts.

You remark, that when you asked for a detail of those doubts, I evaded an answer to your letter, and in my last letter, above noticed, conveyed a repetition of the whole of my original doubts, with some additions. I cannot conceive that any thing additional was written : if it be so, let me know.

I never made any positive promises : if I had, why should I have subsequently sent a statement of my doubts ?

I never intended, nor do I now intend, to depart from my promises, nor to evade the stipulations of treaties ; and my intentions, with a reference to those affairs, having been fully detailed in former writings, an answer to your letter of the 6th of Jemadec-ool-awul (30th May), as a repetition of the contents of former letters, was unnecessary, and was therefore withheld.

You proceed to state, that although you had never made a promise for the removal of my imaginary apprehensions, &c.

In your letter written by your own hand, and received on the 27th of Rubbee-ool-sance (28th May), a promise to the above effect is contained ; and with regard to your remark, that a simple fact is now offered for the removal of all my apprehensions, namely, that "a portion of my original territory, yielding a revenue," &c. I know nothing at all of the establishment of the system in the Ceded Provinces, and the orders which have been determined on for my country were never carried into execution in those provinces, particularly that for an actual measurement of the lands, as you have yourself stated that actual measurement was not resorted to there but in cases of necessity ; and when I informed you that the Ameens had represented the impossibility of performing all the duties prescribed, you admitted their statement to be just. In answer to your remark, that although after the conclusion of "the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession," and "of the subsequent engagement with Marquess Wellesley," &c. The case is this : that in the said sixth article of the treaty and engagement with Lord Wellesley, there is no promise, nor acknowledgment, for the establishment of this system, the deputation of Ameens and the establishment of courts of justice and police : and as for the articles of agreement contained in the document dated 9th Rubbee-ool-awul (4th April), that document may be considered like any other correspondence between us which is still subject to discussion, because what is written there is still dependent on discussion, and on the satisfaction of my mind.

With regard to your remark, that "you have laboured with success by proofs " from reason and experience to satisfy my doubts ;" my doubts have not at all, nor in any respect been removed by those proofs : and, in reply to your observation that the division and subdivision of my dominions, and the collection of revenue-papers, cannot, on any principle, be dependent on the deputation of Ameens, &c., the division and subdivision recommended by you, the collection of revenue-papers, such as a statement of the jumma kamil, and a mowazana, and a triennial settlement of the revenue, are dependent on the actual measurement, and on the introduction of the new system, and these measures are impracticable through the agency either of amaanee Aumils, or of new Ameens, until my apprehensions be removed.

You have further requested me to recollect, that "the introduction of the " new system was of two kinds," &c. In the event of the deputation of Ameens Ameens and introduction of the proposed system, all the doubts and apprehensions which were formerly written will remain.

You have stated, that "on receiving a report of my intention to depute Ameens," &c. In your letter, in your own hand-writing, formerly referred to, it is stated that the deputation of Ameens, particularly to districts already amaunee, of which the present Aumils are the same as Ameens, before a conference with you and the removal of my doubts, is not advisable, in your opinion.

You have further stated, that although the conversation alluded to be not in your recollection, yet as I have asserted you will not deny it, and that certainly translations of all our letters have been long ago transmitted to the Presidency, &c. Praise be to God, that the transmission of translations of all the letters is still acknowledged by yourself, and consequently that you did say so at our personal conference. How could I have known this circumstance from any person but yourself? And on this account it seems advisable and proper always, for the future, that the whole of our discussion should not be confined to speech merely, but should also be committed to writing, that doubts may not afterwards occur.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 27th June 1811.)

Your Excellency's sudden retirement to Beebeepore without informing me of your intention, and your residence there for a period of several days without my being honoured with any communication from you, in answer to my letters of the 6th of Jemadee-ool-awul (30th May) and 25th of that month (18th instant), notwithstanding your declaration, at our interview of the 22d instant, that you had something to say to me on the important subject under discussion, and the favourable impression which the manner of that declaration had made on my mind, are circumstances which render it my duty to recall to your Excellency's recollection the substance of the letters abovementioned, and more particularly the tenor of the remarks which I submitted for your serious consideration at our interview on the morning of the 22d.

My letters being still in your Excellency's possession it is unnecessary to recapitulate the substance of them. If attentively and dispassionately perused, they cannot fail to impress on your mind the necessity of the fulfilment of your engagements, and a due sense of the groundless and imaginary, as well as totally inadmissible nature of your Excellency's doubts and apprehensions, with a reference to the measures of reform.

But the remarks which I submitted to your Excellency in person, on the morning of the 22d instant, and which appeared to have made a salutary impression at the time, may perhaps have escaped your recollection; and their importance to your immediate interests renders it a duty of friendship on my part to recall, and, if possible, to preserve this impression on your mind, by submitting the remarks to you in writing.

I commenced with entreating your Excellency to reflect on the real object of the reform in the system of your administration so earnestly recommended by me, and which your Excellency had promised to adopt.

Were the interests of the British Government alone, or even in an eminent degree, to be consulted by the salutary arrangements in contemplation, it was admitted, in this case, that your Excellency, while induced by your principles of good faith, or rather impelled by the positive obligation of treaties, to give your consent to the measures of reform, might be supposed to view with suspicion the commencement and progress of those measures. But as the sole and exclusive object was a manifest advantage to yourself in the improvement of the resources of your country, the more easy realization of those resources, the satisfaction of your Excellency's mind, the comfort and happiness of your subjects, and their attachment to your person and government, it was difficult to imagine any ground for your original reluctance in consenting to the principal measures of reform, and and still more so, to account for your delay in carrying those measures into effect, after your faith had been solemnly pledged for their immediate or early execution.

Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I next proceeded to express my sincere and genuine regret, that your Excellency should have even for a time allowed yourself to be so misled by the pernicious and interested counsels of a few designing individuals, as to evince a serious intention of departing from your engagements with me, and evading the obligation of treaties, and to place upon the records of our Government a series of inconsistencies and evasions, so truly unworthy of your high character for great talents and wisdom, and so manifestly injurious to your reputation for good faith and sincerity in your professions of friendship for the Honourable Company's Government.

Considering every argument in favour of the plan of reform, and against your Excellency's imaginary apprehensions to be now totally exhausted, I finally entreated you to reflect, that the present revenue year was drawing near to its close, that your present arrangements for the collection of the revenue of your dominions would of necessity cease with this year, and that the future realization of any part of your revenue, save in the districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, must depend on the measures which you might now be pleased to adopt, and in the consideration and adoption of which the greatest circumspection was necessary. That a renewal of any of the leases which were now about to expire, or a continuance of the system of assessment and collection which had hitherto prevailed in your dominions, in direct opposition to the advice of the British Government and to the express terms of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, could not, of course, be in your contemplation. That the future support, or assistance of a single soldier of the British army, to the present baneful system, or to any of its instruments, in the persons of your Excellency's Aumils, was entirely out of the question; and that, under these circumstances, it behoved your Excellency to consider, under what so beneficial arrangement as the plan suggested by our Government the resources of your country could be realized, and whether or not the concluding provision of the third article of the treaty of 1801, admitted of your Excellency's taking measures for the future coercion of your landholders, and the suppression of insurrections to be produced by the despair of an oppressed population, without requiring the aid or support of the Honourable Company's troops.

To the natural influence of those remarks on a mind so well endowed as your Excellency's I commit the result of this discussion, in the anxious hope that your final determination will be formed on principles that shall satisfy yourself, and lead to your future advantage.

Before the receipt of your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date, I had been induced by several important considerations, and particularly by motives of sincere friendship for your Excellency, to prepare a letter to your address on this subject, which I was just about to despatch when your Excellency's messenger arrived. The contents of your Excellency's letter do not suggest any alteration in mine, and accordingly I now transmit it.

At a future time, if I see any prospect of renewing the correspondence to advantage, I shall submit answers to some of the remarks which your Excellency has made on this occasion; but I shall not, certainly, think it my duty to reply to your Excellency's denial of your having ever made any positive promises, nor to your assertion of a promise for the removal of your doubts being contained in my short letter of the 27th of Rubee-oos-Sanec (21st May), nor to one or two other extraordinary remarks which are contained in your Excellency's letter, because the answer to those, consistently with my respect for

Government.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of the 12th, 20th and 28th ultimo, reporting the progress of your negotiation with his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, on the subject of the proposed reform of his administration.

2. His Excellency the Vice-President in Council deduces, with great regret, from the tenor of these reports, and especially from the last, not only the confirmation of the opinions stated in my despatch of the 21st ultimo, but a conviction of the impracticability of obtaining the Vizier's concurrence in the system of reform so earnestly recommended to his adoption, excepting only by measures of absolute compulsion, by which are meant a renewed and direct urgency on the part of this Government, founded on the obligations of treaty, and accompanied by the declaration suggested in the last paragraph of your letter of the 28th ultimo.

3. From the adoption of measures of this description his Excellency in Council is withheld, not only by the political considerations which are adverted to in the sequel of this despatch, but by the conviction that the Vizier's involuntary acquiescence in the system of reform, even to the full extent proposed by you, would fail to secure its successful operation ; for, perverted and erroneous as are the views and sentiments of his Excellency, he would have an interest in rendering that system abortive ; and it is superfluous to add, that his means of accomplishing that end are unlimited and beyond control. This consideration was present to the mind of the Governor-General in Council when he issued his instructions of the 28th December, and it consequently was not in the contemplation of Government to carry the negotiation to the extreme suggested in your despatch of the 28th ultimo. The object of the reference in those instructions to the obligations imposed upon the Vizier by treaty, and to the reluctance with which the British Government employed its troops for the suppression of disorders occasioned by the evils and abuses of his Excellency's administration, or to state the case more strongly, in supporting the cause of injustice and oppression, was to demonstrate the right of that Government to demand from the Vizier the reform of his administration, and to supply the arguments which might be supposed to have the greatest efficacy in convincing the Vizier of the necessity of a reform, and in persuading him to adopt it. Your declarations to the Vizier, therefore, intimating a positive resolution on the part of Government to refuse hereafter the aid of its troops in the suppression of disorders in his Excellency's country, although occasioned by the oppressions or misconduct of his officers, has exceeded the intentions of the Governor-General in Council.

4. The introduction of compulsory measures, as they are above explained, would entirely change the ground of negotiation. It would bring into immediate question the continuance, or dissolution, of the relations between the two States as established by treaty ; for if a demand be made by one of two contracting parties on the other, on the basis of a specific article of treaty, accompanied by a declared resolution not to fulfil a positive and fundamental stipulation of the same treaty, in the event of a rejection, or evasion, of such demand, and that resolution be carried into effect, the system of connection established by the mutual engagements of the parties ceases to exist.

5. It is unnecessary to trace the consequences of such a state of things between the British Government and that of the Vizier. It is sufficient to observe, that the menace of refusing the aid of our troops for the suppression of disorders within his Excellency's dominions must in the end be nugatory, since

since this Government would be compelled, by considerations connected with its own most important interests, to interpose its military power for the restoration of tranquillity.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

6. But situated as the dominions of the Company and the Vizier relatively are, the state of affairs implied in a dissolution of the treaty could not be suffered to remain even for a day. The compact must be renewed either in the same or another form, and the course of transactions would naturally lead to the establishment of a degree of control over the Vizier's reserved dominions, incompatible with the obligations which formed the price of his Excellency's extended cessions in the year 1801.

7. The belief that the Vizier would be induced, by the menace alone, to accede to our views, furnishes no argument in reply to the preceding observations, since it is inconsistent with unalterable principles to menace a measure, of which considerations either of expediency or of justice would preclude the adoption.

8. But the suggested course of proceeding is objectionable on other grounds; on the doubt of its being supported by the laws and principles which regulate the interpretation of treaties.

9. Questions which relate to the dissolution of solemn engagements between States must ever be considered of a most delicate nature. The violation, on one side, that can justify a refusal, on the other, to fulfil a positive and fundamental stipulation of the compact, which would, in fact, be declaring a cessation of the pre-established relations between the contracting States, must be essential and indisputable.

10. In the present case, it is to be considered whether, although the Vizier has engaged "to establish in his reserved dominions such a system of administration (to be carried into effect by his own officers) as shall be conducive to the prosperity of his subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants," and also "always to advise with, and act in conformity to the counsel of the British Government," his declining or evading, for reasons connected in his Excellency's own opinion with the interests of his Government, the adoption of the specific plan of reform recommended by this Government, is such a violation of his engagements as to warrant our refusal to fulfil the stipulated obligation of protecting his dominions against the evils of internal rebellion and disorder, and to disqualify him from maintaining the relations established by the treaty. The train of argument by which the affirmative of this question is to be maintained is sufficiently obvious, but not altogether conclusive; for, in the first place, stipulations such as are contained in the treaty cannot possibly be rendered so specific and precise as not to admit of some latitude of construction, or to preclude an eventual opposition between their spirit and their letter: for instance, the combination of the two stipulations above cited could not justly be interpreted to impose on the Vizier an obligation absolutely and implicitly to accede to whatever plan of reform the British Government might advise, however adverse to his interests or his prejudices; nor the second of those clauses to require him, in every concern of his Government, to follow indiscriminately every counsel, however injurious or repugnant to his feelings, that either wisdom or error might suggest on the part of the British Government, under the penalty of forfeiting his claim to the fulfilment of our part of the stipulations of the treaty. A construction so literal would obviously be incompatible with the existence of that authority, which by the same instrument we have solemnly guaranteed. In the second place, the stipulation on our part to protect his dominions from internal rebellion and disorder is not placed, even constructively, in such a state of relation to that by which he engaged to establish an improved system of administration within his dominions, as that the abrogation of the former should be the penal consequence of his neglecting or evading the latter. There does not, indeed, in this case appear to be either a just proportion, or a natural relation, between the offence and the penalty.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

11. In the imperfection of all human arrangements, in none, perhaps, more conspicuous than in treaties of alliance between States and Kingdoms, engagements of that description must be referable to general principles, which constitute the essence and the basis of them; and those acts or neglects on the part of the Vizier, which would warrant a dissolution of the existing treaty, must go beyond a departure from an insulated stipulation, which however important in itself, is not, under a just and liberal construction of it, an essential and fundamental principle of the alliance. That alliance, indeed, has subsisted, and as far as regards its general political objects, has subsisted successfully, during a period of ten years, the stipulation in question remaining unperformed.

12. If, indeed, the Vizier, in a spirit of hostility to the alliance, should systematically resist the counsels of the British Government, in concerns affecting in an essential degree our interests and our security, he would place himself in the condition of a public enemy, and absolve us from the engagements which we have contracted. But that system of evasion and subterfuge, qualified by an ostensible regard to the counsels of the British Government, to which his Excellency has had recourse, cannot be so interpreted. In fact, the subject of discussion between the British Government and the Vizier is not the obligatory nature of the stipulations in question, nor his refusal to fulfil them, but the validity of the pleas and arguments by which he contends that the matter of our counsel would operate to the injury of his interests: arguments which we know to be futile, and to be urged with a view to the continuance of a system of government favourable to the indulgence of his characteristic rapacity, but which, with reference to his own views, he considers to be legitimate and solid; and it might be difficult to resist the force of the remark, that the mere error of his judgment with regard to the real interests of his person and government, and not affecting the fundamental principles of the alliance, could not justly be made the ground of a dissolution of the treaty, unless the clause which requires him to conform to the counsels of the other contracting party, were deemed to be so absolute as not to admit of argument or objection on his part.

13. But there is yet another point of view in which the question may be considered, and which is applicable to the exception above stated. If the provisions of the treaty are to be abrogated, on any other ground than that of the Vizier having placed himself in the condition of a public enemy, on what principle could the British Government resist a claim, on the part of the Vizier, to be restored to the same situation which he held with regard to territory, power, and authority, before the conclusion of the treaty of 1801? It could not, perhaps, be maintained, that by evading the fulfilment of the stipulation which required him to establish within his dominions a system of Administration calculated, in our judgment, though not in his own, to improve the resources of his country, and the happiness of his subjects, he forfeited the advantages of the treaty without a title to retain the valuable cessions with which he purchased those advantages. If from causes referable to the circumstances of the Vizier's country and to the peculiarities of his character, but independent of any acts or projects of his Excellency hostile to the British power, stipulations relating to the internal administration of his dominions are found to be impracticable, the alternative to us must, probably be considered to be either an acquiescence in this unavoidable imperfection of the original arrangement, or a dissolution of the compact involving the restoration of the ancient order of things.

14. These observations of his Excellency in Council are not intended, in any degree, as a defence of the Vizier's conduct, which, as you justly state, has been marked by prevarication, evasion, and insincerity, throughout the whole of the late arduous negotiation; but they are stated, first, because his Excellency in Council deems it of importance that you should be apprized of his sentiments on a question affecting the stability of the engagements subsisting between the British Government and the Vizier, and the obligations of public faith; and, secondly, as being introductory to the resolution which his Excellency in Council finds himself compelled to adopt, under the certain disappointment pointment of all your zealous and able efforts to accomplish the object of the Governor-General in Council's instructions of the 28th December, and under the conviction, already stated, that even the Vizier's acquiescence in every part of the proposed plan of reform, in the actual temper and disposition of his mind, would fail to secure any of the benefits which his cordial adoption of it would unquestionably produce.

Consultations,

15. You will anticipate that resolution to be the relinquishment, for the present at least, of any further efforts. The plea to be assumed for desisting from further urgency is the protraction of the negotiation, and the consequent delay in the adoption of the preliminary measures and arrangements, occasioned solely by his Excellency's insincere and disingenuous conduct, until the near approach of the termination of the current fussy year has rendered the prosecution of the plan of reform at the present season impracticable.

16. You will not think it necessary, at the same time, to disguise from the Vizier the sentiments of disappointment with which his Excellency the Vice-President in Council has contemplated the conduct of the Vizier during the whole of the negotiation, and now contemplates the effect of it, in the suspension of the salutary and unobjectionable system of reform recommended to his adoption.

17. You will be pleased to add, that his Excellency the Vice-President refrains from addressing the Vizier on this subject, until the receipt of the letter which it is understood his Excellency is preparing in reply to the Governor-General's address of the 28th December.

Sir :

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. Since the despatch of my letter to your address, under date the 28th ultimo, I have had no communications with his Excellency the Vizier, of importance sufficient to require an official report to the Government.

2. His Excellency's general health has been stated by himself to be indifferent, and he has apparently suffered some degree of uneasiness, and has been precluded from taking his usual exercise on horseback by a rheumatic affection of his limbs; but his physician has reported his complaint to be of no material consequence, and to be probably of short duration.

3. I considered it to be my duty to offer a visit of friendly inquiry regarding his Excellency's health during his residence at Beebeepore, and I proceeded accordingly to breakfast with him on the morning of the 4th instant; when his Excellency received me in his usual manner, complained of occasional pain in one of his knees, and announced his intention of returning to town in a few days; at which I expressed my satisfaction, without allowing his Excellency to suppose that I attached any particular importance to his temporary retirement from, or speedy return to, his capital.

4. No conversation of an important nature took place; and I took my leave after breakfast, without referring in any respect to the subject of our recent correspondence. His Excellency returned to his palace on the morning of the 6th instant, and several letters and messages have since passed between us on the ordinary business of his government, in the course of which he has manifested a greater readiness than before to comply with my requests and suggestions.

5. I have further understood from respectable authority, that a circular order, has been issued to all the farmers of revenue, with the exception of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, to announce to them that no renewal of their leases will be granted, and that the revenues are in future to be collected under the amaunee system exclusively. If his Excellency the Vizier shall hereafter be pleased to intimate this resolution and the measures connected with it to me, I shall be prepared to offer such suggestions on the subject as may appear to be most beneficial, with a view to the realization of his revenue, without involving in any degree the responsibility of the British Government for the success of his Excellency's measures of apparent or partial reform.

6. I take this opportunity of acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, expressive of the sentiments of the Government on the general subject of my proceedings, as detailed in my despatch of the 28th of May, and conveying a salutary caution, with a reference to my future proceedings, which has never been absent from my thoughts, and shall hereafter be most strictly observed.

7. In the case of his Excellency the Vizier being at length happily induced to fulfil his engagements with me, and to execute the measures of reform under the constant influence of my suggestions, proceeding on his own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which my advice may be intended to apply, the information which I already possess regarding the character and dispositions of the principal landholders, and the state of the country and population at large, enables me with confidence to predict the successful progress of those measures in every district of his dominions, without any material defalcation of his revenue, during even the first three years of reform, and with a certain prospect of increase at the beginning of the second settlement of the revenue.

8. On the other hand, if his Excellency be seriously disposed, and being so disposed shall be permitted, to depart from any one of his engagements, and to commence hereafter, as he has already on one or two occasions commenced, what he is pleased to term a partial and experimental reform of the system of assessment and collection of his revenue; if he continue, as heretofore, to withhold every degree of useful and important information from the British Resident at his Court, to ask the advice of the Resident occasionally on a few unimportant points, and to evince a total disregard for that advice in every instance where it might oppose his own baneful propensities, or the oppressive views of his Government, it is in this case sufficiently apparent, that the failure, whether partial or total, of the projected measures of reform, and the future decrease of a revenue which is actually now decreasing with extraordinary rapidity every year, cannot, on any principle, be referred to the counsels of the British Government or of its representative, nor can they constitute a valid charge against the efficiency of a general system of reform, which, to be executed in the terms of the treaty and existing engagements between the two States, must be executed with the uniform concurrence and advice of the Honourable Company's officers, and the total failure of which, if it were possible, might in this latter case alone, be made a ground of charge, or of reproach, against the wisdom and justice of our Government.

9. It shall be my particular study and care to keep a watchful eye over the progressive execution of the minutest details of every important measure which may originate with my suggestions to the Vizier; and I shall not fail to remonstrate, or, if necessary, to protest against any of his Excellency's measures, or instances of departure from my suggestions, the influence of which might found a charge or reproach, of the nature above described, in the remotest possible degree.

1. I deem it to be my duty to transmit to you, for the notice of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, the enclosed copy and translation of a letter which I received from his Excellency the Vizier in the afternoon of the 9th instant, complaining of severe indisposition, and desiring my attendance in the palace with some medical gentlemen, for the purpose of ascertaining the state of his Excellency's health.

2. Having visited his Excellency at Beebeepore on the morning of the 4th instant, when he looked remarkably well, and having had daily or more frequent communications of a very satisfactory nature since that date, in answer to my inquiries from his Excellency and his physician Mr. Law, the tenor of the accompanying letter could not fail to surprise, while it alarmed me in a very great degree, and I did not lose a moment in repairing to his Excellency's palace, accompanied by the surgeon of the Residency, and directing at the same time the attendance of his Excellency's surgeon, for the purpose of satisfying myself, by the joint opinions of those gentlemen, regarding the true state of his Excellency's health.

3. The Vizier was seated in his bed when I arrived, seemed highly gratified by my ready attendance, on his friendly summons, and looked still remarkably well ; but complained of great pain in his limbs, and particularly of restlessness during the night, and desired that I should state all the symptoms of his disorder to the medical gentlemen in attendance, and particularly to Mr. Wilson, observing that he had followed implicitly the prescriptions of Mr. Law for a month, without deriving any essential benefit from them.

4. Mr. Wilson, in concurrence with Mr. Law, pronounced his Excellency's disorder to be merely a rheumatic affection, arising probably from exposure to cold, and creating, by long duration, a degree of debility and a languid state of the circulation of blood in the limbs, which would certainly yield to an alterative course of medicine in a short time, and was not attended by any symptom of danger whatever.

5. I remained in attendance on his Excellency for upwards of an hour, administering every degree of consolation which the nature of his complaint, the apparent condition of his mind, and the kindest offices and expressions of friendship could afford to him ; and I announced, when taking leave of his Excellency, my resolution to visit him every day till I could witness his entire recovery, and report it for the perfect satisfaction of his Excellency the Vice-President and the other members of the Government.

6. I did accordingly pay another visit to his Excellency the Vizier yesterday, and I have waited on him again to-day, observing with genuine pleasure, and receiving from his Excellency a report of the improving state of his health, and diminution of the restlessness and other painful symptoms of his disorder.

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

Ordered, That, in reply to the two preceding despatches, the following letter be addressed to the Resident at Lucknow.

To Captain J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your two despatches, under dates the 8th and 11th instant ; the former stating some observations founded principally on the tenor of my letter of the 21st ultimo ; the latter relating the circumstances of his Excellency the Vizier's indisposition, and enclosing a copy and translation of his Excellency's letter to you on that subject, requesting your attendance in terms of extraordinary kindness and conciliation.

2. His Excellency the Vice-President in Council's concern at the severity of the Vizier's indisposition is greatly relieved by the favourable report of the physicians, and by the information of the amendment of his health. His Excellency the Vice-President has judged it proper to address a letter to the Vizier, expressive of his concern for his Excellency's indisposition, and of his satisfaction at the prospect of his speedy recovery. That letter will be transmitted to you from the Persian Department. It is superfluous to signify to you his Excellency in Council's particular approbation of the soothing attentions which you have manifested towards the Vizier on this occasion.

3. The circumstances and observations stated in your despatch of the 8th instant, combined even with the conciliatory language of the Vizier's letter to your address of the 9th, have not appeared to Government to render necessary any alteration of the instructions conveyed to you in my letter of the 12th, because they indicate no material change in that disposition of his Excellency's mind, with regard to the projected system of reform, on which those instructions were founded.

4. If his Excellency could be supposed to be sincerely desirous of effecting a reform of the present vicious system of assessment and collection ; if his objections to the proposed plan were not, as they unquestionably are, fictitious ; if (to use the language of the 7th paragraph of your despatch of the 8th instant) any prospect existed of inducing his Excellency " to fulfil his engagements " with you, and to execute the measures of reform, under the constant influence of your suggestions, proceeding on his own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which your advice might be intended " to apply," it would be the duty of Government to persevere in urging his Excellency's execution of the suggested plan, not, however, by the compulsory means of menacing the withholding of our troops from the internal service of his country, for which, indeed, no necessity would then exist, but by arguments calculated to remove his objections, arguments to which, in the temper and disposition of mind above described, his Excellency might be expected to yield, or by compromises not subversive of the object in view. But, under the Vizier's most manifest aversion to the change of system, no advantage can be expected to arise from our perseverance. The force of argument he has resisted ; his own engagements he has retracted ; and the compromise proposed by himself he has declined to accept. The removal of one objection has been succeeded by another ; and finally, the whole course of his Excellency's conduct during the negotiation has demonstrated a systematic design to avoid the adoption of the proposed measures of reform, and warrants a conviction that, if his acquiescence be enforced by menace, or by importunity, he would clandestinely employ the means within his power of rendering it abortive.

5. The case which, as above cited, you have yourself described as enabling you with confidence to predict the success of the meditated measures of reform, cannot cannot be expected to arise. In the disposition which his Excellency has so unalterably displayed, he might be compelled, but could not be persuaded, to fulfil "his engagements with you, and to execute the measures of reform under "the constant influence of your suggestions;" but there the effect of compulsion would cease. The disposition would be wanting, which should lead him to render your suggestions beneficial by "his own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which your advice might be intended to "apply;" and that disposition would still prevail, which, as it has hitherto led his Excellency to obstruct, by every species of artifice and evasion, the introduction of the plan of reform, would actuate his secret endeavours to demonstrate the justice of his uniform aversion to it, by precluding the efficiency of its operation.

6. Unless, therefore, such a change should have occurred in the temper and disposition of his Excellency's mind, as to lead him cheerfully to co-operate in the measures of reform proposed to his adoption, limiting his objections to points of real doubt, not raising them, as hitherto, with the secret design of preventing the execution of those measures, Government must consider a further prosecution of the negotiation to be more than useless.

The 2d August 1811.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir:

1. Since the despatch of my letter to your address, under date the 11th instant, I have visited his Excellency the Vizier daily, and I have observed the progressive diminution of all the unpleasant symptoms of his disorder, as well as the gradual restoration of his mind to that degree of tranquillity and of confidence in my friendship, which appeared to have suffered a temporary interruption under the supposed influence of the pernicious counsels of Hukeem Mehdi Alee Khan, with a reference to the recent discussions between his Excellency and me on the subject of a reform of his administration.

2. To-day I was sorry to observe a trifling alteration for the worse in his Excellency's general appearance, and to hear him complain of returning pain in his joints and increased restlessness in the night, which his Excellency's surgeon has ascribed to the operation of medicine partly, and partly to fresh cold: at the same time Mr. Law and Mr. Wilson concurred in still pronouncing his disorder to be unattended by any symptoms of danger, and to be in a train of certain removal by the operation of the alterative course of medicine to which his present restlessness is ascribed.

3. I have this day had the honour of receiving your letter of the 6th instant, in answer to my despatches of the 12th, 20th, and 28th ultimo, expressive of the final resolution of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council to desist from any further efforts, at present, for the reform of the Vizier's administration, and explanatory of the various grounds of political expedience and public faith upon which that resolution has proceeded.

4. The highly important considerations that have now led to the relinquishment of an object to which so much importance was originally attached, and the whole train of the reasoning which is contained in your present despatch, are of too conclusive a nature to admit of any suggestions on my part, with a reference to the probable effects of the final resolution of the Government, when it shall be made known to his Excellency the Vizier. But there are two material points in the character of my own negotiation with his Excellency to which I consider it to be my duty to solicit the attention of the Government, with a view to explain in a satisfactory manner the principle at least, if not to justify the particular terms, of the declaration which I conveyed to the Vizier in my letter of the 27th ultimo, and from which his Excellency the Vice-President in Council has been pleased to withhold his assent, as exceeding the intentions of the Government.

5. And first, I shall submit for the consideration of his Excellency in Council, with a reference to the tenth paragraph of your despatch, that no specific plan of reform has been ever pressed upon his Excellency the Vizier, without affording, at the same time, for his choice, an alternative by which the public faith of his Government, and the positive obligations of treaty, might be equally maintained and fulfilled; nay, that every suggestion which has been offered to his Excellency by me, from the commencement till the close of the late arduous negotiation, may be considered, in fact, as no more than an answer to some direct inquiry on his own part, with a professed view to the fulfilment of his acknowledged obligation to establish a system of internal government in his dominions, conducive to the happiness of his subjects, and to the security of their property and lives.

6. As a proof and illustration of this remark, I take the liberty of recalling to notice the conclusion of the ninth paragraph of my despatch to your address, under date the 8th of April, and the general tenor of my answers to the Vizier's observations on the contents of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, forming the second number of the enclosure of that despatch.

7. In the paragraph above alluded to, there are the following remarkable words: "I called upon his Excellency to acknowledge or disavow the obligation, &c. of the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession with Marquess Wellesley, and now candidly to declare to me, whether or not, in his own judgment, he had fulfilled, or attempted to fulfil, the purpose of that obligation. If he had not, it was his obvious duty, I observed, to consider the present remonstrance of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council as a solemn and serious demand for the fulfilment of a positive obligation on his part, by his adopting the plan of reform recommended to him by the British Government, with whose counsels he had engaged to conform, or by suggesting and carrying into execution some other plan of his own, which should be equally calculated to answer the purposes of that obligation, namely, to provide for the security and happiness of his subjects, and to relieve the Honourable Company's Government from the extraordinary and disreputable burthen of supporting by force of arms an unjust and oppressive administration."

8. Of a tendency manifestly similar to that of the above quotation from my letter of the 8th of April, is the general tenor of my early discussions with the Vizier on the subject of the Governor-General's letter. His Excellency, in the outset, acknowledged his obligation to reform the system of his Government. He tacitly avowed his own inability to suggest an efficient plan for that purpose, and he called upon the British Government, in the person of its representative, to devise and arrange the details of an improved system of administration, such as the British Government might consider itself bound and authorized to support, without incurring any longer the reproach of abetting injustice and oppression. His Excellency further, after mature deliberation and discussion, acquiesced, and declared his acquiescence in the principal measures of reform which had been suggested at his own desire for his adoption; and he has finally retracted his acquiescence, under circumstances of extraordinary aggravation, which it is unnecessary here to describe.

9. It follows, therefore, or seems to my judgment to follow, that the ultimate declaration of a refusal of the aid of our troops to the oppressive and arbitrary demands of the Vizier's farmers and Aumils is not to be considered as the alternative of his Excellency's acquiescence in a specific plan of reform recommended mended by the British Government, but partly as the alternative of his Excellency's adoption of any system or measures of reform, in other words, of his evincing a disposition to fulfil, in any respect, the obligation of the treaty; and partly as a just and legitimate exercise of the essential right of every Government to investigate and ascertain the justice of the demands which its power may be required to enforce, before proceeding to enforce those demands, by extensive and hazardous, as well as, in most cases, unnecessary warfare.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

from Resident at
Lucknow.

10. That the true meaning of the declaration which I thought it my duty to convey to his Excellency the Vizier, in my letter of the 27th ultimo, was no more than that of a resolution for the future exercise of the right above described, is the second important point in the character of my negotiation with the Vizier, to which I solicit the attention of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council; and for a proof of the justice of this remark, I will further take the liberty of referring to my despatch of the 8th of April, particularly the thirty-second paragraph of that despatch, and to the uniform tenor of all my communications with the Vizier, as well as to the impression which the declaration itself may have made upon his Excellency's mind, and which I will venture with confidence to describe as falling far short of that of a positive resolution, on the part of the Government, to refuse the aid of its troops in the suppression of any future disorder in his Excellency's country, to be occasioned by the oppression of his Aumils.

11. Indeed, the particular reference which the declaration in question contains to the concluding provision of the third article of the Treaty of Cession, seems to me to be demonstrative of its limitation to the future refusal of the aid, or support, of our troops to the oppressive demands of the Aumils in the progress of their collection of the revenue: a peculiar description of support for which no article of the treaty provides, and which, in fact, is expressly superseded by the provision above referred to, although the subsequent practice of the British Government, proceeding on principles of liberality to his Excellency the Vizier, have certainly tended to establish a belief in his Excellency's mind, that the British troops, like the armed Peons in his service, are the bounden slaves of his will, the necessary instruments of his oppression.

12. Whether this belief should be removed from his Excellency's mind, by a solemn declaration of the future intention of the Government to investigate the justice of the demands which its power may be required to enforce, or should continue to influence the Vizier's conduct, in direct opposition to our counsels, was the only question in my contemplation while conveying the suggestion which is contained in the concluding paragraph of my despatch under date the 28th ultimo, and I have only now to lament, that the imperfect or ambiguous terms of this suggestion, and of the declaration to which it referred, have given room for a construction by the Government of a delicate and embarrassing nature, so totally remote from my thoughts.

13. Having submitted these explanatory remarks, it only remains for me to express my ready and implicit obedience to the commands of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, which shall be carried into immediate effect as soon as the state of the Vizier's health shall admit of my entering on the subject.

2. His Excellency has this day recommenced his usual exercise on horse-back, and has announced this circumstance to me as a proof of his entire recovery. It is my intention to offer a charitable donation on this occasion of a thousand Sicca rupees on the part of the Government, and a further sum of five-hundred rupees from myself, as a mark of respect for his Excellency, and a manifestation of joy at his recovery.

3. The present apparently happy frame of the Vizier's temper and disposition, if there were any certainty of its continuance, would authorize the hope of success in a renewal of the negotiation with his Excellency on the subject of a reform in his Government. But I consider myself as precluded from taking advantage of any circumstance for the renewal of this negotiation by the recent commands of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, communicated by your despatch of the 6th instant, and I shall therefore content myself with receiving such proposals on the subject as the Vizier may think proper to convey to me, and submitting those proposals to you for his Excellency in Council's consideration.

4. I shall embrace the first opportunity of representing to his Excellency the Vizier, that, although the unfortunate protraction of the discussions between his Excellency and me on the subject of a reform of his administration, and his Excellency's subsequent illness, have rendered the immediate adoption of the measures recommended by me inexpedient in my own judgment, as well as in the opinion of the Government, his Excellency should by no means, on this account, delay to prepare an answer to the Governor-General's letter, and that I have been particularly enjoined to obtain and transmit his Excellency's answer to that letter at the earliest practicable period. I shall, of course, accompany my representation with such further suggestions and remarks as may be calculated to make a salutary impression on his Excellency's mind, to render the tenor of his reply to the Governor-General's letter as satisfactory as possible, and to lead to the renewal of the negotiation under more auspicious circumstances at some future time, if the Government shall be pleased to authorize it.

Ordered, That in reply to the two preceding despatches, the following letter be addressed to the Resident at Lucknow.

Letter
from Secretary to
Government.

To Captain Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches, under dates the 16th and 24th ultimo, the former replying to the instructions of Government contained in my letter of the 6th ultimo, on the subject of the reform of his Excellency the Vizier's administration, the latter reporting the convalescence of his Excellency, and the course of proceeding which you proposed to adopt under the apparent improvement of his Excellency's disposition with respect to the measure of reform, combined with the obligation imposed on you by the instructions above referred to.

2. The terms of the declaration relative to the employment of the British troops, contained in your letter to the Vizier of the 27th of June, connected with the suggestion of the last paragraph of your despatch of the 28th of that month, certainly appeared to warrant the construction which gave rise to the observations of his Excellency the Vice-President in Council, conveyed to you in my letter of the 6th ultimo; for, in your address to the Vizier above-mentioned, you refer not only to the refusal of the aid of our troops "to the pre" sent baneful system, or to any of its instruments in the persons of the Vizier's
" Aumils," but also (hypothetically) to the case of his Excellency's "taking " measures for the future coercion of his landholders and the suppression of " insurrections,

"insurrections, to be produced by the despair of an oppressed population, without requiring the aid of the Honourable Company's troops;" and in the last paragraph of your despatch of the 28th of June you suggest "a firm and decided refusal of the future assistance of our troops to support the proceedings of the Aumils, or coerce the defaulting Zemindars," as a measure calculated to compel the Vizier's adoption of the proposed reform. The implied cases, then, in which the refusal of the aid of our troops was adverted to, comprehended an actual insurrection of his Excellency's subjects, as well as the resistance of the Zemindars to the oppressive demands of the Aumils.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

3. These observations, however, are not stated with a view to oppose the explanation which you have offered, of the nature and extent of your declarations to the Vizier on the subject of the future employment of our troops in supporting the authority of his Aumils, but merely to shew the grounds of that construction of your report which appeared to require the discussion contained in my despatch abovementioned. Your present explanations appear to coincide with the following view of the rights and obligations of the British government under the treaty, and his Excellency in Council concurs in them under that supposition.

4. Admitting, in the terms of the ninth paragraph of your letter, that "the ultimate declaration of a refusal of the aid of our troops to the oppressive and arbitrary demands of the Vizier's farmers and Aumils" may with justice be considered "partly as the alternative of his Excellency's adoption of any system of reform, or, in other words, of his evincing a disposition to fulfil, in any respect, the obligation of the treaty, and partly as a just and legitimate exercise of the essential right of every Government to investigate and ascertain the justice of the demands which its power may be required to enforce, before proceeding to enforce those demands by extensive and hazardous, as well as, in most cases, unnecessary warfare;" the terms of this position express the necessity of an investigation into the equity of the demands to be enforced, and imply, on our part, a right of arbitration, both antecedent to the employment of our troops, whence it follows, that the declaration to the Vizier should have consisted not of the indefinite and unqualified "refusal of the aid of our troops to support the proceedings of the Aumils, or coerce the defaulting Zemindars," but of an alleged right of previous investigation, of a right to arbitrate the demands which the troops might be called upon to support, and of an intimation of the resolution of the British Government to exercise that right on all future occasions.

5. The case may be supposed of one or more Zemindars in a Province, driven perhaps to extremity by the injustice or exactions of an Aumil or farmer, refusing to pay any portion of the public revenue, assuming an attitude of resistance, and preparing to oppose any attempt, on the part of the latter, to enforce his demands. Such Zemindars must then be considered to be in a state of rebellion; and under the supposition that the local authority did not possess the power of reducing them to obedience, the demand of assistance from the British troops would be authorized by the stipulation of the treaty, and the case would require the march of our troops to the scene of these disorders, not, however, necessarily for the purpose of enforcing the demands of the Aumil, but for the preservation of tranquillity, in the first instance, and ultimately for the enforcement of the demands which, on investigation, might be found to be just. At the same time, that investigation would be prosecuted in the manner that might be settled between the Resident and the Vizier.

6. This course of proceeding would obviously require, as the alternative of the Vizier's declining the adoption of any reform, a declaration essentially differing from the terms of that which you actually conveyed to him, since it would require that the right of investigation and arbitration should be asserted and recognised in all cases in which the aid of our troops should be demanded.

7. I am now directed to signify to you the desire of the Vice-President in Council, that you will actually convey the intimation above described to the Vizier, adjusting with him, at the same time, the mode of enquiry to be prosecuted for ascertaining the justice of the demands which our troops are required to enforce, observing, at the same time, the principle of proceeding explained in the 5th paragraph of this despatch.

8. This instruction is founded on the supposition that the Vizier will not have been induced cordially to enter into the scheme of reform which has been proposed, because that scheme involves an effectual restraint on the oppressions and exactions of his Excellency's officers, and the means of ascertaining the equity of their demands on the landholders; but if the change of disposition, adverted to in the third paragraph of your despatch of the 24th ultimo, shall have proved so essential as to lead his Excellency to acquiesce in the beneficial arrangements which he has hitherto resisted, you will, of course, under the instructions of the 19th ultimo, have prosecuted the negotiation, which by the orders of Government of the 6th ultimo you were directed to suspend.

9. I am directed to signify to you his Excellency in Council's approbation of your intention to offer a charitable donation of one thousand rupees on the occasion of the Vizier's recovery from his late severe indisposition, and you are authorized to charge also to the public account the further sum of five hundred rupees which you proposed to offer on your own part. You will, of course, take an opportunity of expressing to his Excellency the satisfaction with which the Vice-President in Council has received the intelligence of his recovery.

Sir :

1. His Excellency the Vizier, although uniformly convalescent since the dispatch of my letter to your address under date the 24th ultimo, has not hitherto authorized me to report his entire recovery for the satisfaction of the Vice-President in Council, nor has he resumed the consideration or discussion of any question of importance depending between the two States.

2. He has, however, on one or two recent occasions, expressed his resolution to review the whole of the correspondence between us on the important subject of reform, for the purpose of preparing his answer to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, and he has further declared his intention of announcing to me, at an early period, his sentiments and ultimate decision on the subject of the Vice-President's letter, regarding the claims of the family of Hyder Beg, as well as his final determination on some other subordinate questions, the adjustment of which has been protracted by his Excellency's recent indisposition.

3. Although satisfied of the Vizier's recovery, and aware of his untoward disposition to procrastinate, by every possible pretext, the satisfactory adjustment of questions on which his own unbiassed judgment must be at variance with his personal interests and views, I have nevertheless thought it my duty to refrain from frequently urging his Excellency on any of the points under discussion, and have contented myself with expressing my regret, that the peculiar nature and unhappy protraction of his illness should have withdrawn his attention, at so critical a period, from the most important concerns of his government, and should have suspended the adjustment of questions, in which the common interests and reputation of both Governments are so eminently and particularly involved.

4. I cannot offer any conjecture regarding the probable time of my being enabled to report, for the information of the Government, the final decision of the Vizier on any of the questions that are pending; but I shall take advantage of every opportunity to recall them to his Excellency's notice, and I shall use every possible argument, and every effort of my judgment, to produce a satisfactory result.

5. In the mean time, I consider it to be my duty to submit, for the perusal of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, the enclosed translations and copies of some letters and other documents which have recently passed between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, upon one of the points that are noticed in the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency, under date the 28th of December, namely, the restoration of Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier.

6. In no instance, whatever, has a vindictive spirit of resentment in the mind of his Excellency the Vizier towards the dependants of the British Government been more forcibly manifested than in his conduct to the only son and representative of his late respectable minister, the preceptor of his earliest youth, and the most faithful adherent of his fortunes, Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan.

7. The implacable enmity with which, on a former occasion, the Vizier would have persecuted Tujumool Hoosein Khan to perpetual imprisonment, or, perhaps, to an ignominious death, on the ground of a false and fabricated accusation of treason; the eagerness with which his Excellency took advantage of a recent opportunity to deprive Tujumool of advantages arising from the possession of his jagier; and, finally, the anxiety with which his Excellency now seeks for, and instigates the most frivolous and vexatious complaints against the landholders and peasantry of the jagier, in the hope of compelling the possessor to relinquish his just right, or to forego a number of its advantages, are all equally demonstrative of the unhappy disposition of mind, with regard to the dependants of our Government, which I have so often ascribed to the Vizier, and which would seem to be daily increasing, instead of yielding, in any degree, to my respectful remonstrances against it, or to the correct and submissive demeanour of the persons who are subjected to its effects.

8. I trust that the tenor of my last letter to his Excellency, on the subject of Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, will suspend for a considerable time, if it do not entirely preclude, the renewal of those frivolous complaints; and, at all events, I am already so completely in possession of the sentiments and wishes of the Government, with a reference to Tujumool and his jagier, that the object of the foregoing remarks is merely to illustrate a correspondence, which I have deemed it to be my duty to submit for the notice of the Vice-President in Council.

9. In addition to the correspondence above-noticed, I transmit to you, for his Excellency's perusal, a translation of a letter to my address, and of instructions to the Cutwal of Lucknow, which I have more recently received from the Vizier, on a subject highly interesting in itself, and connected with the general question of reform, as discussed in the Governor-General's letter, and particularly in his Lordship in Council's instructions, under date the 28th of December, namely, the police of the metropolis of Oude.

10. Being occupied in preparing an answer to his Excellency the Vizier's letter on this subject, in which I propose to review the proceedings of the nominal courts of justice at Lucknow, and the conduct of the police of the city, in as far as they have fallen under my observation since my taking charge of the Residency at this Court, I shall postpone the submission of any remarks on his Excellency's letter, or its enclosure, and shall make them the subject of a separate despatch on a future more convenient occasion.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 23d July 1811.)

I transmit a copy of an arzee received from Jumal-ood-deen, Aumil, setting forth the rebellious and refractory conduct of the Zemindars of Muchgawan in Hurdooe, the jagier of Tujumool Hoosein Khan, with a reference to the boundary of the village of Malickpore Burnah, belonging to the Khalsah. My hesitation in giving up the jagier to the management of the Khan proceeded on my natural apprehension of such occurrences as this, which has now been realized; and as such conduct must necessarily occasion loss to the Sircar, I desire that you will write to the Khan to prohibit such practices on the part of his Zemindars.

Enclosure in
the Vizier's Letter.

The Arzee of Jumal-ood-deen, dated 27th of Jemadee-oo-sanee.

Between the Zemindars of Malickpoor Burnah, in Pergunnah Race Barrellie and the Zemindars of Muchgawan in Hurdooe, Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, a dispute had long ago subsisted respecting the limits of their villages, and many years be elapsed since a settlement of the dispute was effected, and the disputed lands were assigned by arbitration to the Zemindars of Malickpoor Burnah, who continued in the possession of those lands till the year 1218 fusly, and have several documents to this effect under the seal of Almass Ale Khan, formerly manager of the jagier. During the time of Joogul Kishore, late Aumil of Barellie, the Zemindars of Muchgawan attempted to repossess those lands, but their claim being totally groundless, the lands continued, as before, in the possession of the Zemindars of Malickpoor.

Recently, when those latter Zemindars commenced the cultivation of the lands for the present fusly year 1219, about three hundred armed men from the village of Muchgaun prevented them from doing so, and are acting in a rebellious manner to the manifest loss of the Sircar. I have, therefore, represented the whole matter to the Presence, in the hope that orders may be issued to Tujumool Hoosein Khan for the punishment of his Zemindars, or that I may be authorized to adopt measures for this purpose.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written 3d August 1811.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 23d ultimo, with the enclosed arzee from Jumal-ood-deen, conveying a complaint against certain Zemindars of the village of Muchgaun in Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier.

Immediately after the restoration of the jagier by your Excellency, in compliance with the earnest advice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, while announcing this happy event to the Jagierdar, I cautioned him, in terms the most impressive, with a view to the prevention of complaints of the nature which is now before me, and I had every reason to be satisfied with the assurances which he conveyed to me on that occasion, and with his subsequent becoming conduct in taking written obligations from all his Zemindars for their peaceable and submissive behaviour, with a reference to your Excellency's Aumils, and to all the surrounding Zemindars.

Under these circumstances, I was naturally mortified and surprized at the nature of the complaint which your Excellency found it necessary to convey to me, and I instantly summoned the Dewan of Tujumool Hoosein Khan to rebuke him for the supposed misconduct which had given rise to it. I further wrote a letter to the Jagierdar in the terms of the accompanying document; and I have received from him, both verbally and in writing, the most positive and solemn assurances that the complaint is totally groundless. A copy of his letter to my address, with three original and authentic documents which were enclosed in it, are transmitted for your Excellency's perusal; and I beg that you will consider them attentively, and inform me of their effect upon your mind.

To

To my candid and unprejudiced judgment, the enclosed documents establish, in a most satisfactory manner, the innocence of the Zemindars of the jagier, and the groundless nature of the complaints which the Aumil has preferred against them.

Letter
from Tujummool Hoosein Khan.

After the usual compliments.

I have been favoured with your letter conveying a copy of his Excellency the Vizier's shookha to your address, and a copy of the arzee of Jumal-ood-deen, Aumil of Dalmow Barellie, addressed to his Excellency, respecting disturbances said to be excited by the Zemindars of Muchgawan in my jagier with the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah belonging to the Khalsa. Immediately on my receipt of your letter I despatched a servant to Hurdooee, to ascertain the real circumstances of the case, which I now proceed to submit to you. The lands which are now in dispute have been in the possession of the Zemindars of Muchgawan from time immemorial till the fusly year 1217, and the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah had never till then preferred any claim whatever to those lands. In the fusly year 1217, about a month before the jagier was restored to me, when the servants of Sewukram left the district, Nujum-ood-deen, the Aumil of Barellie, taking advantage of the absence of my Aumil, brought people with him to the boundary and began to cut down the grain, which he took away. The Zemindars of Muchgawan came to me to complain of this outrage, and I, being ever desirous of avoiding any ground of complaint, sent Mohummud Roshun, the Naib of Hurdooee, to Jumal-ood-deen, Aumil of Barellie, with a view to an amicable adjustment of the dispute. Jumal-ood-deen accordingly proposed to settle the matter by reference to witnesses on both sides, and for this purpose got the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah and Muchgawan to execute an ekrar namah and moochulka, which he put upon the records of his office, of which I enclose copies, attested by Nowindah Ray, Canoongoe of Barellie, for your information; and I issued positive orders to the Zemindars of Muchgawan not on any account, to sow the ground, though they might be losers by this order, till the dispute should be finally settled, nor has any one to the present time even ploughed the ground: and, notwithstanding that Jumal-ood-deen originally proposed this mode of settlement, he has directed the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah to cultivate the lands in dispute. The Zemindars of Muchgawan have merely represented to the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah, that they should abstain from cultivating the ground till the dispute might be settled by witnesses, and no other circumstance, nor even conversation, by which any disturbance could be raised, has passed between the parties. But Jumal-ood-deen has misrepresented the circumstances, and brought forward the above message as a cause of complaint, and submitted it as such to the Presence.

With regard to what he has written in his arzee, that the ground in question was in the possession of the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah till the year 1218, this assertion is totally false, and is in opposition to the contents of the ekrar namah. As a faithful subject of this Government, and submissive in every respect to your commands, it is impossible that I should have departed from the orders which you conveyed to me at the time of the restoration of my jagier. In obedience to those orders, I took written obligations from all the Zemindars of the jagier for their peaceable and submissive conduct with a reference to the Zemindars of the Khalsa. In the month of Rubbee-oos-sanee, two brothers of Hinna Dobay, Zemindar of Purnawan, in the jagier, were killed by Neel Kanth, Puttadar of Serai, in the Elaka of Hydergurh, belonging to the Khalsa, without any cause whatever; yet the Zemindars of the above place did not retaliate on that occasion, nor did I represent the circumstances to the Presence, from the fear of giving trouble or offence: and how then is it possible

Consultations,

possible that the Zemindars of the jagier should have acted on the present occasion in the outrageous manner which is described by the Aumil? I enclose copies of two statements; one of the innocence of the Zemindars of Muchgawan, attested by several Zemindars of Barellie, and the other containing proof that the land in question belongs to Muchgawan, attested by several Zemindars belonging to the Khalsa, as also a Moochulka from the Zemindars of Malikpore Burnah, executed in the year 1212 Hijree; from a perusal of all which you will be fully acquainted with the real circumstances of the case.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 18th August 1811.)

I transmit, for your perusal, a statement having reference to the boundary of the town of Hurdooee Khass, in the jagier of Tujummool Hoosein Khan, and of the adjacent village of Rampore, in purgunnah Tholundee, belonging to the Khalsa.

I hesitated in giving the jagier from apprehensions of this nature alone, and my fears have been all realized.

Statement enclosed in the preceding.

The following is a correct statement of the boundary of Kusbah Hurdooee Khass, belonging to the jagier of Tujummool Hoosein Khan, and the village of Rampore Mohee-ood-deen, in purgunnah Tholindee, attested under the seals of Gunga Persaud, Mohurrir of the Seeghadars, Sheo Gholam Sing, Chowdree of purgunnah Tholindee, Shewa Chowdree, Kadir Bukhsh and Fukeer Bukhsh, Canoongoes of the said purgunnah.

Heera Sing, the Zemindar of Hurdooee Khass, with great audacity, being supported by the Aumil of the jagier, laid claim to about one hundred and fifty begahs of ground capable of cultivation, besides the jungle lands, and raised a disturbance in the district with a view to obtaining possession. In order to quell this disturbance and settle the dispute between the Zemindars in the fusly year 1192, in presence of Fyz Bukhsh, the Tehsildar of Hurdooee, Naib of the late Almass Aleec Khan, and Mal Doss, the Tehsildar of purgunnah Tholindee, Naib of Rajah Setul Pershaud deceased, and of many Seeghadars and Zemindars of the neighbouring villages, the trial of lifting a red-hot ball was referred to; and as God is inclined to favour the just, the hand of Gunga, Zemindar of Hurdooee, was burnt, from which period till the year 1209 fusly, the lands in question were considered as the property of the Zemindars of Rampore.

In the year 1210, however, owing to the support of the Naib of Almass Aleec Khan and to the disturbances excited by the said Heera Sing, Zemindar of Hurdooee, the lands were allowed to lie waste and have never been cultivated since that period.

As the country has now become amaanee, the Zemindars of Rampore wish to plough and cultivate their lands, which Heera Sing and other Zemindars of Hurdooee, being protected by Tujummool Hoosein Khan, prevent them from doing, and intend to build a garden-house on the ground.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 13th instant, with the enclosed statement, having reference to the boundary of Hurdooee, in Tujummool Hoosein Khan's jagier.

From the tenor of this statement, it appears that the lands which are now in dispute have been suffered to lie waste entirely, and have never been occupied by the Zemindars of Rampore or of Hurdooee since the year 1210 fusly, a period of nine years: and this circumstance, of itself, seems to me to be nearly conclusive against the right of the Zemindars of Rampore, who, if their claim were not totally groundless, would most probably have asserted their right, and have obtained possession of the lands during the management of Ruhmut Alee Khan or Khanazad, or would at all events have preferred a complaint to your Excellency long ago on the subject of their present claim. But independently of the above consideration, as during the whole of the year 1218 the jagier was under the management of Sewah Ram, an Aumil of your Excellency's choice, it is a matter of the greatest surprize, and totally unaccountable to me, consistently with the justice of the present demand, that the Zemindars of Rampore should have been silent on the subject of their right during all that year, and should never have attempted to cultivate or take possession of the lands until now, when instigated to the measure, as it appears, by your Excellency's Aumil of Tholindee, under authority that might naturally be deduced from a source to which I should be very sorry to ascribe such a circumstance.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, "that you hesitated in giving " the jagier from apprehensions of this nature," though it be ever my earnest desire to respect and support, instead of controverting your Excellency's observations, I cannot, with any justice, on the present occasion, admit that your Excellency has been pleased to confer a jagier on the Khan at the instance of the British Government; for, on the contrary, I have respectfully stated and proved to your Excellency, that the jagier, which is the subject of this address, was the unquestionable gift of your predecessor to the late Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan, under a regular altumgha grant descending to his heirs and successors, and consequently inherited by his only legitimate son, the present lawful possessor, and that the temporary consignment of the jagier to the management of Alnass Alee Khan, Ruhmut, and Khanazad, could never be considered as a transfer of the property from the Jagierdar, so as to require or authorize a grant de novo by your Excellency. I submit for your Excellency's perusal a copy of the answer of Tujummool Hoosein Khan to the statement received in your letter; and, with a reference to the present and all such future complaints, I consider it to be my duty to remark, that the character and conduct of the Jagierdar, and the repeated admonitions which I conveyed to him, preclude the possibility of my belief, that either he, or any person under his authority, should at any time sanction or permit, far less support or encourage, opposition to your Excellency's will, or disputes with other subjects of your Government on the part of Zemindars in his jagier. But if your officers and subjects be disposed and encouraged to oppress the Zemindars of the jagier, and to prefer groundless complaints to your Excellency, I foresee much inconvenience and unpleasant discussion between us, which it will not be in my power nor the Jagierdar's to prevent.

Answer to Statement respecting the disputed Boundary of Hurdooee, in the Jagier of Tujummool Hoosein Khan, and Rampore Mohee-ood Deen, in Purgunnah Tholindee, belonging to the Khalsa.

Resident's Letter.

The ground in dispute belongs to Hurdooee and has no connection whatever with Tholindee. With regard to what is written in the statement, that in the fusly year 1192 the ordeal of lifting a red-hot ball was resorted to; that the hand of Gunga, Zemindar of Hurdooee, was burnt; and that, from that period till till the year 1209 fusly, the lands in question were considered as the property of the Zemindars of Rampore, &c. The case is this :

In the fusly year 1192, a dispute respecting the boundary took place between the parties, who referred their dispute to arbitration, and the arbitrators took a moochulka, or penal bond, from both parties to the following effect: that if either party should lift a red-hot ball, and thereby prove his right, the ground should be considered as his, and the moochulka should be delivered to him as a dustavez, or voucher, for his future possession. The red-hot ball was accordingly taken up by Gunga, Zemindar of Hurdooe, uncle to Heera Sing, the present Zemindar of that place, and thrown to the spot in dispute; and as he was not injured in the least by the red-hot ball, his right to the ground was established, the arbitrators set up boundary marks on the spot, and agreeably to the resolution they had formed, gave the moochulka to Gunga, Zemindar of Hurdooe. A copy of this document is enclosed for his Excellency the Vizier's information.

In the year 1211 fusly, the said Zemindars again excited disturbances, when the arbitrators re-assembled on the spot, and decided, that as Gunga Zemindar of Hurdooe, had in the fusly year 1192 taken up the red-hot ball, that ordeal should now be gone through by Golaub, the Zemindar of Rampore; to which Golaub at first gave his consent; but when the iron-smith had heated the ball Golaub refused to lift it; on which the arbitrators convinced Golaub of the injustice of his claim, and in order to quell the disturbance they gave about thirty begahs of land from the Zemindar of Hurdooe to the Zemindar of Rampore, on which spot pillars of demarkation were erected, remains of which are to be seen at this day. A copy of the moochulka of the parties which was given to the punchayet, and a copy of the final agreement, are enclosed for further information.

It is next alleged in the statement, that the Zemindars of Rampore wish to plough and cultivate their lands, which the Zemindars of Hurdooe prevent them from doing, and intend building a garden-house on the ground. This statement is entirely false and unfounded. The Zemindars of Hurdooe have no intention of erecting a garden-house, nor has a single person from the other party appeared as yet to cultivate the ground, which, owing to the wretched and ruinous condition of the Zemindars of Hurdooe, and to no other cause, has been lying waste for several years. Every person in the neighbourhood is well acquainted with the truth of what is here stated, and Heera Sing, the Zemindar of Hurdooe, is ready to undergo the ordeal again to establish his just right.

We, Gunga, Zemindar of Kusbah Hurdooe, and Hudae, Zemindar of Rampore, Purgunnah Tholindee, having formerly agreed to submit a dispute between us respecting the limits of our respective villages to arbitration by punchayet, and it having been determined by the arbitrators, with our mutual consent, that Gunga should establish the just boundary of Hurdooe by the ordeal of lifting a red-hot ball, after which a moochulka, under our joint signatures, fixing the boundary between us, should be given to Gunga, and remain for ever in his possession; therefore the dispute being now settled in the manner above described, and Gunga having submitted to the ordeal, this moochulka has been delivered to him accordingly.

1. In pursuance of the resolution announced to you in the concluding paragraph of my letter dated the 31st of August last, I have now the honour of transmitting to you the enclosed copies of letters which have passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, on the subject of the police of his metropolis, and of the character and proceedings of the courts of justice, as they are termed, which his Excellency has established in Lucknow.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 27th August 1811.)

I transmit, for your previous inspection, copies of a proclamation and orders which I propose issuing, with a view to the protection of the inhabitants of the city of Lucknow against robbery. Return the documents to me when you have perused them.

Proclamation.

This is to give notice, that no person residing in the city is hereafter unnecessarily to quit his house after the hour of twelve o'clock at night. If any person be obliged by indispensable business to be absent from home after that hour, he must be furnished with a light, such as a lamp or flambeau, and must be unarmed; and when challenged by the guards, who are appointed to patrol the streets during the night, he is to give a ready answer, and to state the reason of his being abroad. Any one who, after the above hour, shall be found in the streets with arms in his hands, without a light, and on being challenged shall not explain in a satisfactory manner the reason of his being from home, or shall prevaricate in his replies to the patrol, shall be immediately taken into custody.

Enclosure
in Vizier's Letter.

Orders addressed to Dhoomun Beg, Cutwal.

It being the constant object of my wishes and anxiety to secure to my subjects the protection and peaceable enjoyment of their lives and property, I have therefore, with a view of putting an effectual stop to the perpetration of robbery and murder in this city for the future, issued the following rules, which it will be your duty hereafter to observe. You must be peculiarly alert and vigilant, both night and day, and must take care that no inhabitant of the city sustain the least injury from robbers.

First. — Your deputy, attended by a guard, must patrol the streets of the city from twelve o'clock at night until morning, for the purpose of seizing thieves and protecting the citizens from being attacked by them.

Second. — The proclamation, a copy of which is enclosed, is to be pasted up in the most public places of the city for the period of three days, after which you are to direct your deputy to apprehend and lodge in the Chebootra for examination all persons who may be found strolling in the city after the hour of twelve o'clock at night, with arms in their hands, without a light, and who may refuse to assign the cause of their being from home, or may prevaricate in their answers to the patrol. If, on examination, they shall be found to be delinquents, the report concerning them is to specify whether or not they are servants of the Presence, — if not servants, on whom they depend. If nothing shall appear against them they are to be discharged.

Thirdly. — If any person shall be found with implements prepared for robbing or house-breaking, such as those used in mining, rope-ladders, nooses, or bunches of keys, and the like, or may be found in the act of mining, or placing ladders against the wall of a house, they are to be taken into custody immediately; but if those implements shall not be found in their possession, they are not to be confined.

Fourthly. — If any person be taken up for theft or robbery, or if any citizen shall inform against another as belonging to a party of thieves, you are to enquire of the informer the means by which he can establish his accusation; and and if the proofs shall appear to be satisfactory, you are to report the circumstances of the case and proceed as hereafter commanded.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
15 Nov. 1811.

Fifthly.—Every person seized for robbery, and against whom sufficient proof of the crime shall appear, is to be handed over to the Adawlut, to be dealt with according to law, as in cases of this nature the law alone is to have effect, and the Presence can take no cognizance of such cases.

Enclosure
in Vizier's Letter:

Sixthly.—In carrying into execution the foregoing orders the utmost caution must be observed, for the purpose of preventing bloodshed, in seizing the persons of robbers; but if a robber shall make use of arms in his defence, you are to employ the same means to apprehend him.

Seventhly.—All persons having empty houses to dispose of by hire must be prohibited from letting their houses without previous security, and being satisfied on all points regarding the persons who may wish to reside in them.

Eighthly.—Every person once tried and punished for robbery or theft, if seized and convicted again of a similar offence by the Adawlut, according to law, shall be branded in the face with a hot iron, and be banished from the city for life, the guards of the several entrances being strictly enjoined to prevent such persons from returning.

Ninthly.—The assembling of idle persons and people of bad and disorderly habits is to be prevented. Hircarrahs are to be employed to bring intelligence of such meetings, and on receiving such intelligence you are to send a person to cause them to disperse. You are likewise to summon all such disorderly persons before you, and take written securities for their future good behaviour, warning them that if found assembled again they will be taken into custody and punished. If, after such warning, they persist in disorderly conduct, you will furnish an account of them in writing, specifying whether they be servants or not, and on whom they are dependent if not servants.

Tenthly.—The foregoing instructions are all that seem necessary for the present. You shall hereafter receive such further commands as circumstances may require for your guidance.

Lucknow.

I have been favoured with your Excellency's letter, dated 4th of Shabaun (27th August), covering drafts of a proclamation and instructions addressed by your Excellency to the Cutwal of the city, with a view to the prevention of robbery.

Although, from the tenor of your Excellency's letter, it may be inferred, that by conveying to me the documents above-mentioned, your Excellency meant rather to apprise me of a determination already formed than to require my advice or concurrence in a measure that was merely contemplated, yet the security of the lives and property of so large a proportion of the people committed by Providence to your Excellency's charge, is a subject of too important a nature to admit of my silence on this occasion, consistently with the duty which I owe to your Excellency as well as to my employers; and, accordingly, I had fully resolved to submit my sentiments on this subject at considerable length, in answer to your Excellency's letter, but being prevented by your impatience for my reply, I shall postpone till a future opportunity the detail of the remarks which I have to offer, and I shall limit the present address to the following short observations.

During a period of more than four years in which I have had the honour of residing at your Excellency's Court, the instances of robbery and theft, attended frequently by murder, which have been daily brought to my notice, by the only report which I receive, namely, that of the Cutwal's principal Chebootra in this city, have been constantly a subject of my regret.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The measures which your Excellency has now been pleased to announce to me have already, if my memory serve me, been adopted, and proved by experience to be totally inadequate to their object, the protection of the city against robbery and murder as well as theft, which instead of having at all diminished during the period to which I refer, have appeared to me to increase in a great and alarming degree. Of the number of persons who have been plundered, it has never come to my knowledge that any individual has been redressed, by the restitution of the property stolen, or by the seizure and punishment of the offenders. I have myself repeatedly applied to your Excellency in behalf of English gentlemen and Natives, dependent on the British Government, residing in Lucknow or passing in the neighbourhood, who have been robbed, but my applications have been almost uniformly fruitless, and the evil against which I have remonstrated, namely, the total inattention of your Excellency's Government to the prevention of robbery and theft, or the detection and punishment of robbers, the most important of the duties of a sovereign, has been increasing in such a degree, as to excite my most serious concern, and to induce the resolution of submitting to your Excellency the absolute necessity of a reform in the police of this city at the earliest practicable period.

On the performance of this duty I was bent, when the arrival of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter to your Excellency, dated the 28th of December last, containing or referring to a more general and comprehensive system of reform for every department of your administration, commencing with the collection of your revenue, suspended the execution of my design, and by engaging apparently your Excellency's serious attention, afforded the happy presage of a complete and beneficial reform in every branch of your Government, including the department of police, which was intended, agreeably to my instructions, to have followed, and not to have preceded the satisfactory settlement of the revenue.

Your Excellency having now, however, of your own accord, and during the suspension of the other important and leading arrangements, turned your thoughts to the reform of the police and the prevention of disorders in the city, and having pressed me for a speedy answer to your letter, I shall only for the present observe, that the measures which your Excellency has described, though they appear to be for the most part unobjectionable, are, I fear, inadequate to the end. God grant that they succeed and promote your Excellency's reputation.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 16th Shabaun 1226, or 6th September 1811.)

I have received your letter of the 14th instant (4th September) in answer to my shookha of the 4th.

In reply to your observation, that in the long course of "more than four years," &c. the truth is, that thefts and robberies are not new occurrences: they were frequent before my accession to the musnud. It is evident that no regulations for the prevention of such evils were heretofore established, the observance of which, on my part, could have precluded robbery or theft, or the abolition of which by me could have revived the evils described.

With regard to your remark, that "it has never come to your knowledge " that restitution was made to the persons plundered of their property, or that " the plunderers had been seized and punished." The matter stands thus: Whenever information reaches me of any persons having been robbed, orders are issued, without waiting for the complaint of that person, to search for and produce the stolen goods, and to apprehend the thief. The property, if recovered, is, after ascertaining the owner, restored to him. The offenders are also prosecuted by those whose business it is to convict them, and the sentence of the the law, whether it be corporal punishment, fine, or imprisonment, is inflicted upon them. Agreeably to this practice, the property of several persons has been delivered over to you. It is, however, a custom among the people of this place to hide their wealth and effects, and then give out that they have been plundered.

As to the robberies committed on English gentlemen and their dependants, of which you take notice, I certainly return you answers corresponding to the state of circumstances which come to my knowledge relative to the plunder of their effects.

What may be the regulation in the British provinces for the recovery and restitution of stolen property, I am unable to assert or explain, for even there the declaration of the claimant, unsupported by credible testimony, is insufficient to procure him redress, and of this fact I have myself had experience. What country, indeed, is there, in which thefts and robberies do not occur? Though in my country an additional evil prevails, namely, that thousands of persons, through want of employment, are destitute of the means of subsistence, and it cannot, therefore, be a matter of surprise, that they should commit acts of the nature in question. The number of men that I employ merely for the protection of the city, is greater than has ever been employed at any former period of time, and to secure that object no means in my power have been neglected; but it is impossible for me, without legal conviction, to deprive any person of life or limb. What I had further to say to you on this subject, I communicated to you on Saturday, when we met, and it is of course still in your recollection.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 7th October 1811.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

In a letter which I addressed to your Excellency on the 14th of Shabaun (4th September last), I promised to submit to you, in detail, my sentiments on the important subject of the police of the metropolis of your dominions, and the protection and security of its inhabitants against the occurrence of robbery and theft. I now proceed to the performance of my promise, and I shall conclude my present address by replying to certain remarks which are conveyed by your Excellency's letter, under date the 16th of Shabaun (6th September).

The extraordinary frequency of robbery and theft in this city appears to me to be ascribable, of necessity, to some one, or to all of the following causes : The connivance of the Cutwal and officers of your Excellency's Adawlut with the perpetrators of those crimes, the neglect or incapacity of those officers, or their want of the necessary authority for prevention, detection, and punishment.

That most of the officers of your Excellency's courts of justice in this city are unworthy of the trusts which are reposed in them, and incapable of the discharge of their duties, I am fully warranted in inferring, from my personal observation and knowledge during a period of several years since the date of my arrival at Lucknow. It were improper without proof to assert, that they are equally corrupt as unworthy in the other respects which I have noticed; but that this is also the fact, is the universal belief of the people, or at least of those with whom I have conversed on the subject; and, indeed, when the salaries alone of your Excellency's judges are considered, namely, allowances of from fifty to one hundred rupees at the utmost per mensem, it is scarcely possible to suppose that the great ends of justice can be answered, or the duties of a magistrate be performed with integrity, by persons who are thus circumscribed, in the means of preserving their independence, or of supporting the dignity of their stations.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I shall here detail, for your Excellency's notice, what has gradually come to my knowledge regarding the character and conduct of your judges during the last four years.

At the commencement of this period, it would appear that a person of the name of Ab-oor Rehm presided over the Foujdaree Adawlut, and was shortly afterwards dismissed, for reasons which I cannot with accuracy describe, but under circumstances which gave cause for the belief of his conviction, in your Excellency's judgment, of some very heinous offence. He was succeeded in his office by a person named Obcid-oollah (more generally known as Nooroollah), who exercised the chief authority in the Foujdaree Adawlut for a considerable period of time. The oppression of this person over the lower orders, and indeed over all classes of your Excellency's subjects in the city, as described to me, had been boundless; and on this account, I suppose, as well as his notorious conviction of bribery, he too was dismissed from his office in the course of the present year. But whatever has been the cause of his removal, the infamy which followed that event is known to exceed all description. A multitude of unfortunate persons, from whom he had extorted large sums of money as bribes, assembled tumultuously at his gate, for the purpose of inducing him to refund the profits of his corruption as a magistrate, and he was treated in the manner which he deserved, and which can never be forgotten in this city, where it was witnessed by all the population. At length, after having satisfied some of the most pressing demands to a considerable amount, as I have heard, he was freed from the importunities and indignities of the mob, through the interference of your Excellency's son, Nusseer-ood-Dowlah, who placed him in a state of mild confinement for a time; and he has since been liberated, as I learn, through the intercession of your Excellency's servants (on what grounds or from what motives, I know not), while the persons, his accusers, whom his tyranny and oppression had ruined, have had no justice nor redress.

Saeed-ood-deen, who succeeded Nooroollah as chief judge of the Foujdaree Adawlut, is reported, and I believe the report, to be still more unworthy than his predecessor of the sacred and important trust which your Excellency has been pleased to commit to him. Independently of his incapacity, from a total ignorance of the law, he is asserted to be still more corrupt, and to carry the practice of bribery, and of levying contributions from both plaintiff and defendant in every cause, to a greater extent than any of his predecessors in office.

If such be the character and conduct, and such they are stated and believed, of the Moulvees of the criminal court, or Foujdaree Adawlut of Lucknow, what I have heard of the Dewanee Adawlut, or of your Excellency's civil court, yields in no respect to the former. It would occupy a volume, if detailed, but I shall not attempt a detail of it, and passing over the proceedings of that court in all other respects, I shall merely advert to the practice in every cause which comes before it, of altering and perverting the statements, not only of the contending parties, but also of the witnesses in the suit, and of exhibiting those garbled and fictitious statements, as the grounds of a legal decision, as contrary to law as to justice, and equally partial and corrupt. Of this deplorable practice I have myself had satisfactory proof on several occasions, in the course of trials in which subjects of the British Government have been parties (as in the cases of Moonshee Hussun Alee, of Moonshee Ameer Alee, and others), the proceedings in which were conducted by the officers of the Dewanee Adawlut.

Your Excellency will probably observe, that many of the circumstances which I have stated with a reference to both the Adawluts, being merely matters of hearsay, have no foundation in fact; yet I may be permitted to answer to this remark, that the general opinion and belief of a large portion of mankind cannot possibly be destitute of some foundation in truth, that I myself have had abundant proof of alterations being made in the written statements on both sides of a cause, and in taking down the testimony of witnesses; and that there is ample and just ground to infer, that persons in judicial situations, who have been guilty of this latter offence, would not hesitate to commit the most heinous and most aggravated crimes, of which a corrupt magistrate can be suspected.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

So much with regard to the proceedings of the courts of justice in this city; and now, with a reference to the police, or to the conduct of your Excellency's Cutwals, the following is a summary of facts which consist with my particular knowledge, and from which the inference is sufficiently clear.

Meer Behadur Alee, who held the office of Cutwal at the period of my arrival in Lucknow, having been for some reason displaced, Dhoomun Beg was appointed to succeed him, and to this person an extraordinary establishment was assigned, with the view, as was naturally supposed, of effectually guarding the city, and protecting its inhabitants against theft, robbery, and murder, the alarming frequency of which had apparently at that time engaged your Excellency's serious attention.

The total and notorious failure of Dhoomun Beg in the discharge of all the duties of his office, the increase instead of diminution of the evils, for the prevention of which, apparently, so large an establishment had been assigned to him, can scarcely require to be stated. Every month, every week, nay, every night of the year, I may say, has the house of some respectable inhabitant of this city, or some person whose supposed circumstances created temptation to thieves, been attacked and plundered by bands of robbers, who, without the smallest apprehension of consequences, proceed with torch lights in their hands through the streets, to execute their atrocious purposes; and after violently entering the houses, extorting by violence and fear a confession and exposure of property, not content with the plunder of the whole, which is carried off in triumph unmolested, they shut up the sufferers in their rooms and leave them to perish unheard, or, if heard, without hope of redress.

It is known to your Excellency, as well as to me, not only that the establishment of armed Peons under the authority of the Cutwal is sufficient to enable that officer to have ample guards in every street and corner of the town, for the protection of the inhabitants from robbery, but that numerous guards are actually posted by the Cutwal in every street and corner during the night, who might effectually preclude the perpetration of the crimes which I have stated. It is further the practice of the Cutwal, under your Excellency's orders, as I suppose, that on every occasion of a robbery, a particular and an accurate list of the articles stolen be demanded and delivered, under a penalty, by the person whose house has been plundered, with the avowed view of detection. Yet, under all these circumstances of apparent vigilance and precaution, it has never come to my knowledge, that the property of any person plundered has been restored, or that a robber has been detected and punished; and certainly, upon these grounds alone, there is obvious reason for inferring the most culpable neglect of the Cutwal, or his total incapacity for his office.

But let me inquire into the conduct of this officer, and the general management of the police, in another and more satisfactory manner. Who are the perpetrators of those crimes? Are they the inhabitants of your Excellency's capital, or marauders from the surrounding country? In the first case, as it is perfectly known that every street, nay every corner and alley, has not only its permanent guards, but Hurkarras and spies for Kote Gushtee to gain intelligence from every house in the town, it is certainly a matter of surprise, that no account can be had of those residentiary robbers and thieves who infest the peace of the city. In the second case, since it is fully established that no person, of whatever condition, respectability, or rank, can at any time have egress from the city without a passport from your Excellency's officers, nor can any person enter the town without being subjected to a minute and rigorous search, the ingress and egress of thieves, save by connivance of the Cutwal or his subordinates, are matters of still greater wonder.

Again, regarding the property stolen, let me inquire: Do the thieves hoard it up in their houses? That they do not is the most probable supposition; and, in this case, it unquestionably follows, that they dispose of their stolen goods in the the city, or carry them out of it to some other market for sale : yet the Cutwal, as I am credibly informed, by your Excellency's positive orders, has taken moochulkas, or penal bonds, from all the shopkeepers in the city, binding them not to purchase or sell goods of any description, including vessels and ornaments or trinkets of silver or gold, without first giving notice at the chebootra, as well of the article to be purchased or sold, as of the name and place of residence of the purchaser or vender : and under such circumstances, it is difficult to conceive how the thieves can dispose of their plunder in the city, without its being known to the Cutwal. But to carry it out of the city without his connivance and consent seems to me to be still more difficult, or indeed to be totally impossible, since we know, as already observed, that a written passport is indispensable, and that even a passport does not preclude the minutest search, by the guards, of every passenger at the gates of the city ; nay, that persons of the poorest class having a few rupees in their girdles, are daily seized by the guards and violently brought back to the Cutwal, to be punished or fined at his discretion. The inevitable conclusion from these facts is, that the Cutwal must be in league with the thieves, or must be totally unmindful of his duty, or that the necessary authority is wanting to put a stop to the depredations which prevail.

In the first and second of these cases, the Cutwal is obviously unworthy of the important trust that is reposed in him, and moreover is deserving of punishment. In the third case, if it be true, as I suppose, that authority alone is wanting to the Cutwal, the fault or defect is in the system, not with him, and he cannot be considered as responsible.

In reality, according to my judgment, the system of your Excellency's police is extremely defective and inefficient ; and the weak and partial improvements which your Excellency has now in contemplation, and which, if I mistake not, have already been attempted and have failed, are in my opinion very unlikely to have any beneficial effect. The measures which I should deem most effectual towards the prevention or diminution of robberies and other crimes in this city, and in your Excellency's dominions at large, are as follow.

That your Excellency should, in the first place, select men of strict honour and integrity, of respectable birth and education, learned and skilful in the law, expert and assiduous in business, to be the judges of the two courts of justice in your capital, with salaries suitable to their stations, established on the most liberal scale, and powers entirely independent, in the exercise of their judicial functions, of your Excellency and the ministers of your Government : with this exception alone, that their proceedings in criminal cases, with the sentence or legal decision, (pronounced without reference to your Excellency or your ministers,) be finally reported to the Presence, for the purpose of being carried into effect. That, in short, your Excellency's authority should never interfere nor be referred to, save in cases of resistance to the judges, and for the purpose of the execution of their decrees, and, above all, that the situations of the judges should be permanent ; that they should on no account be subject to removal without conviction of incapacity, or crime.

The Cutwal of the city, in like manner, should be a person of the strictest integrity, distinguished for activity and zeal, diligent in the discharge of his duties, and watchful to preserve the peace of the city and to protect the lives and property of the inhabitants.

Under the authority of such an officer as this, if he were vested with the necessary powers, the establishment already maintained of Peadas, Hirkarras, and Khakroubs, would be amply sufficient for the protection of the peaceful inhabitants of the city and the prevention or detection of crimes. The character, condition, and circumstances of every individual in the town might be easily made known to the Cutwal, through the medium of those Hirkarras and Khakroubs, without any oppression of the inhabitants by unnecessary intrusion into their houses. Regarding persons who have no employment or ostensible means of subsistence, a stricter inquiry might be made ; and the information thus obtained, and properly used by the Cutwal, would speedily tend to the decrease of every species of vice.

The

The authority of the Cutwal of the city should be immediately dependent on the judges of the Foujdaree Adawlut, to whom his proceedings should be reported, and under whose control he should be placed; and for the purpose of aiding the Cutwal in the general superintendence of the police of so extensive a city as Lucknow, it seems expedient that subordinate Cutwals be appointed and stationed in the principal quarters of the city, where guards are at present placed. Those subordinate officers also should, of course, be respectable in their characters, just and upright in their conduct, and experienced in the duties of the police. It should be the province of those subordinate officers to watch over the conduct of the inhabitants in the several departments under their charge; and in the case of any robbery being committed, and the thieves or robbers being found in their circles, to seize them without any delay.

Under arrangements of the nature described, improved by your Excellency's wisdom, there is every reason to expect that, in a limited period of time, the frequency of robbery and other crimes would be diminished, if they did not totally cease; and the merit of so important a reform would add greatly to your Excellency's reputation.

I now proceed to reply to some observations in your letter of the 16th Shabaun (6th September), as promised in the opening of this address.

And first, that "no system or regulation was formerly established for the prevention of the evils described," &c. (recapitulate the whole), is certainly true, as your Excellency remarks. Yet the general character of your Excellency's Government since your accession to the Musnud of Oude, and the ardour and diligence with which many other more favourite objects of your mind have been prosecuted and ultimately accomplished by new systems and regulations unknown in the time of your predecessor, render it a natural source of surprize and concern, that no system has been devised for the protection of the inhabitants of your capital against the frequency of robbery and other crimes.

Your Excellency has been pleased to remark, that "whenever intelligence is received," &c. (recapitulate). I too have been frequently informed of the measures adopted by your Cutwals, oppressive, in my judgment, in their execution, and by no means beneficial in their end, on occasions of the commission of robbery, with a view to discover the quality and extent of the property stolen from your subjects; but I have hitherto rarely heard an instance of the actual recovery of the property, or if recovered, of its restitution to the owner, and punishment inflicted on the offender: nor have I ever, on one occasion, been informed of the seizure of a robber in the act of house-breaking or theft, though the space of time which I have known to have been occupied in the act must have afforded ample opportunity for that purpose. A few instances of such meritorious conduct as this on the part of your Excellency's Cutwal, or his guards, would have an obvious tendency to check the extraordinary audacity of the thieves and robbers of Lucknow, and to diminish the frequency of their depredations.

With a reference to your Excellency's observation, "that it is the practice of the people of the city to conceal the property which they possess," &c. (recapitulate the whole). Two causes may be assigned for this practice; namely, first, a want of confidence in the Government, ascribable to various circumstances which I shall not on this occasion describe; and secondly, the natural dread occasioned by the frequency of robberies. Where confidence and security prevail there can be no occasion for concealment.

Your Excellency has further inquired, "in what country are the crimes of house-breaking and robbery unknown?" I am perfectly ready to acknowledge, that they are known in every country to a certain degree, and that the British dominions are not exempt from them; but your Excellency is doubtless aware that they are less frequent in most countries than in this, and particularly more frequent in Lucknow than in any other city in Hindoostan. You are further doubtless aware of the zeal and diligence of our magistrates to prevent the commission of those crimes, and to seize and bring to punishment the offenders, and that the diligence and success of your Excellency's officers in the execution of this

Consultations,

this duty bear no comparison with those of the magistrates in the Company's dominions.

Your Excellency remarks, "that this country is subject to another evil," &c. (recapitulate the sentence). The remedy for the evil described, with a reference to your Excellency's country, seems to me to be as fully in your power as in that of any other Government in the world, with a reference to the country which it governs; namely, to employ and provide for its subjects, who are worthy and capable of employment, and to punish or expel the unworthy.

Your Excellency has finally asserted, that "the number of persons whom you employ, exclusively, for the protection of the city, is more than was ever employed for this purpose during the government of any of your predecessors." To which I beg leave to reply, that the employment of a number of people, if it fail to answer the purpose through the inefficiency, negligence, or criminality of the persons who are so employed, is worse than the want of such people; and during the government of your Excellency's brother, the late Nawab Asuf-ood Dowlah, it consists with my own recollection, that the Cutwals and Aumils were made responsible for the property of all English gentlemen and other dependants of the British Government, which might be stolen from them in the city of Lucknow or its vicinity, and even in remote districts of the country, as well as in the several cantonments of British troops, and that the uniform or frequent restoration of such property, or its value, was thought highly creditable to the friendship of the late Vizier for the British Government and its officers.

In like manner, I am ready to admit that, on some occasions, since your Excellency's accession to the Musnud, and even since I have had the honour of residing at your court, nay at my own particular instance, the stolen property of English gentlemen has been recovered and restored, to the credit of your Excellency's friendship, which I have never failed on such occasions to acknowledge with becoming thankfulness and praise.

To conclude, the becoming attention which your Excellency has begun to afford to the improvement of the police of your dominions, and your steady persistence in that attention, must be highly gratifying to me, and satisfactory in the extreme to our Government, who are your Excellency's sincerest friends; and the ultimate accomplishment of this great and important object, if pursued as so happily begun, is as certain in my mind, as it will be honourable to your Excellency's reputation as a Prince who studies and labours for the comfort and happiness of his people.

Sir :

Bengal Political
Consultations,

from Resident at
Lucknow,

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, a translation of a letter which I received some time ago from his Excellency the Vizier, conveying a requisition for the employment of the British troops in his Excellency's district of Dureeabad, and a copy of a letter which I deemed it to be my duty to address to his Excellency on the subject of that requisition.

2. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in perusing this letter from the Vizier, will be pleased to bear in his mind the remarks which I took the liberty of submitting in my despatch of the 16th of July last, regarding the impression which was made on his Excellency's mind by the terms of the declaration conveyed to him in my letter of the 27th of June; and the substance and manner of the Vizier's requisition on this occasion will, I doubt not, serve to establish in his Lordship in Council's judgment, that my conception of his Excellency's sentiments was correct, and has been justified by his subsequent conduct.

3. In reality, the Vizier must have been aware that the sole object of the British Government, as explained to his Excellency by me, in its hesitation regarding the employment of our troops, or its eventual refusal to sanction military operations for the support of the authority of his Aumils, was a just and natural desire, proceeding on an unquestionable title, to be satisfied of the justice of the demands which our power might be required to enforce; and that the declaration in my letter of the 27th of June last was no more in its spirit, than the intimation of a firm and steady adherence, for the future, to the proposal originally conveyed, under the express instructions of the Government, for deputing an Ameen to investigate the causes of every disorder or resistance to the authority of Aumils, which our troops might be called upon to suppress; a proposal which his Excellency had hitherto uniformly resisted without any reasonable grounds, and to which it was thus declared to him that his future opposition would be vain.

4. Under the impression produced by the declaration as above described, and apparently distinguishing in his mind the case of a landholder resisting the oppressive demands of an Aumil from that of a rebel or criminal evading the punishment of his crimes, to the latter of which an unqualified right to demand the assistance of troops under the provisions of treaty was still supposed, and is readily admitted to apply, his Excellency, with his usual artfulness, required on the present occasion the employment of the Company's troops, not for the realization of his revenue, but for the punishment of an alleged offender against his laws, whom the Aumil was unable to bring to justice; while, on the other hand, the statement of the Aumil, on which his Excellency's requisition was founded, and my information through other channels, enabled me with certainty to refer the alleged disturbance in Dureeabad to an oppressive demand of the Aumil, and to the uniform mismanagement of that officer since the recent recall of our troops.

5. The instructions of the Government, therefore, under date the 2d August, which had already been long in my possession, and the execution of which had been deferred, partly in consequence of the Vizier's occasional indisposition, and chiefly by the hope of his acquiescence in the proposed system of reform, seemed to my judgment to apply with peculiar happiness and force to the case of the present requisition; and I deemed it to be my indispensable duty to take this opportunity of conveying to his Excellency the Vizier the declaration which is prescribed by those instructions.

6. The ultimate effect of this declaration remains yet to be seen. I have every reason to believe that it has made a considerable impression upon the mind of the Vizier, and will be productive of essential improvement in the general system of his administration, though its effect to induce his cordial acquiescence in the particular system of reform recommended by the British Government be still very uncertain.

7. The motive of his Excellency's requisition was considered at the time of my receiving it to be chiefly experimental, if not entirely a finesse, and subsequent information has confirmed that belief in my mind. The alleged commotion in Dureeabad was never of any consequence, and has been very easily suppressed by the employment of a portion of the Vizier's irregular troops in support of the authority of his Aumil.

8. A progressive augmentation of his Excellency's troops has been recently the subject of conversation among many of his subjects in this city, but it was solemnly and earnestly disavowed by his Excellency, when slightly hinted at by me on a very recent occasion, and I have not hitherto obtained satisfactory proof of the fact.

9. The Vizier's extraordinary delay in transmitting an answer to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, under date the 28th December 1810, on the important subject of reform, can be ascribed to no other cause than his utter inability to offer any reasonable pretext for declining to acquiesce in the beneficial system proposed to him, every solid, and even plausible, objection to which has been already stated and removed, in the course of my discussions with his Excellency.

I transmit for your information the enclosed copy of an arzee from Imam Bukhsh, the Aumil of Dureeabad, setting forth the refractory conduct of Aman Sing, and the murder of a Zemindar named Kullunder Bukhsh, with that of several other persons.

As Aman Sing has murdered a Zemindar and several other persons, I desire that you will direct the commanding officer of the station nearest to Dureeabad to adopt the necessary measures for the apprehension of Aman Sing, and the destruction of his fortress.

Enclosure in
the Vizier's Letter.

The Arzee of Imam Bukhsh. (Dated the 13th December 1811.)

I have already represented to the Presence the refractory and disobedient conduct of the Zemindars of the district under my charge, who, in consequence of the delay in punishing them, have daily become more hardened and bold. On the 11th instant, as Kullunder Bukhsh, with some of his labourers, were cutting down mote in the village of Deronee, Aman Sing, the Zemindar of Kyampore, with several armed followers surrounded Kullunder Bukhsh and killed him, with three other persons in his service. While they were conveying this intelligence to me, at the distance of three coss from the scene of the affray, Aman Sing with his followers effected their retreat to the ghurry of Kyampore, where he has collected a large body of armed men, and is at present residing. He has caused the Ryots of his Elaka to desert it. Such a proceeding on the part of Aman Sing tends to excite other Zemindars to act in the same way; and as I have not a sufficient force with me, I cannot bring them to a sense of their duty. I have, therefore, represented the circumstances of the case to your Excellency, in the hope of receiving assistance.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 15th January 1812.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter dated the 17th ultimo, containing a copy of an arzee from Imam Bukhsh, Aumil of Dureeabad, and requiring the employment of a portion of the British troops for the suppression of alleged disorders in that quarter.

My

My delay in replying to your Excellency's letter has been owing partly to a consideration of the impracticability of employing our troops, under any circumstances, during the progress of the relief of corps, which has only recently been completed, partly to the occupation of your Excellency's time and my own in the duties of hospitality to our guests and in preparations for the late festival and other entertainments, and chiefly, I will own to you with candour, to the considerations which are stated in the sequel.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

During the whole cold season of several succeeding years, and particularly during the last year, a considerable detachment of the Honourable Company's troops had been constantly employed in Dureeabad and the adjacent district of Rudowlee, in support of the authority of your Excellency's Aumils and for the enforcement of their demands against the Zemindars. That the whole of the districts in question were settled to your Excellency's satisfaction, and that every refractory landholder was reduced to submission or expelled at the close of the last season, is a fact impressed on my belief, and doubtless too on your Excellency's mind, by the statements of the commanding officers of the troops, and by my representations to your Excellency, founded on those statements, in my letters of the 27th of April, 22d of May, and 3d of June last. If such be the state of the case, to what cause have we now to ascribe the disaffection and revolt of the landholders, as represented by the Aumil of Dureeabad? If the representation of that Aumil be correct, can we ascribe it to any other cause than to his oppression, and the despair of the landholders of their ever obtaining redress from your Excellency's justice?

If the friendly and salutary advice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in his letter to your Excellency under date the 28th of December 1810; if my earnest, though respectful remonstrance, both by letters, and personally in your presence, had obtained that attention which they deserved, and had been followed by your Excellency's adoption of the system which his Lordship proposed to you, the beneficial effects of that system would long ere now have been seen, in the returning affection of your subjects, in their submission and attachment to your Government, and in the absence of even a disposition to revolt against the authority of your Aumils. I entreat your Excellency to reflect on the sole and obvious motive of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's remonstrance, as conveyed to you in the address which I have noticed, and of my repeated and urgent recommendation of the system which his Lordship's wisdom suggested for the future government of your dominions. Could they have any other motive, I will ask, than a regard for your Excellency's reputation, for the good order and happiness of your people, and the due realization of your revenue, combined with a natural desire to put a stop to the employment of our troops on services unnecessary and unworthy, the support of violence and oppression?

That this friendly and benevolent motive, if supported by your Excellency's concurrence in it and by your adoption of the system proposed, must long ere now have received its ample reward in the complete accomplishment of its object, without injury to your Excellency's rights or diminution of your power and authority, is an obvious and incontrovertible fact; and, consequently, your delay to give effect to that system, in disregard of my repeated advice, followed and aggravated, as the delay now is, by a demand of the employment of our troops on the bare representation of an Aumil, without previous investigation or inquiry, has been a cause of surprize and concern to me, which I can scarcely find language to describe.

It would seem that your Excellency has forgotten, or wilfully banished from your consideration, the whole of the salutary contents of the friendly letter of Lord Minto, of my respectful representations to your Excellency, and of our frequent personal and written discussions, during a period of several months, on the subject of the reform of your administration.

Is the fortress of Keeampore an ancient place of strength in the district of Dureeabad (a district so frequently, I may say, for a long period constantly, occupied by our troops), which has hitherto been concealed from the observance of your Excellency's Aumils and our officers, and has now suddenly come to light?

Letter

Or is it a fortress recently built, since the recall of the British detachment, with the connivance, or through the negligence of the Aumil, in direct disobedience of your Excellency's orders, and of your proclamation issued at my suggestion against the repair or re-building of forts? Or is it it merely the enclosed and partially fortified habitation of a Zemindar, who was formerly submissive to the Aumil, and has recently been compelled by oppression to take measures for his temporary protection against exorbitant demands, which can only be satisfied by his ruin, and whose ruin is, therefore, sought by the Aumil?

If the object of your Excellency's requisition, in the terms of your letter to me, be the seizure and punishment of a murderer, this service is not the duty of regular troops, nor is the performance of it practicable by their exertions. The apprehension of criminals and felons is the obvious duty of the police, of your Excellency's Cutwals and Thanadars, whose zealous exertions alone can be productive of the desired effect; for experience has repeatedly shewn to us, that the movement of a detachment of troops is the signal for the concealment of such persons, or their escape by such passes and routes as preclude their being followed by Sepoys. In this particular district of Dureeabad, an example of the truth of my remark has been very recently offered, and is doubtless in your Excellency's recollection. A compliance, therefore, with your Excellency's requisition, if the object be merely what is above supposed, would obviously prove totally useless: and, on the other hand, if the object be what is stated by the Aumil in his arzee, the support of his authority in the district at large, and the enforcement of his demands against the Zemindars, I leave it to your Excellency to judge on what possible pretext I can sanction the employment of the Company's troops in measures of coercion against the landholders, before I be satisfied of the justice of those measures, or on what grounds I can presume to disobey the express orders of the Government for my satisfying myself of the truth of the statements of your Excellency's Aumils. before I admit them as a plea for the necessity of military operations.

My letter of the 27th of June last to your Excellency's address, and the instructions of the Government, as well as the previous correspondence with your Excellency, on which the declaration in that letter proceeded, having engaged the serious consideration of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, I had long ago the honour of receiving his commands to submit to your Excellency a still more explicit declaration on the subject of that letter, in the hope of its impressing on your mind the manifest necessity of your acquiescence in the system of reform which was proposed to you; and your Excellency cannot fail to recollect the repeated intimations which I conveyed to you of my being charged with such a declaration, nor the causes that induced me to defer the communication until now. I am now compelled to submit it; and I shall do so in the terms of my instructions, recommending their important contents to your Excellency's most serious attention.

The principle of the declaration is this: that the Honourable Company's Government having undertaken, by the provisions of the treaty of 1801, to defend your Excellency's dominions against all foreign and domestic enemies, it follows as a necessary consequence of the above obligation, that the British Government must have a title not only to investigate, but to decide on the merits of all such claims and disputes between your Excellency's Government and its opponents, as may require for their adjustment the interposition of the British influence or power; because, otherwise, the engagement on the part of the Honourable Company to support your Excellency's Government would obviously imply an obligation for the enforcement of all claims and demands, without any reference to their justice; or, in other words, the enforcement of many claims and demands, of the absolute injustice of which the British Government might be satisfied.

The British Government has, therefore, an unquestionable right to investigate and to arbitrate all such claims and demands, on the part of your Excellency and your Aumils, as our troops may be required to support; and I have been commanded to intimate to your Excellency the final resolution of our Government to assert and to exercise this right, on every future occasion of a demand on

on the part of your Excellency for the aid of the British troops to support the authority of your Aumils, adjusting, on such occasions, with your Excellency, the manner of prosecuting an investigation of the justice of the Aumils' demands.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The instructions to this effect were received by me several months ago; but as they proceeded on a supposition that your Excellency should still refuse to acquiesce in the system of reform which was proposed to you, and as I had never hitherto relinquished the hope of your cordial acquiescence in that system, I delayed to communicate my instructions till your Excellency's unexpected requisition for the aid of our troops in support of the demands of an Aumil, unaccompanied by any manifestation of even a wish to reform the system of your Government, has now compelled me to execute the instructions with which I was furnished, for the purpose of meeting the exigency of your Excellency's continued refusal to acquiesce in any measures of reform.

I therefore declare to your Excellency, in the name of the British Government, its resolution, and the orders which I have received, to inquire into the nature and justice of the demands of your Excellency's Aumil of Dureeabad, before I can sanction the employment of the Honourable Company's troops in enforcing the payment of those demands; and, further, I solicit your Excellency to adjust, in concert with me, on the part of the British Government, the manner of prosecuting that inquiry.

I suggest, for your Excellency's consideration, the appointment of a trustworthy and intelligent person as an Ameen, whom I shall select for the purpose, to proceed to the district of Dureeabad, attended by a detachment of our troops to be formed from the corps at Secrota, to report on the state of the district, and to settle, under my instructions, to be prepared with your Excellency's concurrence, every question of revenue and dispute which may subsist between the Aumil and the landholders.

Under this arrangement, which it is my bounden duty to propose, if supported by your Excellency's approbation, I indulge a confident hope of the speedy restoration of tranquillity, and the satisfactory settlement of affairs in that portion of your Excellency's dominions, without the smallest occasion for bloodshed or for any warlike operations.

In submitting the above proposition, your Excellency will do me the justice to acknowledge, that I am guided solely and exclusively by the positive commands of the Government, which your unhappy and unexpected delay to acquiesce in the system proposed to you, or to reply to the Governor-General's letter, notwithstanding my repeated and earnest advice, has left me no alternative but to obey; while, at the same time, the proposition in itself, if duly considered by your Excellency, involves nothing but what is obviously just, and should be entirely satisfactory to your mind, or if unpleasant, can be easily obviated by your acquiescence in my friendly suggestions on the subject of the Governor-General's advice, as conveyed in his Lordship's letter.

I know nothing of the actual state of affairs in Dureeabad; but I presume that it must be considerably improved, from your Excellency's silence on the subject since the date of your letter to my address. Nevertheless, if your Excellency will declare from information subsequently received regarding the actual state of the district, that it is such as, in your opinion, to require the immediate presence of our troops to quell insurrection or rebellion, my disposition is so cordially bent on the satisfaction of your Excellency's mind and the preservation of peace in your dominions, that I am ready to order a force to proceed to the district in question, even before the appointment of an Ameen, or the adjustment of any plan for conducting the necessary inquiry into the cause of the disorders which prevail; and a force shall accordingly proceed to the frontier of the district of Dureeabad, for the purpose of suppressing those disorders, as soon as I shall be honoured with a communication of your Excellency's wishes on the subject.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch under date the 27th ultimo, and to signify to you the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council's high approbation of the whole tenour of the letter which you addressed to his Excellency the Vizier, under date the 15th of January, on the occasion of his demanding the aid of the British troops for the suppression of the disturbance in the district of Dureebad, and which appears to his Lordship in Council to have been framed with a peculiar degree of judgment and ability, and to have placed the relative rights and obligations of the British Government and his Excellency, with respect to the employment of our troops in the suppression of disturbances within his Excellency's dominions, and to the investigation and arbitration of the disputes in which such disturbances may have originated, in a just, precise, and forcible point of view.

2. His Lordship in Council admits the justice of the inferences which you have deduced from the conduct of the Vizier on this occasion, and is satisfied that the impression produced on his Excellency's mind, by the declarations which formed the subject of the remarks of the Vice-President in Council, contained in my despatch of the 6th July last, has been consistent with the intent of those declarations, as explained in your letter to my address of the 16th of that month.

3. You very properly took advantage of the occurrence reported in your despatch now acknowledged, to convey that explanation to the Vizier in the distinct and positive terms prescribed by the instructions of Government of the 2d of August. When the result of that communication shall have been reported by you, his Lordship in Council will be prepared to resume the consideration of the important subject of the reform of his Excellency's system of administration, and to issue such instructions for the further guidance of your conduct as circumstances may appear to require. In the mean time, I am directed to take this opportunity of signifying to you, that the Governor-General in Council, on a review of the reports of your negotiations with the Vizier on that subject, entirely concurs in the opinion already recorded by the Vice-President in Council, of the zeal and ability which you displayed in the course of your long and arduous discussions with his Excellency, and of the indefatigable exertions which you employed to accomplish the object of the orders of Government of the 28th of December 1810.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq. Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. His Excellency the Vizier having recently thought proper, without any previous intimation to me or communication with her Highness the Bhow Begum, to make a new arrangement for the superintendence of the Khoord muhl of Fyzabad, the management of which had hitherto been vested in her Highness, and the maintenance of its establishment provided for by a grant of territory to her Highness, under the guarantee of the British Government; and his Excellency having thought proper to combine with this apparent violation of her Highness the Begum's rights, an act of peculiar injustice and of indelicacy to the British Government, in the dismissal of the eunuch, Tuhseen Alee Khan, from an office which he had filled for more than thirty years with uniform fidelity and zeal, to the entire satisfaction of the parties concerned, and with the marked approbation of our Government, whose protection he has constantly enjoyed; I deemed it to be my positive duty, under the circumstances above stated and at the earnest requisition of the Begum, to remonstrate with his Excellency the Vizier on the impropriety of the measures described, and to recommend the suspension of those measures till a reference could be made on the subject to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council in terms of the Begum's desire.

2. I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for his Lordship in Council's consideration, copies and translations of letters which have passed upon this subject between his Excellency the Vizier and myself; and having no reason to expect that the Vizier will readily consent to comply with the Begum's desire, and reinstate Tuhseen Alee Khan in his office, or that her Highness will willingly acquiesce in the new arrangement which has been made, and the future exercise of which must depend on her payment of the stipends collected in the first instance by her officers who have charge of the revenue of the Jaidad, I shall of course be most anxious to receive a communication of the orders of the Government for the guidance of my conduct in the dilemma to be eventually created by the opposition of those high personages to each other.

3. His Lordship in Council will perceive, that my sentiments on the merits of this question are decidedly in favour of the Begum; and I am sorry to have occasion to add, that my opinion of the general conduct of the Vizier towards her Highness and the younger Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, as well as indeed to all the dependants of the British Government residing in this country, is extremely unfavourable to his Excellency, and such as, if concurred in by Government, would seem to me to authorize and require a more decided interposition of its influence for the protection of those individuals, than has ever been hitherto suggested since the conclusion of the treaty of 1801.

4. With a reference to either of the Begums, it is unnecessary in this despatch to offer any additional examples of the Vizier's injustice and inhumanity, which are established on the proceedings of the Government by many of my former reports. With regard to Hoosein Alee Khan, the much injured and indigent son of the late Ameer-ood-Dowlah, Hyder Beg Khan, his Excellency's manifest disregard of the earnest advice of the Government, conveyed in a direct address from the Honourable the Vice-President, General Hewett, to which no answer has hitherto been received, and his recent refusal to acquiesce in a proposal submitted by me for the temporary relief of this person by the sale of his father's houses and gardens in Lucknow, are instances worthy to be noticed of the Vizier's systematic inattention to the counsels of the British Government, on every occasion where inattention or resistance, on his part, can be expected to answer his views of vindictive resentment against those who appeal to our Government from his injustice.

5. A direct address to his Excellency from the Honourable the Vice-President in Council in behalf of the head Moonshee of this Residency, who has long been subjected to extraordinary oppression and violence by the Vizier's Aumils and Zemindars, and in whose favour my best exertions have been used, in pursuance of the orders of the Government, has been treated with equal inattention, and no answer to the Vice-President's letter has been received.

6. But, above all, to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's remonstrance on the important subject of reform, which is dated, and was presented above a year ago, and to my letter on the same subject under date the 15th of January last, his Excellency's total inattention, for a protracted period of time, is a proof of his sullen disregard to the counsels of the British Government, which supersedes any further illustration.

7. The subordinate points of complaint against his Excellency's Government and its officers, with a reference to the protection afforded to Budjha Sing and to other marauders in our dominions, and to acts of oppression against native officers and sepoy of our service, having lands or other possessions in this country, as well as against merchants and traders proceeding with their merchandize by water, who are subjected to the exaction of duties in direct violation of treaty, and in behalf of all whom my applications, frequently unsuccessful, extend to the number of three or four in a week, are by far too numerous and complicated to admit of a detail in this despatch, while many of them are of so serious a nature as, in my judgment, to authorize and require the severe animadversion of the Government, with the view of recalling the Vizier to a due sense of his engagements, and of preserving that just and necessary degree of influence over the affairs and Government of Oude, which it has ever been thought advisable to maintain.

A copy of the letter which I received the day before yesterday from her Highness the Begum, and sent immediately to your Excellency for perusal, is now submitted, with the view of soliciting your serious attention to its subject and contents.

Your Excellency cannot but be aware of the propriety, and even the necessity, in virtue of existing engagements, of your consulting the British Government in concerns of the present nature, and of obtaining the concurrence of that Government, before the adoption of measures which may effect in any degree the rights or interests of the Bhow Begum, the Begum Shums-oon-Nissa, or others, whose rights and persons are under the guarantee and protection of the Honourable Company.

Your Excellency's custom heretofore, with a reference to every important concern of your Government and even of your household, has been in strict conformity with this maxim. To impose a salutary restraint upon your sisters, whose conduct had given cause of offence during former Residencies and during mine, was considered by your Excellency as a measure requiring the friendly advice of the British Resident at your court, and the support of his sanction and concurrence to render it completely effectual. Under these circumstances, I leave it to your Excellency to judge with what degree of surprise and concern I have learned, through any other channel than a direct communication from yourself, your intention of operating a complete change in the management of the muhls at Fyzabad, in opposition to the will of her Highness the Begum, to whom a jaidad for the maintenance of those muhls was consigned, at the desire of the late Governor-General, Lord Teignmouth, entirely separate from your Excellency, and under the guarantee of the British Government, like the rest of her Highness's jagier. For this measure, in as far as I am hitherto informed, no reason whatever has been assigned; and her Highness the Begum having complained of it, as well as of some other innovations which are described in her letter to my address, and it being my duty, independently of her Highness's objections, to remonstrate against any change or innovation in the management of those muhls, as originally fixed and adjusted by the advice of the Governor-General, without his Lordship in Council's consent, I therefore submit to your Excellency my serious and earnest advice against the change which is now in contemplation, and against the removal of Tuhseen Alee Khan, than whom your Excellency has not a more faithful servant, from the nuzatut of the muhls of Fyzabad, without the previous consent and advice of the Begum and of the British Government.

The measure against which I remonstrate is, in my opinion, unwise in the extreme, as well as unjust, with a reference to Tuhseen; it will be productive of disturbance and great irregularity in the muhls, and in the end, I am satisfied, will prove injurious to the peace of your Excellency's mind. For these reasons, I recommend that the person recently deputed to superintend those muhls be recalled, and that the former incumbent be maintained, as heretofore, in the charge of that department.

From Her Highness the Bhow Begum. (Received the 28th March 1812.)

Bengal Political

Letter from
the Bhow Begum.

I have received an arzdasht from my son, Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan, stating that he had appointed Mohummud Nuseem Alee Khan, Khaja Serai, to the situation of Nazir of the muhls at Fyzabad, and requesting that I would issue orders to my officers to pay the stipends of the above muhls to that Khaja Serai, and take his receipt for the amount, that it might be distributed as heretofore. I send you a copy of the above arzdasht enclosed in this shookha for your information.

The concerns of the whole of the muhls have ever been under my direction and control, nor can any one else interfere in them. At the period when the Governor-General, Sir John Shore, visited Lucknow, and all other questions between me and my son were discussed, it was finally settled and agreed, that I should have full power and control over all the affairs of the khas muhls, the khoord muhl, and the two muhls of my deceased brothers, the Nabobs Mirza Alee Khan and Salar Jung Behadur; that the stipends of the muhls of my late brothers should be received from the treasury of my son and distributed through the medium of my servants, and that the stipends of the khas muhl and khoord muhl should be paid from my treasury directly to the persons entitled to receive them, and residing at Fyzabad. Accordingly, Mohummud Almass Alee Khan, in obedience to my orders, was used to receive the stipends of the first class from my son's Government, and to pay them to the muhls of my brothers; and Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan being of old the Nazir of the khoord muhl and a faithful slave of the Sircar, I consented, at the request of my son, that the stipends of the khoord muhl, which were payable from my treasury, should be distributed as formerly by Tuhseen, whose receipts should be given to my officers for the amount of them. Now my son, Saadut Alee Khan, without giving me previous notice of his intention or ascribing any fault to Tuhseen Alee Khan, has dismissed him from the office of Nazir, and appointed Nuseem Alee Khan in his room. This proceeding is contrary to established custom, and an infringement of my rights; besides which, the allowance of Bukhshee Begum, who is related to me and has recently come to me from Lucknow, has been stopped: and further, contrary to my wishes, a Khaja Serai, named Ekbal, who is totally unworthy of trust, has been placed over the muhls of my deceased brothers, to distribute the stipends to their families. Since it was determined, in the presence of the Governor-General, that the sole and exclusive control over the concerns of all those muhls should be vested entirely in me, why does my son, contrary to custom and agreement, interfere in these matters, and wantonly harass and distress my nearest and dearest relations?

It is proper that you state these circumstances fully to my son, and tell him that his reputation is concerned in attending to them. Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan has been employed in this office for upwards of forty years, and has discharged the trust with fidelity and zeal, let him therefore be reinstated in the situation of Nazir, to distribute the stipends of the khoord muhl; let the allowances of Bukhshee Begum be paid, and let Khaja Ekbal be dismissed. I shall send a proper Nazir and Mootsuddy of my own to receive the stipends of my brothers deceased from my son's treasury, and distribute the amount amongst the muhls.

If my son listen to your advice it is well; but otherwise, you will not fail to represent the whole of the circumstances, in my name, to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, who will, I trust, be pleased to adjust those matters in a proper and satisfactory manner.

Arzdasht from his Excellency the Vizier to the Begum of Fyzabad.

Enclosure.

I have appointed Mohummud Nuseem Alee Khan to the office of Nazir to the muhls at Fyzabad, and sent him with Toolseyram and Moulchund Mootsuddies. Your Highness will, therefore, be pleased to issue your orders to your officers to pay the stipends to the abovementioned Khaja Serai, and take his receipt for the amount, that he may distribute it as heretofore to the muhls.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 6th April 1812.)

I have received your letter of the 30th ultimo, with a copy of a letter from the Begum to your address.

What you have stated of the propriety and necessity of my consulting the British Government in affairs of importance is very correct; but, in the conduct of domestic concerns, it is unnecessary to ask the advice of the British Government at all times, and on every point which may occur, and therefore on the present occasion it was by no means necessary to do so.

Regarding your remark of my intention to cause a total change in the management of the muhls at Fyzabad, for whose maintenance a jaidad was consigned to the Bhow Begum, at the desire of the late Governor-General, Sir John Shore, exclusive of my authority and under the guarantee of the British Government, &c.

The state of the case is as follows :

When Sir John Shore was pleased to order it, I allotted a jaidad in jagier to my mother, the Begum of Fyzabad, and to my sister, the Bhabhee Begum; and as her Highness the elder Begum requested to have charge of the jaidad for the stipends of the muhls in question, and promised that she would merely collect the amount and send it to me for distribution, the jaidad was accordingly consigned to her on this particular condition. God be praised that I have not as yet made any changes in that arrangement, nor have I in any manner interfered with it, nor done any thing contrary to custom, by which either of the Begums could have been injured. The recent arrangement for the regular conduct of the muhls, and the appointment of a new Darogha, has been made after much consideration, and not until the ladies of the muhls had been loud in their complaints for four months, and had even come out of their houses, when at length I was induced, by a regard for my own honour and reputation, to adopt the measures which you describe.

But first I directed Tuhseen Alee Khan to represent to the Presence the means of preventing such proceedings in future; and the Khan gave no other advice, than to reprimand the ladies in such a manner as might prevent their doing so again. Consider that those ladies are all my mothers, what punishment, therefore, could I inflict? Should I send guns or battalions against them? And how could I reprimand them in the manner which was suggested by Tuhseen Alee Khan? The circumstances of their complaints must be known to you, who have a news-writer of your own at Fyzabad.

When affairs had come to such a pitch as to implicate my honour, and repeated representations were submitted to me by the ladies of those muhls, soliciting the removal of the Khan, I endeavoured to pacify them for a time; but as they refused to return to their houses till the Khan should be absolutely removed, I was compelled to dismiss him from that office: and in doing so I have not in the least acted contrary to treaty, because, according to the tenor of the treaty, I have full power and authority to act as I please in my household, being the sole heir and guardian of all my female relations.

I wrote to Darab Alee Khan on the subject of paying the amount of the stipends of the muhls to Nuseem Alee Khan, the newly appointed Darogha, and desired him to take that person's receipts, as was the custom, and that he would distribute the amount.

Darab Alee Khan, after representing this circumstance to the Begum, at first replied to the Presence, that agreeably to the orders received, he would pay the amount of the stipend to Nuseem, and take his receipt for the same.

But afterwards he stated to the Darogha, that the Begum had said it was proper, in affairs of such a nature as this, that I should address her Highness directly; and on my doing so, for what reason I know not, she sends no answer to my letter, but misrepresents the circumstances to you.

You state that, at all events, as the Begum has complained of this, and some other innovations which are described in her Highness's letter, &c.

The

The complaints, wishes, and requisitions of the Begum, with regard to the management and distribution of the stipends of the khoord muhl, are totally unnecessary, because, with the exception of the jaidad for the stipends being under her charge, she never had, nor has any thing to do, nor right to interfere in the management of those muhls, nor is it proper for her Highness to make any request on the subject; and as I have done nothing contrary to the treaty, there is no occasion to await the decision of the Governor-General on the question.

from the Vizier.

With a reference to the stipends of the muhls of Mirza Alee Khan and Salar Jung, and the allowance of Bukhshee Khanum, respecting all which her Highness has addressed you, the case is this: but a short period of time has elapsed, as you may recollect, since the affairs of the muhls of those personages were finally adjusted, and there is no necessity to recur to them. Bukhshee Khanum got permission from the Presence to go to Fyzabad only for six months, and as it is now upwards of nine months since she departed, her allowances have therefore been stopped; nevertheless, if she will promise to return within the year, at the desire of her Highness the Begum, her allowances shall be ordered to be paid.

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 9th April 1812.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter, dated the 6th instant, in answer to mine of the 30th ultimo.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The extreme difference of opinion subsisting between your Excellency and me on most questions affecting the interests of the two Begums, and on many questions having reference to other dependants of the British Government, has long been a subject of concern to me; more particularly as it appears of a nature which neither my repeated respectful remonstrances, nor your Excellency's arguments in reply, can have any effect to reconcile; and therefore it will now, I fear, become my duty to waive the further discussion of those questions with your Excellency, and to submit the whole of our correspondence regarding them to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, for his Lordship in Council's deliberation, and with the view of enabling him to take such measures for their final adjustment as the nature and circumstances of the case may appear to his wisdom to require.

On the present question, however, I shall submit a few observations, in reply to your Excellency's letter, in the hope of their engaging your attention, and thus superseding the necessity for a reference to his Lordship in Council.

And first, I submit to your Excellency, that the superintendence of the muhls of Fyzabad is by no means a trifling concern, but in my mind a most important arrangement; and further, that, in one important point of view, it has ever been of necessity considered as a matter unconnected with the department of your Excellency's household, and excluded entirely from your control.

Her Highness the Begum of Fyzabad and her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa, although your Excellency's mother and sister, and consequently in that point of view to be considered as branches of your household, have uniformly, since your Excellency's accession as well as before it, possessed independent privileges and rights, over which your Excellency's authority has never been asserted nor exercised.

The jagiers in possession of those personages were set apart at the period of your Excellency's accession, through the medium of the Governor-General's personal interference, at the desire of the two Begums, and under the guarantee of the British Government, whose interposition was thus rendered indispensable, and has been constantly applied and referred to, as well by your Excellency as by the Begums, on all occasions of importance; nor has any change nor innovation in that arrangement been ever attempted by your Excellency till the present instance, which is in my opinion improper, as being contrary to established usage, usage, and more particularly so with a reference to the high rank of her Highness the Begum of Fyzabad and the relation in which she stands to your Excellency.

Secondly.—In reply to your remark, that her Highness the elder Begum, in requesting to have charge of the jaidad for the khoord muhl, promised merely to collect the amount and send it to your Excellency for distribution; I submit, that while her Highness's request to Lord Teignmouth in the first instance, not to your Excellency, to have charge of the khoord muhl and its jaidad, appears upon record and is admitted, there is nothing like a promise of the nature stated by your Excellency to be traced in the proceedings of the Governor-General while at Lucknow, or on any subsequent occasion. Nor indeed, to my judgment, does it seem possible that any such promise could be made, because the request of a jaidad with this provision were in reality no more than a request of the tehsildaree of the district of Gonda, which, on the part of her Highness, is incredible, and would be disrespectful in the extreme to believe. In addition to which, it is established that not a single rupee of the revenue of the jaidad in question has ever yet been paid by the Begum, or demanded, or received by your Excellency, on any pretext whatever, since the date of your accession to the musnud: and, on the contrary, the stipends of both the Khoord and Khass muhls have been uniformly distributed under her Highness's authority and control; the former through the medium of Tuhseen Alee Khan, whose receipts are in the Begum's possession, and the latter through her own servants at Fyzabad, to the persons entitled to receive them: nay, further, and as an unquestionable proof of the authority possessed, and hitherto exercised, by the Begum, that on an occasion by no means remote the stipends of some members of the khass muhl were stopped by her Highness's orders, and after a long investigation by me, paid, through my intercession with the Begum, at your Excellency's particular desire.

Would your Excellency, in the first place, I will ask, have found it necessary to apply to me on the subject, if such a promise as that described had existed? and, in the second place, while referring repeatedly to me for the payment of the stipends in question, could you have omitted to urge such a promise as an argument against the Begum's proceedings?

In short, to establish the existence of such a promise as that which your Excellency has described on the part of her Highness the Begum, is to establish that her Highness has been hitherto, and is now merely the collector of the revenue of Gonda, and that the revenue of that district has been hitherto, and should now be regularly paid into your Excellency's treasury by her Highness; both which statements are obviously contrary to the truth.

Thirdly. With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that the loud complaints of the Begums induced your dismissal of Tuhseen, I am sorry to have occasion to observe, that the information which I have obtained on this point is directly opposite to your Excellency's statement. Since the death of the late Nawaub, Shoojah-ood-Dowlah, your Excellency's illustrious father, the Khoord muhl, comprizing all the ladies of his household, has been uniformly under the superintendence of Tuhseen, whose conduct in the discharge of this duty has been uniformly faithful and correct, such as to merit the constant approbation of the elder Begum and the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and to call forth the particular commendation of the Governor-General, Lord Teignmouth, on both occasions of his Lordship's visiting Lucknow. With regard to the ladies of the muhl, their repeated and numerous acknowledgments of the good conduct of Tehseen, and of his extraordinary kindness towards them during the whole of the period in question, a period of thirty-eight years, are sufficient to mark their approbation; and of those acknowledgments a number are now in my possession, under their seals.

The causes of their present apparent discontent, and of the clamour to which your Excellency has alluded, if my information be correct, are your Excellency's known displeasure with Tuhseen, of which the ladies have long been aware, and your recent deputation of Mirza Shoojaut Alee Khan to Fyzabad, for the express purpose, as many do not hesitate to affirm, of exciting complaints against the Nazir. But whatever may be the nature of those complaints, it was surely no more than justice to expect that some inquiry should have previously taken place, that some specific fault, or neglect, should first have been alleged and established, before so old and so faithful a servant as Tuhseen, whose fidelity and attachment to both Governments, and whose zealous and upright discharge of the duties of this office, for a period of nearly forty years, have so long been known and acknowledged, was dismissed from his station with disgrace.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

Your Excellency's sisters had been frequently clamorous before, and under circumstances similar to the present, referred by your Excellency to me; yet those circumstances were not thought sufficient to operate the dismissal of Tehseen, nor to sanction any serious charge against him.

Fourthly. In reply to your Excellency's observation, that those ladies are your mothers, and therefore not to be treated with any rigour, I submit, that no such measures of rigour as your Excellency has been pleased to describe, nor indeed any rigour whatever, could have been required on the present occasion. Such measures as were wisely adopted with a reference to your Excellency's sisters on the occasion of their coming out of their houses into the streets, during the Residency of the late Colonel Collins, and on a still more recent occasion of one of those ladies suddenly and improperly quitting Fyzabad, and residing, unnoticed by your Excellency, for a considerable time at Ishmael Gunge, would have been amply, nay, more than sufficient to appease any clamours in the Khoord muhl, and if such measures as those could have failed, my advice and assistance in support of them, which your Excellency solicited and applied with success on a former similar occasion, were alike at your command on the present, and could not but be attended with success.

Fifthly. To your Excellency's application of the terms of the treaty of 1798, as a vindication of every act and measure, having reference to the management of your household, I reply with submission, but with confidence, in the terms of my former remark, that the concerns of the Begum of Fyzabad, and the management of her jagier and jaidad, are expressly excluded, and necessarily to be considered as distinct, from the affairs of your Excellency's household; and, independently of this remark, that your Excellency's power and control over any branch of your household, under the terms of the treaty of 1798, cannot be more absolute in their nature than your obligation under that treaty itself, and the treaty of 1801, as well as the subsequent arrangement with Lord Wellesley, to consult with the British Government and to be guided by its counsels in every important concern of your administration, such as unquestionably, to my judgment, appear a revolution in the management of the khoord muhl, and the dismissal from office with disgrace of Tuhseen Alee Khan, an acknowledged protégé of the British Government for his faithful services to both States.

Having thus submitted a reply to every part of your Excellency's letter which appeared to require my attention, I can only again recommend your compliance with my earnest advice to restore the established order of things at Fyzabad, and to reinstate Tuhseen in his office, the duties of which can never be, in my opinion, so well discharged by the person whom your Excellency has now appointed to that station, nor by any other servant of your Government.

At all events my duty to your Excellency and to my employers has been fulfilled by bringing the question thus seriously under your review.

Letter
from the Begum.

From Shums-oon Nissa Begum. (Dated the 31st March 1812.)

I have repeatedly importuned you with representations of my grievances, which still remain unredressed, while the greatest distress and embarrassment pervade the affairs of my jagier. My numerous letters to you on subjects of the most trifling nature, connected with the Khalsa, which you refer to me, evince my regard to your representations and ready compliance with your requests; yet when I, as frequently happens, am compelled to complain to you of the unjustifiable and oppressive proceedings of the Khalsa Zemindars, no steps are taken to afford me the smallest satisfaction or redress. You are apprized of the nature and extent of the criminal conduct of Golab Sing, Zemindar of Darapore in the Elaka of Nawaub Gunge, belonging to my jagier, how he murdered Suda Sheo Sing, Havildar, ruined the weavers, whom he compelled to abandon their houses, cut off the hand of one person and carried away the planks and beams belonging to his house, and set fire to and destroyed several villages. My reiterated applications for redress against these acts of violence have been productive of no effect whatever. I have also frequently requested, that the dispute about the boundary of lands between Sheikh Musaoon and Moizuddeen, who is, at the same time, a Zemindar of mine and a Malgoozar of the Khalsa, might be adjusted; but the transfer of the Elaka of the latter to the former, serving only to exasperate the parties, is all the notice which my request on this subject has obtained. Gunga Pasee, inhabitant of my jagier, was taken into custody, and afterwards released. When this person was at first thrown into prison, I wrote to you, requesting that on his being liberated he might be sent to me, or delivered over to the Aumil of my Jagier; but, instead of a compliance with this wish, the pasee was given up to Kader Hoosein, Aumil of Sedhour, who has induced him to settle in the district under the latter, the consequence of which is, that the former entering the jagier, has demanded of the Zemindar of Yakoot Gunge the sum of two hundred and fifty rupees, the amount, he asserts, which it cost him to obtain his liberty, and threatens that if measures be not taken to satisfy this demand, he will effect the ruin of those persons. I leave you to judge how, under these circumstances, the affairs of the jagier can prosper. The fact is, that they daily grow worse and worse. What redress has been obtained against the encroachments and oppressions practised by Bence Pershaud, Durogha of the customs in the bazar belonging to me? All the people of it have been seized and carried elsewhere, and it is now, to all intents and purposes, destroyed and deserted. I have from time to time given you intelligence of these proceedings, but my representations have been disregarded, and the object of them unredressed. Certain allowances formerly made to me for candles and lamps, for bearers attached to the palkee-khana for grass and grain for the garden, bullocks, and eunuchs' house, for medicine, for repairs of buildings, and for carpets and floor-cloths, have been discontinued, and are not yet restored; but notwithstanding the scantiness of my income, I have submitted to all those deductions. The seeds of the decline of my jagier have been now for some time sown, and any neglect or delay on your part to apply a remedy for the evil will prove the entire ruin of the jagier, and ultimately the destruction of me. I mention these matters, however, not with the intention of giving you further trouble for the adjustment of my affairs, nor in the hope of their adjustment through your means; I design merely to apprise you, that it is at length become utterly impossible for me to live in this city under my present afflictions, with the daily prospect of fresh injuries, and being certain that, as long as I stay here, I shall obtain no redress, though I be sensible that you feel for my situation, and have used your best exertions for my relief, I am satisfied that it can be no longer necessary nor proper for me to continue in this city.

The

The revenue of my jagier and of my bazar, together with the allowance for my table, may doubtless, through your good offices, be sent to me in whatever city I may reside; I therefore solemnly and earnestly request that you no longer resist my resolution to depart, but facilitate it by every means in your power. Should you evade this requisition, yielding to my urgent necessities, I shall quit the city at once without any further communications to you; for I will, on no account, consent to remain any longer under the pressure of the grievances which I feel.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 1st April 1812.)

I have already, at various times, both spoken and written to your Excellency on a number of points regarding her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa, and I have even explained to your Excellency the nature of my instructions from Government on the subject of her Highness's concerns.

Your Excellency, notwithstanding my exhortations, having hitherto neglected the adoption of any measure in the least calculated to sooth or conciliate her Highness, and her Highness, in the extremity to which this neglect has reduced her, having addressed another and a still stronger letter to me, on the subject of her numerous grievances, I transmit for your Excellency's information a copy of the letter which I have received.

My opinion and advice on the general subject of her Highness and the affairs of her jagier, as submitted on a recent occasion, must be fresh in your Excellency's memory. The best consequence must have resulted from your Excellency's adoption of that advice when it was given; and even now, if it be followed, all may be well. But if the aggravated state of her Highness's feelings should, as a last resource, impel her to leave the city, and your Excellency should seek my advice or assistance on such a critical occasion as that, you will then, I trust, be pleased to recollect, that I suggested the means of avoiding it and that your Excellency disregarded my suggestion.

Concerning the seizure of Peera (who is charged with murder), so often mentioned to me by your Excellency, I renewed my applications to her Highness, who informs me that she has written in strong terms to the Aumil of the jagier on that point. I have every reason to rely on her Highness's performance of her promise, and her causing the accused to be apprehended and delivering him over to me.

1. In continuation of the subject of my dispatch under date the 15th instant, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the further notice of the Government, the enclosed translation of a letter more recently received from the Vizier and a copy of my reply to that letter.

2. In the concluding paragraphs of both these documents, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will be pleased to observe, that a prospect of an amicable adjustment of the dispute between his Excellency the Vizier and his mother, regarding the superintendence of the khoord muhl of Fyzabad, has been afforded by his Excellency's conditional promise of reinstating Tulseen Alee Khan in the office from which he was unjustly removed.

3. Yet still there is reason to apprehend that his Excellency will find some pretext for evading the promise that he has made, through the intrigues of his brother, Mirza Shoojaut Alee Khan and others deputed to Fyzabad, for the purpose purpose of exciting clamours and groundless complaints in the muhl against the conduct of Tuhseen and his agents; and in the contemplation of this event, as well as with a reference to the general question of innovations by his Excellency the Vizier in arrangements which have obtained the sanction of the British Government, without its concurrence or advice, I shall still be desirous of a communication of the sentiments and commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, on the subject of that portion of my despatch of the 15th instant which regards the superintendence of the khoord muhl.

from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 15th April 1812.)

I have perused your letter of the 9th, in reply to mine of the 6th instant, (22d Rubbee-ool-awul.)

You observe that the difference of opinion subsisting between us "on most questions affecting the interests of the two Begums, and in many questions, having reference to other dependants of the British Government, has long been a subject of concern to you," &c. &c. (to the end of the paragraph.)

In the course of the disputes which may arise between the Begum and me, your duty is to transmit to the Begum such statements as I may have to make to her and to communicate to me her sentiments in return, and after receiving my subsequent observations on the matter in question, to reflect on the whole with attention, and on whichever side the right may be, to reconcile the other party to it, but not, on any occasion, to argue with the Presence on the part, or in behalf, of the Begum: and as you are the channel of friendship between the British Government and me, you are at liberty, if you judge it advisable and proper, to transmit to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council copies of the whole of the letters which have passed between us on the subject.

You next observe, that the superintendence of the muhls at Fyzabad is by no means a trifling concern, but in your mind a most important arrangement: and farther, that in one important point of view it has ever been of necessity considered as a matter unconnected with the department of my household, and excluded from my control.

To the arrangement effected under the guarantee of the British Government I have never objected, nor do I now object. From that Government I have always hoped for, and do now expect, the daily increase of my dignity, authority, control, and power, instead of their decline and diminution. Should my power, control, and hereditary rights, with a reference to the Begums, suffer any injury or diminution (which God forbid), I shall communicate through you to the Right Honourable the Governor-General the steps which, in such a case, I may deem it advisable to take for my own sake. But the discussion of such subjects as this is extremely unpleasant to me. In questions regarding the jagiers settled on the Begums, where any evil may exist, or in any instance of palpable injustice towards them on my part, the guarantee of the British Government is undoubtedly binding and specific; but it cannot circumscribe or render nugatory my hereditary rights and authority over my own household, no more than it can annul that affinity by which I stand in the relation of son to one of the Begums, and of brother towards the other, neither of which relations have I acted contrary to, in any manner whatever.

You further state, that "while her Highness's request to Lord Teignmouth in the first instance, not to me, to have charge of the khoord muhl and its jaidad, appear upon record and is admitted, there is nothing like a promise of the nature stated by me to be traced in the proceedings of the Governor-General while at Lucknow, or on any other subsequent occasion," &c. &c. (to the end of the paragraph.)

However true it may be, that her Highness made a request of the jaidad from Lord Teignmouth, for the use of the ladies of the khoord muhl, still as Mohummud Tuhseen is my slave, and as her Highness, about the period of the dethronement of Vizier Alee, was in a high degree angry and dissatisfied with him, of which you are aware, and Tuhseen himself must have a full recollection, it follows that her Highness's giving the pay of the ladies of the muhl to him, on his receipt, was the same as sending the revenue of the jaidad to me. But, with regard to the increase or diminution of the money disbursed, it never was, nor is it included in the authority exercised by her Highness over the khoord muhl. It is true that the jaidad and the collection of it are vested in her Highness, and to her also undoubtedly belongs the distribution of the stipends of the khass muhl; but the mode of distribution of the allowance for the khoord muhl depends on me, and her Highness has nothing to do with it. I have at present no recollection relative to the payment of any portion of the stipends of the khass muhl through you. Be that as it may, the amount in cash of the stipends of the khoord muhl has merely been furnished by her Highness, and the distribution of it, and whatever else is connected with it, has always been subject to my control, and on this point not a word of difference has ever passed between her Highness and me. If you contend that the ladies of the muhl have been subjected to the authority of her Highness, God only knows what disturbance might be created by such intelligence reaching the ladies of the muhl, and by what means they could be pacified. The degree of authority which I possess over even her Highness the Begum's concerns will be demonstrated by what follows.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from the Vizier.

The Most Noble Marquess Wellesley, in the paper of agreement settled between his Lordship and me, on the subject of establishing courts of justice, declared that it was highly proper that the Adawlut should extend to Fyzabad, for the determination of disputes within the jagier of her Highness the Begum, and that it should be placed under my control; and also that it was necessary that her Highness's officers should conform to my orders, and that the British Government would afford every assistance in promoting the administration of justice and supporting the authority of those courts. Further, when her Highness the younger Begum designed to leave Lucknow, the Right Honourable the Governor-General expressly stated to her Highness that I was her heir and her guardian, and that it would be improper for her to depart without obtaining my permission and concurrence. Thus my hereditary rights over those ladies appear to be clear and obvious.

It is true that you are frequently the channel of communication between me and her Highness the Begum, but there are also various subjects on which letters have passed between us without any reference to you.

You observe, with a reference to my remark that "the loud complaints of the Begums induced my mission of Tuhseen, &c. &c." (to the end.)

The real matter of fact is this: I never, directly or indirectly, signified to the ladies of the muhl that they should conduct themselves so as that it might appear that they were dissatisfied with Tuhseen Alee Khan. Their own letter, under their seals, is forthcoming, and will fully prove their displeasure against Tuhseen. It is no affair of mine. In their letter they expressly state their refusal to submit to the superintendence of Tuhseen or his people, and declare their willingness to be superintended by Hoshmund Alee Khan and his people: they even go so far as to desire that the Akhbar Nuvees of the former be displaced. As to the report of my displeasure with Tuhseen, and of its having reached the Begums, as mentioned by you, I am not aware of any expression of displeasure made use of by me, the intelligence of which could have reached the ladies. Tuhseen has been ill, and I have neglected none of the observances of condolence on the occasion, inquiring after the state of his health and urgent for medical attendance. But the truth is, that after the removal of Behrooz, in whose place I had ordered Tuhseen to appoint Jowahir, and before Jowahir had taken charge, the ladies of the muhl, quitting their residence, exposed themselves abroad and committed disturbance. It was after the date of this occurrence that Mirza Shoojaut Alee Khan went to Fyzabad to see his mother. You must know the date of his departure: the Akhbar Nuvees, whom you employ at Fyzabad can inform you of it. Hence it follows, that the surmises of people relating to this person's journey, are wholly void of truth.

Letter
from the Vizier.

On the subject of your observation, "In reply to my remark that those ladies " are my mothers, and therefore not to be treated with any rigour, &c. &c." (to the end.)

The ladies of the muhl absolutely quitted their houses, and were preparing to proceed to Golaubbaree and thence to Lucknow. The occurrence of an event of this nature, big with dishonour, and aggravated by their coming to Lucknow, had I winked at it, would have led to the same conduct on the part of those ladies as that of my sister to whom you allude.

Consider this, and say what could then be done? My sisters, on the former occasion, made use of the worst language towards me, and of imprecations indecorous and unbecoming. Their bad conduct gave me infinite pain, and compelled me to quit my usual place of residence and to retire to a distance. You heard with your own ears all that passed, yet no effectual measure was suggested on that occasion.

You observe that my " application of the terms of the treaty of 1798, as a " vindication of every act and measure," &c. &c. (to the end.)

The fact is this: The affairs of my household are distinct from the duties and obligations of my Government, and my right to control the affairs of such relations as my mother and sister, &c. are totally unconnected with, and independent of, my duties and obligations as a prince. The obligation to ask advice can therefore never do away my absolute control and authority over every branch of my household.

You observe, " at all events," &c. (to the end.)

Tuhseen is an old servant, reared up in my family: he is my slave: he still holds employments under me, and possesses a jagier from my bounty. He neither has, nor ever had, any dependence on, nor connection, with her Highness the Begum. I desired him to suggest to me some new and effectual arrangement for the good order of the muhls, and as he failed to do so, I removed him from the superintendence, and appointed another person in his place. Even now, if he will offer any satisfactory suggestion on the subject, and the ladies of the muhls approve of his being set over them, I will reinstate him in the office.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 17th April 1812.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter, dated the 15th instant, in reply to mine of the 9th.

As there does not appear, to my judgment, to be any argument contained in your Excellency's letter, which I have attentively perused, that should alter my opinion already submitted to you, and as the protracted discussion of such questions as this, without the hope of conviction to either party, is at the least as disagreeable to me as it can be to your Excellency, I shall decline replying to most of the remarks which are contained in your letter before me, and shall merely submit to your notice a few observations which the perusal of your letter has suggested to me, as being necessary on the present occasion.

And first, I submit to your Excellency, that in all disputes and discussions between you and her Highness the Begum, which may be referred by either party to the Resident at your Excellency's court, that officer must, in virtue of his office and of the high authority of the British Government which he represents, have an unquestionable right, not only to argue the matter in dispute with either or both of the high personages concerned in it, but to persist in the argument with either in behalf of the other, so long as a hope of conviction may remain, to the end of obtaining justice towards the party whom he considers as aggrieved; and, consequently, that your Excellency's denial of my title to intercede cede for her Highness the Begum with you is, in my judgment, totally inadmissible. That the failure of my mediation and arguments may authorize, or rather that it must inevitably require, a reference on my part to the Government, and a transmission of the correspondence on the subject, is a deduction sufficiently clear.

Secondly.—With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that "when her Highness the younger Begum announced her intention of quitting Lucknow, &c." I submit that the true state of the case is as follows:

Her Highness's intention, and the causes of it, having first been communicated to me, I represented to your Excellency the propriety of endeavouring to conciliate her mind by offices of kindness and consideration, with the view of inducing her to suspend her design of retiring from your Excellency's capital; and my exhortations on that occasion appearing to have had their due influence over your Excellency, who assured me of your readiness to do every thing in your power, at my suggestion, to satisfy her Highness's mind. I submitted those assurances, with my own implicit reliance on their sincerity, to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whose letter to her Highness the Begum was, of course, conceived in the terms which existing circumstances suggested for the accomplishment of your Excellency's views. But I am sorry to have occasion to remark, that your Excellency's subsequent conduct to the Begum has by no means corresponded with the assurances which I received from you on that occasion; and, further, that the inference which your Excellency has now been pleased to deduce, with a reference to the two Begums, from the terms of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, is such as could never till this moment have entered into his Lordship's contemplation nor mine, namely, that by an acknowledgment of your Excellency's right of inheritance and guardianship over her Highness, your authority and power to infringe every one of her just rights, to adopt every possible measure of rigour and unkindness towards her, should be established, to the utter exclusion of even a right of mediation or intercession, on the part of the British Government, the true friend and well-wisher, the acknowledged protector and guardian of the rights and interests of both. But to put the question entirely out of doubt, I have, since the date of the letter referred to, been furnished, as your Excellency knows, with more recent instructions from the Government, perfectly consistent with the former, though framed under opposite circumstances, namely, a conviction of your Excellency's continued unkindness to the Begum, and of the impossibility of her residing in your capital without a total sacrifice of her comfort, unless your Excellency's conduct shall be changed.

Thirdly.—With a reference to the concluding remark in your Excellency's letter, which regards the character and conduct of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and announces your favourable disposition towards him, I am happy to be enabled to submit my entire and cordial concurrence in the sentiments which your Excellency has expressed. I am satisfied that your Excellency's returning kindness is the only support required to enable Tuhseen Alee Khan to discharge with fidelity, ability, and zeal, for the future, those duties which he has hitherto performed, to the entire satisfaction of all parties concerned, during a period of more than thirty years; and, under this conviction, I propose, with your Excellency's concurrence, to apprize him of your favourable intentions, and desire him to suggest a mode of carrying them into complete effect.

Letter
from Secretary to
Government.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches, under dates the 15th, 20th, and 24th ultimo, and to convey to you the following communications and instructions in reply.

2. The systematic opposition of his Excellency the Vizier to every representation made to him on the part of the British Government, has appeared to Government to require that the influence of your representative character should be supported by a letter of remonstrance on the part of the Right Honourable the Governor-General to the address of his Excellency, embracing not merely the primary subjects of your despatches now acknowledged, but generally all depending points of negotiation between the two States. An English copy of that letter is enclosed for your information and guidance. The original will be transmitted to you from the Persian Office as soon as it can be prepared.

3. Among the points above alluded to, the negotiation which took place during the last year, on the subject of a reform of his Excellency's administration, is the most prominent. His Excellency's omitting to return any reply to the Governor-General's letter on that subject, of the 28th of December 1810, although near six months have elapsed since his Lordship's arrival at the Presidency, and his evident resolution to avoid, if possible, a re-agitation of that question, clearly demonstrate his Excellency's fixed disinclination to accede to the wishes and advice of this Government, and to the obligations of treaty in this respect. The former of these omissions has appeared to the Governor-General in Council to demand particular animadversion : you will accordingly observe, that this topic has been noticed in suitable terms in the Governor-General's address to the Vizier, and also that his Lordship has adopted the principles of the instructions conveyed to you in my letter of the 2d of August, and acted upon by your letter to his Excellency the Vizier of the 15th of January; and it is only necessary to desire, that you will pursue the object of those instructions under the support now afforded by the Governor-General's letter.

4. In the same manner, you will renew your representations on the subjects of the Vice-President's addresses to the Vizier of the 29th of March and 12th of July, which are also particularly noticed in the Governor-General's present letter to his Excellency.

5. His Lordship in Council entirely approves the tenor of your representations to the Vizier, respecting his unwarrantable encroachments on the guaranteed rights of her Highness the Bhow Begum. The Governor-General has judged it necessary to enter into some detail of discussion on that subject, in his letter to the Vizier, with a view to demonstrate the injustice of his Excellency's proceedings, and to manifest the determination of this Government to fulfil the obligation of its guarantee on the present and on every future occasion.

6. The tenor of the enclosed document, and your intimate knowledge of every subject to which it relates, precludes the necessity of any other instruction, than to desire that, as opportunity offers and occasions require, you will resume, and endeavour to bring to a satisfactory conclusion, the numerous depending questions between the two Governments, regulating your representations to the Vizier by the spirit of the enclosed document; and the Governor-General in Council is willing to hope that, under the conviction which his Lordship's letter is calculated to bring to the mind of the Vizier, that Government is resolved to urge, with perseverance and solicitude, the just demands which have hitherto been preferred in vain; and under the aid which you may be expected to derive from this direct and visible support on the part of this Government, your efforts will prove successful.

Letter from
Governor-General.

Among the numerous objects connected with events and transactions in India during the period of my absence from the Presidency, which engaged my attention on my return, none has appeared to me of greater interest and importance than those which have formed the subjects of negotiation between your Excellency and the British Government. I have, therefore, devoted as much time as the general concerns of this Government would admit, to the perusal of all the Resident's reports of his proceedings, and his communications and correspondence with your Excellency, on points which, both before my departure and during my absence, were entrusted to his negotiation. I have perused, also, the various letters addressed to your Excellency, and the orders and instructions occasionally issued to the Resident by his Excellency the Vice-President; and those letters, orders, and instructions, are precisely such as I should myself have deemed it my duty to transmit on the subjects to which they respectively relate.

I naturally expected, as soon after my arrival at the Presidency as might be practicable, to receive from your Excellency a reply to the letter which I had the honour of addressing to you, under date the 28th of December 1810, on the important question of a reform in the administration of your Excellency's Government, your Excellency not having judged it expedient to reply to it in the form of a letter to the address of the Vice-President, under whose superintendence and directions Major Baillie's negotiation on the subject of it were conducted.

Neither has your Excellency thought proper to reply to the letters of the Vice-President of the 29th March and 12th of July; the former urging the interposition of your Excellency's authority for the satisfaction of the just claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan; the latter urging your Excellency, on grounds of incontrovertible justice, to restore to the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan, in the person of his son Hoosein Alee Khan, the provision granted to it, at the instance of Marquis Cornwallis, but discontinued since your Excellency's accession to the masnad.

Neither has your Excellency supplied the defect of replies to any of those addresses by a favourable attention to the urgent representations which they contain.

Near six months have elapsed since my return, during which period I have waited in vain for some communication from your Excellency on the several subjects to which my own letters and those of the Vice-President relate. I am, therefore, under the necessity of troubling your Excellency by a renewal of the correspondence on these important subjects, as well as by adverting to others which have been agitated between your Excellency and the Resident.

The perusal of the correspondence between your Excellency and the Resident, and the latter's reports of his communications with your Excellency on the momentous question of reform, excited equally my astonishment and concern. In urging the adoption of that most necessary reform, I exercised a right derived from the specific provisions of existing engagements; nay, I fulfilled a positive obligation imposed upon this Government by an express article of the treaty of 1801. I discharged a duty imperiously pressed upon me, by painfully witnessing the perpetual demand for the employment of the British troops in suppressing disorders occasioned by the injustice or rapacity of your Excellency's Amils.

A stronger claim on the part of this Government to expect a compliance with its recommendation, a more forcible obligation on the part of your Excellency to afford it, could not possibly exist. But I have had the mortification to find, that although your Excellency fully admitted the right and the duty of this Government to urge the reform of your administration, and the absolute necessity of carrying it into effect, although you concurred in the general principles of the plan submitted to your consideration in my letter of the 28th December 1810, and finally, (after a long and arduous negotiation, in the course of which I could not fail to perceive a manifest disposition to render abortive every project of reform,) acceded to a specific plan of arrangement, your Excellency refused to abide by your own written and positive assent; and this great and beneficial object, object, pursued with so much solicitude on the part of this Government, with such laborious exertion on the part of the Resident, and with such anxious and apparently successful efforts to remove every objection which had been urged by your Excellency against the system of arrangement recommended to your adoption, yet remains unaccomplished.

I am warranted in ascribing to your Excellency, a decided disinclination to the introduction of any effectual reform, not only by the nature of the discussions between your Excellency and the Resident during the course of the negotiation, but also by the circumstances of your having systematically avoided the renewal of that negotiation, and of your having omitted to reply to my letter of the 28th December 1810, either in an address to the Vice-President during my absence, or to me since my return.

Under any circumstances, however, it is my indispensable duty to exercise the right described to your Excellency by the Resident, in his letter to your address of the 15th January: the right, I mean, of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands, on the part of your Excellency and your Aumils, as the British troops may be required to support; and it is my duty to claim your Excellency's concurrence in such an arrangement as shall facilitate and secure the efficient exercise of this right on every occasion. On this subject I have accordingly issued instructions to the Resident, to whose communications I have the honour to refer you for further particulars.

It is further incumbent on me to resume the subjects of those addresses of his Excellency the Vice-President, which have obtained from your Excellency neither reply nor regard.

It may not have occurred to your Excellency, that my temporary absence from the Presidency produced no change in the authority of the Government. The measures of the Vice-President are precisely the same as my own, and equally excite my interest and demand my attention.

The grounds on which his Excellency interposed in favour of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan are incontrovertibly just. As a subject and servant of the British Government, injured by the injustice of your Excellency's servants, he is entitled to expect the support of that Government in obtaining redress. I beg leave, therefore, earnestly to recall your Excellency's attention to the letter addressed to you by the Vice-President on that subject, under date the 29th March of last year, and to express my confident hope that your Excellency will no longer delay to exert your authority for the redress of the wrongs of which Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan has so much reason to complain.

The case of Hoosein Alee Khan demands, in a peculiar degree, the attention of this Government, and claims the consideration of your Excellency, on every principle of justice, honour, and humanity. On this subject I have little to add to the just and forcible observations contained in the Vice-President's letter to your Excellency of the 12th July. I must fully concur in the justice and necessity of the measure therein recommended in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan. It must be evident to your Excellency, that the British Government having, at your express desire, taken an active part in this affair, it is impossible for me to cease from troubling your Excellency on the subject, until either a due proportion of the family property shall have been made over to Hoosein Alee Khan, or the provision originally granted to the family shall have been restored and assigned for the support of that much injured person. The facts stated in the Vice-President's letter, and derived from your Excellency's own representations, precluding all expectations of the former, the adoption of the latter arrangement becomes indispensably just and necessary.

I request your Excellency to re-peruse that letter with attention, and honour me with a reply. I am willing to believe, that when your Excellency shall have duly weighed all the circumstances and considerations therein detailed, that reply cannot but be favourable.

It is with sincere regret that I find myself compelled to notice some other points, on which the most earnest representations have been made to your Excellency cellency on the part of this Government without success. Of these I shall first advert to the measures lately pursued by your Excellency towards her Highness the Bhow Begum.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
8 May 1812.

Letter from
Governor-General.

I have received, and perused with great attention, translations of the correspondence which has lately passed between your Excellency and the Resident on this subject. Although I readily admit that every Government which reposes full confidence in the integrity and ability of its representative, is naturally disposed to concur in his representations, and to support his acts and proceedings at the Court to which he is accredited, yet I beg to assure your Excellency, that in considering the merits of the question lately discussed between you and Major Baillie, I have endeavoured entirely to divest my mind of this bias, and that, on a full consideration of the whole correspondence, I cannot but deem the facts and arguments, stated in the Resident's letters to your address of the 9th and 17th of April, to be conclusive and unanswerable.

That they are so, appears to me to be established, by a comparison of the facts of the case and some passages in your Excellency's letters with the terms of the engagement concluded between your Excellency and the Begum, under the guarantee of the British Government, in the month of February 1798.

That engagement contains the following words.

" The Nawaub Vizier, Saadut Alee Khan, being impressed with sentiments of the sincerest respect and regard for her Highness the Bhow Begum, and fully relying on her friendship and assistance in his affairs whenever requisite, promises to shew her every degree of respect and attention, and do every thing to promote her convenience and comfort. As a proof of which, the said Nawaub agrees that the pensions allotted for the Khass and Khoord muhls shall be paid by her Highness, and the muhaul of Gonda be made over to her as a jaidad for that purpose."

Allow me to ask your Excellency, whether the appointment of a person of your own selection to receive the revenue of the jaidad, and distribute it to the ladies of the muhl, in opposition to the declared wish of the Begum, is consistent with the terms of the above quoted engagement? Can it possibly be said, that the pensions of the Khoord muhl are paid by her Highness, when the person who, with her concurrence and under her orders, had received and distributed the revenue of the jaidad for a long term of years, is removed against her consent, and a stranger appointed in his room?

Your Excellency, in one of your letters to the Resident, has stated, with a view to prove your title to make such an appointment, that " with the exception of the jaidad for the stipends being under her charge, she never had, nor has any thing to do, nor right to interfere in the management of those muhls." I leave your Excellency to judge, whether this assertion is compatible with the engagement, which declares that the pensions of the muhls shall be paid by her Highness, and with the fact of her having invariably paid them through the Nazir, Tuhseen Alee Khan, and of her having uniformly exercised a superintendence over the Khoord Muhl through his agency. When it is declared in the engagement, that her Highness shall pay the pensions of the muhls, can your Excellency justly maintain (as you have maintained, in another of your letters to the Resident), that " the mode of the distribution of the allowance for the Khoord muhl depends on your Excellency, and her Highness has nothing to do with it?"

Your Excellency, in reply to the Resident's remarks on your assertion, that her Highness promised that she would merely collect the revenue of the muhaul, and send it to your Excellency for distribution, has only stated, that as Tuhseen Alee Khan is your slave, and as at the period of the dethronement of Vizier Alee her Highness was in a high degree dissatisfied with him, her giving the pay of the ladies of the muhl to him, on his receipt, was the same as sending the revenue of the jaidad to your Excellency.

In reply to this argument it may be observed, in addition to what Major Baillie has stated, that admitting the facts of Tuhseen being your Excellency's slave, and of her Highness's displeasure against him, she voluntarily employed him in the distribution of the pensions; he was consequently her agent, under her authority, and responsible to her, as far as regarded the payment of those pensions.

I have judged it necessary to enter into these details, because the question is connected with an obligation of public faith on the part of the British Government; an obligation to guarantee the fulfilment of the engagement concluded between your Excellency and the Begum; and because your Excellency does not admit the right of this Government to interfere in questions of this nature. This argument, however, I am confident your Excellency will cease to maintain, when you advert to the terms of the engagement by which your Excellency promises to manifest towards her Highness every degree of respect and attention, and to do every thing to promote her convenience and comfort, and by which the British Government is declared to be the guarantee of those promises.

I now fulfil the duties of that guarantee, by expressing to your Excellency my earnest hope and expectation that Tuhseen Alee Khan may be reinstated unconditionally in the charge of the muhl, under the superintendence and control of her Highness the Begum, and that your Excellency, bearing in mind the terms of the engagement, will not think it necessary to interfere in the payment of the pensions of the Khass and Khoord muhls, nor deem it expedient to adopt any measures adverse to her Highness's convenience and comfort.

I am compelled to advert to another subject of a similar nature, on which the most earnest and repeated representations have been conveyed to your Excellency by the Resident, under the express instructions of this Government, but hitherto without effect. I allude to the severe distress and vexation experienced by her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum. I have received copies of the letter which the Resident addressed to your Excellency on that subject, under date the 1st of April, and of the letter from her Highness to the Resident to which it refers, and I concur entirely in the sentiments expressed in the former of those documents.

I deeply lament the failure of every effort of remonstrance, on the part of the Resident, to produce even a mitigation of the distresses to which this lady is subjected, by the rigour of your Excellency's measures. I have to lament, also, this additional instance of the inefficacy of that advice, which it is the duty of the British Government to offer to your Excellency. I have directed the Resident to renew his application on this subject; and I conjure your Excellency, by every consideration connected with your own honour and reputation, and with the calls of justice, compassion, and humanity, to redress the grievances of which the Begum has so much reason to complain.

These are not the only points respecting which I have cause to regret your Excellency's disregard of the representations conveyed to you by the Resident; but it is not necessary to enumerate them in this address. I have to regret generally, the effects of a uniform disposition, on the part of your Excellency, to mark with your displeasure all those who, by the course of former transactions and events, by special engagements, or by services and situation, are entitled to the protection and favour of this Government, and systematically to exhibit to the world the inefficacy of its counsels, on every occasion on which, according to the provisions of subsisting engagements, it is called upon to submit to your Excellency the suggestions of its judgment in points affecting the honour and interests of your Excellency's Government. Nor have its representations been more successful in producing the exertion of your Excellency's authority to restrain or punish your officers and Zemindars, who afford protection and assistance to robbers and marauders, infesting the Company's provinces contiguous to your own, or to withhold them from the exaction of duties on merchandize, the property of British subjects, in direct violation of treaty.

I am persuaded, however, that in all those cases to which I have either specifically or generally referred, your Excellency is guided less by the dictates of your own enlightened judgment than by the false and interested insinuations of evil advisers; for your Excellency's unbiassed discernment and ability would lead you to reflect, that perfect harmony and co-operation, a reciprocity of friendly offices, and a community of views and interests, should alone govern the intercourse of States so closely and inseparably connected. The men whose counsels have an opposite tendency are not less the enemies of your Excellency than of the British Government.

It is with extreme reluctance and concern that I address your Excellency in the language of complaint and remonstrance; but the duty and the interests committed to my charge have rendered it indispensable. At the same time, soliciting nothing but what justice, your own reputation, the prosperity of your country and the spirit of the subsisting alliance demand, I indulge a hope that I shall not have addressed you in vain.

For further particulars, I refer your Excellency to the communications of Major Baillie.

Sir:

1. In further continuation of the subject of that portion of my despatch of the 15th ultimo, which regards the dispute between his Excellency the Vizier and her Highness the Bhow Begum, with a reference to the superintendence of the Khoord muhl, I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, copies and translations of four letters, which have still more recently passed on this subject between his Excellency the Vizier, and myself.

2. It unfortunately escaped my recollection, in the commencement of the discussion with the Vizier, that I was furnished with an authenticated copy, in English and Persian, of an engagement under his Excellency's seal and the signature of the Governor-General, Lord Teignmouth, the existence of which should have originally prevented the Vizier from giving cause of complaint to the Begum, and the mere transmission of which to his Excellency, without any comment on my part, might have convinced him of the impropriety of his conduct.

3. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will now be pleased to observe, that I have rectified my original omission, and I am persuaded that his Lordship in Council will view with surprize and concern the proceedings of his Excellency the Vizier, in direct violation of an engagement contracted with her Highness the Begum, under the Honourable Company's guarantee.

This will give occasion to the ladies of the muhls to create a fresh disturbance; do you, therefore, give directions that the money for the above purpose be issued to the Daroghia. To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 1st May 1812.)

I have been honoured by the receipt of your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date (17th of Rubbee-oos-sanee). (Recapitulate the contents.)

Having transmitted on the 17th of April (4th Rubbee-oos-sanee) to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, copies and translations of the letters which passed between your Excellency and me on the subject of the Khoord muhl, and having every reason to expect that I shall soon be honoured with a communication of his Lordship's commands in reply, I am necessarily precluded from offering any suggestion on the subject to her Highness the Begum, or writing to her Minister in the terms which your Excellency has prescribed, until I receive the orders of the Government; more particularly after perusing the engagement under your Excellency's seal, and the signature of the Governor-General, Lord Teignmouth, which was granted to her Highness the Begum on the 20th February 1798. A copy of this treaty, in Persian and English, authenticated by the signature of Mr. Edmonstone, was fortunately discovered to-day among the secret records of my office, and an extract from it is here inserted for your information. "As a proof of which, the said Nawaub agrees that the stipends of the Khass and Khoord muhls shall be paid by her Highness the Begum, and the Muhaul of Gonda shall be made over to her as a jaidad for that purpose."

I can see no reason why a delay of ten or twenty days in the payment of the stipends of the muhls should now create a disturbance on the part of those ladies, as it is well known that they have heretofore been frequently three and four months in arrears, without the sound of their voices being heard, unless indeed the intrigues of the new Darogha and other persons, recently deputed to Fyzabad, may have wrought such a change in their conduct, which is certainly by no means impossible.

At all events, if your Excellency do really apprehend any disturbance, and will be pleased to write to the ladies that the subject of the superintendence of the muhls has been referred for the consideration of the British Government, and that an answer to this reference is expected in a few days, I am persuaded that those ladies will remain quiet until the sentiments of the Government shall be made known to them. Should your Excellency not approve of this suggestion, as my whole mind is bent on consulting your Excellency's gratification, I suggest, with this view, another expedient, namely, that your Excellency for the present procure a receipt, as hitherto, under the seal of Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan, and transmit it to her Highness the Begum: in this case, I shall write to her Highness without awaiting the orders of Government, and shall request her to advance the allowances for the ladies; and I have every reason to believe that her Highness will comply with my request.

With regard to what you state, that "having transmitted to the Right "Honourable the Governor-General in Council," &c. &c. (to the end of the paragraph); the case is this: you must procure from the Begum, and forward to me, the engagement to which you allude as in her possession, that I may learn from the instrument itself the nature of its contents.

As to the intrigues of the Darogha and others, for what advantage and to what end should such intrigues be employed? I cannot comprehend how they can exist.

In reply to your suggestion of my writing to the ladies that the subject of the superintendence has been referred, &c. &c. (to the end); the fact is, that though you yourself directed Tuhseen Alee Khan to suggest efficient measures for the superintendence of the muhls, he has yet offered no satisfactory communication on that subject. If he offer the necessary satisfaction without delay, so much the better, but otherwise I shall refrain from saying a word to the ladies on the subject, because if I did they would immediately quit the muhls. If her Highness the Begum will not issue the allowance on the receipt of the new Darogha I will grant a receipt to her myself.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of the 19th Rubbee-oos-sanee, in answer to mine of the 1st instant (18th Rubbee-oos-sanee).

I shall apply to her Highness the Begum for the original, or a copy of the engagement, though I do not see any necessity for doing so, and in the mean time I transmit, for your Excellency's inspection, a copy from the authenticated copy which is lodged among the records of the Residency, in the hand-writing of Mr. Edmonstone, and of equal validity with the original. If, after perusing this document, your Excellency persist in the opinion with regard to the question at issue which has occasioned so much trouble to us both, I shall have additional cause of concern.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that though I had myself directed Tuhseen to suggest, &c. &c. to the end: I have perused a copy of Tuhseen's arzee to your Excellency, and of the draft of a letter proposed to be written to the ladies of the muhls, and I entirely approve of both; the measures proposed by Tuhseen are in my mind extremely judicious, and I am persuaded that their adoption by your Excellency will be productive of the desired effect, if all other intrigues be put a stop to.

With a reference to your Excellency's offer of a receipt from yourself to her Highness the Begum, it is sufficient for me to observe, in the words of your Excellency's engagement, "that the convenience and comfort of her Highness are the only objects in my view," and consequently, if she agree to your Excellency's proposal, I shall of course be entirely satisfied.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 4th instant, enclosing copies of your correspondence with the Vizier, in continuation, on the subject of the superintendence of the Khoord muhl, and noticing your want of recollection of the engagement concluded by the Vizier and the Bhow Begum in February 1798, and guaranteed by the British Government.

2. The Governor-General in Council inferred, from the tenor of your correspondence with the Vizier, of which translations formed enclosures in your despatch of the 15th ultimo, that both you and his Excellency bore in mind the existence of that engagement, since both referred to the Company's guarantee relatively to the Begum; but from a passage in the Vizier's letter to your address, received on the 2d instant, it would appear that he had no recollection of it.

3. You will observe, however, that the Governor-General, in his letter to the Vizier, (an English copy of which was enclosed in my despatch to you of the 8th instant), in discussing the subject in question, has specifically referred to the terms of that engagement, for the purpose of demonstrating the right of the Begum to pay the stipends of the muhls through her own agents, and his Lordship in Council is consequently disposed to question the Vizier's authority to exact any conditions preparatory to the restoration of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office from which he has been so unwarrantably removed; and you will observe that the Governor-General has accordingly judged it proper to require the unconditional restoration of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office of Nazir.

5. Although it seems probable, from the tenor of your late communication on this subject, that information of his having been actually reinstated may be received before the letter from the Governor-General to the Vizier, above-mentioned, can be prepared in the Persian language, still his Lordship will not deem it expedient, in that event, to make any alteration in the letter, as the distinct exposition which it contains of the rights of the Begum, under the engagement in question, may be useful on future occasions.

The 25th June, 1812.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. My reiterated applications to the Vizier, in obedience to the commands of the Government, and in compliance with the requisitions of the judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, for the apprehension of marauders who have recently infested that district and found refuge in the reserved territory, have at length produced an effect, which I could not have contemplated as the result of a discussion on any subordinate question between his Excellency and me, namely, a long letter from his Excellency in answer to my letter of the 15th January last, on the important subject of reform.

2. As introductory to the matter of this document, a translation of which is enclosed, I take the liberty of referring the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to my separate despatch of this date, containing copies and translations of letters on the subordinate point, which have passed between his Excellency and me, and in the last of which letters, on the part of his Excellency, it will be seen that he has again reverted to the expedient of drawing a distinction between the civil demands of his Government and offences committed against its peace, and has endeavoured to render a requisition from our Government for the seizure and surrender of felons an instrument of terror and oppression in the hands of his Amil of Pertaubghur, a district notoriously the scene of every species of violence and rapacity for a protracted period of time, supported, I am sorry to add, by the active operations of our troops, during a portion of almost every succeeding year since the date of the Treaty of Cession.

3. That the object of the Vizier on this occasion has been frustrated in a becoming manner, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will be pleased to observe, by the tenor of my short letter to his Excellency, under date the 6th instant, and by the terms of my instructions of the same date to the commanding officer at Pertaubghur, which form numbers of my separate despatch; and my reply to his Excellency's letter on the more important subject of reform, a copy of which is enclosed, will, I doubt not, serve to evince to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that the Vizier has gained no ground in the discussion of this question by his recent characteristic evasion.

4. I am sorry to have occasion to report to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that his Excellency seems still determined to maintain his new arrangement for the superintendence of the Khoord muhl, in opposition to the will of her Highness the Begum, and in direct violation of his engagement,

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (20th Rubbee-oos-sanee 1227, 3d May 1812.)

I have received your letter of the 11th instant (24th ultimo), in answer to my shookha dated 10th (23d ultimo.)

You have stated, that "the promulgation on your part of any such report as I described, even were the fact as stated, is impossible, and that in reality the statement of the fact, that the British troops are never to be employed is erroneous," &c. &c.

The fact is, that the matter is public, whatever may be the means of its having become so; and that it should acquire publicity through me is also impossible, from the obvious loss it would occasion to me and the disorders it would create in my country.

With regard to what you observe, that you "are ready to furnish a force at all times, under the conditions declared in your letter of the 29th Zeehijj 1226 (15th January)," &c. &c. The truth is this: My answer to that letter was drafted long ago, but not having been fair copied was not despatched to you. There are several parts of it, however, which it appears necessary now to reply to, and those I proceed to notice.

In your letter of the 29th of Zeehijj 1226 (15th January), in reply to my shookha of the Sulkh of Zeckad (17th December), which covered a copy of the arzee of Imaum Bukhsh, Aumil of Dureeabad, you stated, "that during the whole cold season of several succeeding years, and particularly during the last year, a considerable detachment of the Honourable Company's troops had been constantly employed in Dureeabad and the adjacent district of Redowlee, in supporting the authority of my Aumils," &c. &c. I have referred to your letters of the 3d and 27th Rubbee-oos-sanee (27th April and 22d May 1811), and of the 10th Jemadee-ool-awul 1226 (3d June 1811), but cannot find in any of them the least mention of operations against the fort of Keampore, belonging to Aman Sing, in the district of Dureeabad. It is, perhaps, in some other of your letters that these circumstances are noticed.

You next observe: "If such be the state of the case, to what cause have we now to ascribe the disaffection and revolt of the landholders, as represented by the Aumil of Dureeabad? If the representation of that Aumil be correct, can we ascribe it to any other cause than the oppression of the landholders, and their despair of obtaining redress from your Excellency's justice?" In truth, had the British detachments in those quarters, when they were employed, as you mention, for the purpose of punishing the refractory and maintaining the tranquillity of the country, acted in the same manner as the troops which were employed on the service of Nandparra and Kewayec, the object I had in view would have been accomplished. I have ever afforded, and do constantly dispense ample justice and protection to my subjects; and injustice, oppression, and rapacity, being at all times hostile to my disposition, could never have been practised towards them, because such conduct, if practised, must have ruined the inhabitants and depopulated my country: whereas, I thank God, that my country, compared with former times, is in a flourishing condition. Travellers passing through it from other quarters bear testimony to its populous, cultivated, and affluent appearance. These accounts have most probably reached you, and you might have witnessed the confirmation of them on our hunting excursion. If, at times, disputes, disturbances, and even murders occur, they must be placed to the account of private enmity among the Zemindars, or to their resistance to authority and detention of the lawful dues of Government, and not to the oppression and exorbitant demands of the Aumils, nor to despair of justice and protection from me. The Aumils, aware of my disposition, and from the dread of my displeasure, would not presume to make exorbitant demands from the landholders, of which the latter are fully sensible, since they know that, upon the slightest representation of oppression or exorbitant demands by the Aumils, ample redress will be afforded to them : and if, at any time, a difference arise between the landholders and Aumils of a district, the grounds of it are fully investigated by me, and it is adjusted in a proper manner. Thus, in the case of Aman Sing, who, instigated by enmity and oppression, seized on the villages of Veroulee and Ferozepore, belonging to Kullunder Bukhsh ; on the latter complaining to the Presence, the villages were restored to him, from no other motives on my part than those of equity and justice alone ; but he was afterwards murdered, with some others, by his oppressor, Aman Sing. Neither tyranny, oppression, nor exorbitant demands by the Aumils, nor the landholders' despair of justice, can be inferred from the case of Aman Sing, which, on the contrary, fully proves his resistance to the authority of Government, and that the despair of the landholders, if it exist, must proceed from his not being punished.
Aumils,

Bengal Political
Consultations,
25 June 1812.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You observe, " if the object of my requisition, in the terms of my letter to you, be the seizure and punishment of a murderer, this is not the duty of regular troops, nor is the performance of it practicable by their exertions : the apprehension of criminals and felons is the obvious duty of the police," &c. &c.

The apprehension of Aman Sing was not a matter of much difficulty. Had you, as in the case of my requisition for the aid of your troops to support the Aumil of Akberpore, when you furnished me with a letter at my desire, written a letter in the same way to the commanding-officer of the troops at Secroora, Aman Sing might have been easily seized, as Keampore is only three or four coss from that cantonment. No Resident at my durbar has ever refused me the aid of British troops for the purpose of seizing murderers and robbers. Admitting that the Cutwals and Thanahdars are the proper persons to execute this duty, and that they use their utmost endeavours on such occasions, they must still fail in the object without the assistance of the British troops, since the number of people with the Thannahdar is too small for such a purpose.

You state, that " the Honourable Company's Government having undertaken, by the provisions of the treaty of 1801, to defend my territories against all foreign and domestic enemies, it follows, as a necessary consequence of the above obligation, that the British Government must have a title not only to investigate, but to decide on the merits of all such claims and disputes between my Government and its opponents, as may require for their adjustment the interposition of the British influence or power," &c., &c. It is true, that the treaty in question stipulates the defence of my dominions against all foreign and domestic enemies by the British Government, but it is not mentioned in the treaty that the British Government shall arbitrate my demands, or decline to believe my assertions, and that I and my subjects shall be placed in the situation of plaintiff and defendant.

Again, you observe, " you have been commanded to intimate to me the final resolution of your Government to assert and to exercise this right, on every future occasion of a demand on my part for the aid of the British troops to support the authority of my Aumils, adjusting on such occasions with me the manner of prosecuting an investigation of the justness of the Aumil's demands." Although the friendship subsisting between me and the British Government, and its confidence in me, should be such as to preclude its entertaining a doubt of the truth of my own representations, in applying for the assistance of troops against insurgents and enemies who create commotion and disturb the peace of my country, yet, if an investigation is indeed to be required, if, what I consider impossible, the British Government should insist on ascertaining the truth of the subject in dispute before the assistance be afforded, the mode of investigation is this, that agreeably to the statement of the Aumil, when the nature of the case shall demand it, I shall depute an Ameen to the Elaka, to investigate the state of circumstances and to report to me on the subject. The information so received I shall communicate to you, and then measures must be adopted agreeably to my requisition. Except this, no other mode occurs to me to be practicable ; for as to the measure of your deputing Ameens on your own part, I rejected it long ago, when it was first proposed to me, because, if an Ameen were appointed by you, and I and my subjects should be placed in the situation of plaintiff and defendant, what power or authority should I possess? The necessary effect of such a measure would be the diminution of my consequence, and numerous evils besides, which it is improper here to detail. From the kindness of the Governor-General I expect that my power and authority should daily increase; whereas, by this means, it is obvious that my power and authority must be injured.

Here ends my reply to the contents of your letter of the 29th Zeehijj 1226 (15th January), and with a reference to your remark in the letter to which this shookha is an answer, namely, that "if the inadequacy of the Aumil's force be now the only pretext for his delay to apprehend the delinquents," &c. As the smallness of the Aumil's force is an obvious excuse on his part, I desire that you will send me a letter, to the address of the commanding-officer of the troops, that I may forward it to the Aumil.

I consider you to be my friend, and one who sympathizes in all my uneasiness; and, consequently, which God forbid, if you should be indifferent or dilatory in taking measures for the punishment of those who excite insurrection in my country, disturbances of a serious nature must be the consequence. There are at present two or three places in my dominions which in an eminent degree require the presence of the British troops, without whose assistance my affairs cannot be arranged. I desire nothing contrary to justice, nor do I seek assistance with any other view. I have no troops of my own sufficient to quell insurrections; and if I had, I would, as you are my friend, still apply to you for assistance. If you delay to punish the turbulent, you will see how much revenue I shall lose, for when the Zemindars hear of the delay, they will withhold the just dues of the State.

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 9th May 1812.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter dated 3d instant, and I have fully understood its contents.

My repeated applications to your Excellency, in obedience to the orders of the Government for the apprehension of a few of our rebellious subjects, who have found refuge in your Excellency's territories, and commit depredations in the district of Elahabad, would seem to have furnished an expedient for the renewal of a discussion, which I considered as at an end, and the revival of which in such a manner, and with such arguments as your Excellency has used, could never have entered into my contemplation.

The seizure of the delinquents in question, which was originally declared to depend on the appearance of a person to point them out, and subsequently stated to require the assistance of a detachment of our troops in support of your Excellency's Aumil, would seem now to be considered as a pretext for annulling the solemn declaration, which I conveyed to your Excellency in the name of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, on the 15th January last, as the ultimatum of the British Government on the important subject of reform.

My letter of the 15th of January, and the final declaration which it contained, were meant merely to explain to your Excellency two distinct propositions, in order to your acquiescence in one of them, which is indispensable, with a reference to the future employment of our troops in support of your Excellency's Aumils, and in the realization of the revenues of your Government; namely, first, that your Excellency should establish a system of administration in your dominions either that recommended by the British government, or some other equally calculated to afford permanent security to us, for the justice of the measures measures and demands which our power may be required to enforce, or, secondly, as the only alternative, that on every future occasion of a requisition by your Excellency for the employment of the Honourable Company's troops, the British Government should assert and exercise its own essential and unquestionable right to investigate the nature of those demands, and to arbitrate between your Excellency's Aumils and landholders.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To such a letter and declaration as those, the only answer which could be expected by the British Government, or its representative at your Excellency's court, was a ready acknowledgment by your Excellency of the justice of the two propositions which were thus submitted for your choice, and your cheerful acceptance of one of them; or, if the alternative were disagreeable to your mind, a tacit indication of your resolution to refrain, on all future occasions, from requiring the aid of our troops in the collection of the revenues of your country: a species of aid or support which your Excellency must be fully aware that the British Government is no where pledged to afford you.

But, at all events, as my letter to your Excellency, under date the 15th January, conveying the declaration above described, was written under the express and explicit commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whose high and entire approbation of the tenor of that letter has been subsequently signified to me, so as to render it the indispensable rule of my conduct on all future occasions, it is obvious that I am precluded from entering into any further discussion of the justice of the propositions submitted, and still more so from relinquishing the objects of them in the smallest possible degree. The only duty which remains to me is that of transmitting a translation of your Excellency's letter for his Lordship in Council's consideration; and this I propose doing with the least practicable delay; but, in the mean time, I shall offer to your Excellency a few observations in reply to it; and to these observations, in the genuine spirit of friendship and regard for your Excellency, inspired by a residence of nearly five years at your Court, I most earnestly solicit your attention.

Your Excellency has been pleased to remark, that on a reference to my letters of the 27th April, 22d May and 3d June 1811, you find no mention of operations against the fortress of Keampore, inferring, doubtless, from this circumstance, that the former services of the British troops in Dureeabad left the settlement of that district incomplete: yet the just inference from the fact which your Excellency has stated is manifestly the reverse of that which you have deduced from it, and demonstrates the truth of my observation in my letter of the 15th January, namely, that the fortress of Keampore was not then in existence, and has been subsequently built, or that its possessor was then in obedience, and has since been induced to resist the authority of your Excellency's Aumil; in both which cases, alike, the recent disturbance in Dureeabad must be ascribed to the Aumil's neglect or rapacity.

Your Excellency's second remark, with reference to Nandparra and Kewayee, proves merely that the force of the British arms, if applied, can destroy all the means of resistance on the part of your Excellency's subjects; a fact which has never been denied: but the justice of applying that force to such a purpose, and even the permanent advantages of such measures, are the questions now under discussion; and, with a reference to these, I maintain, that the true principle of attachment to your Excellency's Government will still be wanting in your subjects, the disposition to revolt will remain, nay, that this must be ever the case under the present system of your administration.

Your Excellency next observes, that you "have ever afforded, and do constantly dispense, the most ample justice to your subjects," &c. Were the case as your Excellency has stated it, this discussion could never have commenced. Your well-wisher, and the Government which he represents, must ever be gratified and pleased by receiving reports and observing examples of your justice: but it is certainly fair to reply, that a description of your Excellency's justice which flows from your own pen, be the colours of it ever so glowing, cannot be received as an argument in discussions of a nature like this; and that the fertility, produce, and population, admitting them all to be proved, proved, of a country whose revenues are collected at the point of the sword or the bayonet, can never be stated as proofs of the virtuous government of that country. The proofs of a virtuous government, of the justice and moderation of a sovereign, and his impartial administration of the laws, are the willing allegiance of the people, their attachment to the person of their prince and obedience to their immediate rulers, their voluntary payment of the revenues, and the absence of any necessity for the employment of military force.

Such is the well-known condition of the Honourable Company's possessions, and such would soon be the state of the whole of your Excellency's country under the system of administration proposed.

Your Excellency proceeds to remark, that "the apprehension of Aman Sing was not a matter of difficulty," and that "no Resident at your durbar had ever refused you assistance for the purpose of seizing murderers and robbers," &c.

To this I reply: that though the apprehension of criminals be, as formerly stated, the duty of the police, I have never absolutely refused, nor shall I hereafter refuse, to afford the aid of our troops in a case of necessity for that purpose. But the aid of our troops to an Aumil, a Cutwal, or a Thanadar, for the seizure of a murderer or a robber, is one thing, and the support of an Aumil or a farmer in the collection of his just or unjust demands of revenue from the landholders, is another. And as, from the tenor of the Aumil's arzee, conveyed to me by your Excellency's letter of 17th December last, it was evident that his object in the requisition for military aid was not limited to the apprehension of Aman Sing, but embraced the enforcement of his demands against all the landholders in his district, it became my indispensable duty to hesitate about the employment of our troops.

Your Excellency has next argued, or seemed to argue, from the terms of the treaty of 1801, that "as the obligation to defend, &c. is expressly stated, and the right to arbitrate is not declared in that treaty, the British Government must be bound to receive implicitly the assertions of your Excellency's Government and its officers, and to act on them without investigation or inquiry," &c.

To this argument I reply, in the first place, generally, that an obligation to defend or protect, of necessity requires in the contracting party a paramount, and in some respects, a controlling authority over the party to be defended or protected. And, secondly, that defence or protection against "enemies," as in the words of the treaty in question, requires that the enmity be proved. Till it be apparent, therefore, or proved to the satisfaction of the British Government, that your Excellency's landholders are indeed the enemies of the State, and withhold its just revenues without any just cause or pretext, without the plea of a farmer's extortion, the British Government can never be bound to punish or coerce those landholders; for, if so, the British Government must be bound to commit oppression and tyranny, which are certainly not comprehended in the letter or spirit of its obligation under the treaty of 1801. The right of investigation must therefore be necessarily implied; it must constitute an essential part of the engagement to defend and protect; and the disbelief, or the hesitation to believe, the assertions of your Excellency's Government, is a necessary and unavoidable consequence of the present system of your administration, under which the simple assertion of an interested Aumil or farmer is the only proof to be obtained, since there is no court of justice, no legal tribunal in your dominions, where disputes between the Aumils and landholders can be heard, where just demands might be distinguished from extortion.

Your Excellency would seem particularly averse to being placed or considered in the light of a plaintiff or defendant, with relation to the subjects of your Government: yet the true and exclusive characteristic of a just and virtuous Government is that which your Excellency would avoid. The just and obvious relation between every Government and its subjects, the reciprocal nature of their rights and obligation to each other, require that both should frequently appear in the character which your Excellency objects to; but in this there is no degradation of the Government, no diminution of its lawful authority or power. Is the power or consequence of the British Government in India diminished by its practice in this respect with a reference to the lowest of its subjects? In every district of our dominions, a court of justice, a legal tribunal, is established, before which the Government appears or may be cited, as a plaintiff or defendant, every day. Its constituted agents are in constant attendance on those courts, for the purpose of asserting its rights and establishing its claims against the landholders and every other description of its subjects, whose reciprocal claims and demands are tried by the same tribunals; and till the justice of a demand on the part of the Government be acknowledged or proved, no military force, no legal means can be employed to coerce the meanest of its subjects.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

Your Excellency next proceeds to suppose what you are pleased to term an impossible case, that "the British Government should insist on ascertaining the truth of the subject in dispute before the assistance be afforded;" and for this case you are pleased to suggest a provision, namely, "that agreeably to the statement of the Aumil, you will depute an Ameen to the district," &c. To which I shall first reply, that the orders of my employers, the commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, are express for the appointment of an Ameen, on my own part, to investigate the matter in dispute in concert with your Excellency's officers; and, secondly, that the measure which your Excellency has proposed would, in my mind, prove totally useless. The connivance of your Excellency's Ameen with your Aumil, under the present system of your Government, would be the necessary result of his deputation. The statement of the Aumil would be confirmed in your Excellency's belief by the report of your Ameen, and the double wages of corruption would fall to be paid by the landholders. An Ameen on the part of our Government is therefore indispensable, with a view to its end of impartial justice between your Excellency's farmers and landholders: but that "the necessary effect of such a measure would be the diminution of your Excellency's consequence, and numerous evils besides," I am by no means prepared to admit; for if the employment of the Company's troops to enforce your Excellency's demands be not a diminution of your consequence, it is difficult to conceive how the appointment of a single person as an Ameen, who will merely accompany the troops, should produce the effect which you describe.

To the genuine friendship and kindness of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, from which your Excellency has stated your expectations in the concluding paragraphs of your letter, I ascribe in a similar spirit the wise and virtuous system of Government which his Lordship has recommended to your adoption, as well as the necessary alternative of your adoption of that system in the appointment of Ameens; and I am satisfied, nay, your Excellency must be satisfied, that his Lordship in Council would never have proposed this system, or its alternative, for your choice, if he had not been fully convinced of the perfect practicability of your acquiescence, without injury to your just rights and authority, as well as of the necessity of the measures in question, with a reference to the true interests and reputation of your Excellency's Government and his own. In reply to your Excellency's concluding appeal to my friendship, and your caution against indifference, or delay, in taking measures for the punishment of your subjects, I can only refer you to the assurance which I conveyed at the close of my letter under date the 15th January. The remedy for past, and preventive of future losses, consist in your adoption of the system so earnestly recommended by my employers, and frequently urged to you by me, on the fullest conviction of its advantages, and from the purest motives of friendship.

Letter

Government.

1. Under the direction of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, I have now the honour to reply to your several despatches of the dates noted in the margin.*

2. His Lordship in Council considers you to have successfully replied to the several points of his Excellency the Vizier's letter, containing his answer to yours of the 15th January, especially to that part of his Excellency's letter in which he disputes the right of the British Government to ascertain, by means which can alone be deemed calculated to produce a satisfactory result, the justice of the cause in which the services of its troops may be required. You will observe, that the Governor-General, in his letter to the Vizier of the 8th ultimo, has asserted that right, and you will, of course, continue to maintain it. On the receipt of his Excellency's reply to that letter, the Governor-General in Council will be enabled to judge what measures it may be advisable to pursue, with a view either to the efficient exercise of the right in question, or to the more fundamental object of a reform in the system of his Excellency's administration.

3. You very properly frustrated the Vizier's attempt to convert the alleged necessity for the employment of the British troops at Pertaubghur, for the apprehension of the robbers infesting the district of Elahabad, into the means of placing those troops at the disposal of the Aumil for the purpose of oppressive coercion; and the guarded instructions which you issued on that occasion to the commanding officer at Pertaubghur are entirely approved.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 8th ultimo, in reply to my despatch of the 14th of April last, having reference to the proceedings, political and military, which have taken place at this court and in the district of Mohumdie, with regard to the marauder Budjha Sing, and conveying the sentiments and commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council for the guidance of my conduct, in the case of a continued opposition on the part of his Excellency the Vizier to the measures and arrangements suggested for the seizure or destruction of that marauder.

2. By a despatch which I have recently received from the Resident at Delhi, it appears that the employment of a portion of the irregular cavalry, commanded by Captain Skinner, in the pursuit of the rebel Budjha Sing, is for the present totally impracticable; but it is satisfactory, at the same time, to be assured by an official communication from the commanding officer of the troops at Seetapore, that the active and zealous exertions of the detachment employed at Mohumdie have superseded the necessity for the measure, which has thus proved to be impracticable; and it is still more satisfactory to me to be enabled to report to the Government an apparently sincere, and if so, a most salutary change, in the disposition of his Excellency the Vizier, with a reference to our just views,

3. At a conference with his Excellency the Vizier on the morning of the 18th instant, encouraged by the liberal and gratifying support which the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has been recently pleased to afford to me, in the terms of your despatch under date the 8th ultimo (the original of the enclosure of which has not yet been received), I took a full and comprehensive review of his Excellency's untoward proceedings and unhappy disregard of my advice, with a reference to a number of questions that were then depending between the two Governments, and had long been the subjects of discussion between his Excellency and me.

4. The result of our conference on that occasion was far more satisfactory, with a reference to every question which it embraced, than the effect of any communication or remonstrance which I had offered to his Excellency the Vizier since Lord Minto's departure from the Presidency, on his Lordship's expedition to Java; and among the salutary effects of my representations on this occasion, I have genuine satisfaction in reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, the unconditional reappointment of Tuhseu Alee Khan to the office of Nazir of the Khoord muhl, as well as the Vizier's cheerful acquiescence in some important measures recommended by me with a reference to Budjha Sing, and the satisfactory adjustment of a few other subordinate points on which we had long differed in opinion, and regarding which his Excellency's compliance with my suggestions seemed equally just and desirable.

5. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the further information of the Government on the primary subject of his despatch, the enclosed copy of a letter which I have recently received from Lieutenant-Colonel Adams, with copies and translations of a mandate and proclamation, under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, which have been issued at my suggestion, to the Aumil and population at large of the districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, and copies of which are to be circulated, under my instructions, with his Excellency's concurrence, by the commanding officer at Sectapore.

The enclosed proclamation, issued by order of the Presence to the Zemindars, &c. in your Elaka, is transmitted to you for the purpose of promulgation. You will further write to your deputy, directing him at all times to seize and despatch to the Presence any person or persons residing in his Elaka, whom the commanding officer of the troops at Sectapore may point out as deserving of this treatment.

Proclamation.

Be it known to the Zemindars, Talookadars, Chowdries, Canoongoes, Ryots, and inhabitants at large of the districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, that if any one shall hereafter admit or afford protection in his village or house to the rebel Budjha Sing, or to any of the adherents or followers of that rebel, or shall, on any account, or in any manner whatever, be aiding or abetting Budjha Sing or his accomplices, or shall purchase or receive in deposit any article of property or effects plundered by those marauders, the person so offending, on proof of such offence, shall be for ever expelled from his zemindary, as well as banished from his country for life, and otherwise severely punished : and whosoever shall apprehend, or cause to be seized, the rebel Budjha Sing alive, or shall bring his head as a proof of his destruction, shall receive, as a reward for this service, a village free from assessment yielding a hundred rupees per annum, to him and his heirs for ever.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 21st August 1812.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq. Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 22d ultimo, conveying an extract from the proceedings of the Government in the Judicial Department, under date the 18th ultimo, and the commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council with a reference to those proceedings.

2. In obedience to his Lordship's commands, I have prepared and submitted a translation of the whole of the proceedings in question for the perusal of his Excellency the Vizier, to whom I have addressed a letter in the terms of the accompanying document, the result of which shall be communicated to you hereafter, for his Lordship in Council's information.

3. If the Vizier shall prove disposed to evade the adoption of measures for the apprehension of those leaders of banditti who are known to reside in Baraich, on the ground of a scarcity of troops, or from the still more probable motive of a wish to screen the Zemindars from the consequences of an enquiry into their conduct, which would probably lead to their conviction in the case of the seizure of a few of the principal marauders, I submit, for the consideration of the Government, the expediency of detaching a portion of the Honourable Company's troops from the neighbouring station of Secrora to proceed to Atrawla and Bulrampore, and seize the persons of such marauders as may be found to reside in those districts, without any reference to the Vizier or to the local authority of the Aumil, as was done on a recent occasion, at the suggestion of the Magistrate of Elahabad, with a reference to the district of Pertaubghur.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
21 Aug. 1812.

4. I am induced to offer this suggestion by the constant disavowal, on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, and of his Aumils and landholders, of the residence of banditti in his territory, and by secret information which I possess of the haunts of a few of the marauders, obtained through the medium of an Hirkarah, now in my service, who has long resided in Baraitch.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have already frequently had the honour of addressing your Excellency on the subject of the robberies and depredations, attended by atrocious murders, committed in the district of Juanpore, Sarun, and Tirhoot, by a banditti known to reside and to find protection in your Excellency's province of Baraitch, and to be supported and encouraged by some of the principal landholders in that province, particularly by Lootf Alee Khan, Jehangeer Khan, and Newul Sing, Zemindars of Atrowla and Bulrampore, who are stated and believed to receive a considerable share of the booty acquired by those marauders.

Your Excellency must be aware, that my repeated and urgent applications on this subject have been hitherto totally unavailing; and consequently it cannot excite your surprize, that the reports and proceedings of the Magistrates of the several districts which have so long been subjected to the depredations of those marauders, should have ultimately engaged the serious attention of the Government, and have appeared to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to require a more direct and a more urgent representation of the state of the case to your Excellency, with a view to the adoption of effectual measures for the prevention of an evil of such magnitude as the frequent incursions of this banditti into the Honourable Company's dominions.

I have accordingly received the commands of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to submit, for your Excellency's perusal, the enclosed extracts from his Lordship in Council's proceedings, in the Judicial department of his administration, by which it will appear to your Excellency to be clearly and satisfactorily proved, that the principal leaders at least, if not the whole of the banditti who attacked the treasure escort in the district of Sarun, and carried off the sum of 4,000 rupees, after murdering, or wounding so as to disable, the whole of the guard who protected it, as well as the leaders of the several gangs who formerly committed depredations in the districts of Juanpore and Tirhoot, are the subjects of your Excellency's Government, residing in the province of Baraitch, protected and encouraged by Lootf Alee Khan, Jehangeer Khan, and Newul Sing, the landholders of Atrowla and Bulrampore.

Under these circumstances, I am commanded by his Lordship in Council to suggest, and indeed to urge in the strongest manner, to your Excellency, the necessity of your adopting immediate and effectual measures for the seizure and surrender of the several leaders of Banditti, whose persons and places of residence are particularly described in the accompanying statement received from the magistrate of Sarun; and further, for the due investigation of the conduct, and eventually the exemplary punishment, of those Zemindars, by whom the marauders in question are stated and believed to be protected.

The necessary measures to be adopted for the accomplishment of those ends are so simple and easy in their execution, that I shall leave them to your Excellency's judgment without any further remark; requesting, however, to be apprized, for his Lordship in Council's information, of the measures which your

from Secretary to
Government.

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, under date the 5th instant, reporting your proceedings under the instructions of Government, conveyed to you in my despatch of the 22d ultimo, on the subject of the apprehension of certain leaders of banditti and decoits protected in the province of Baraich, and suggesting the expediency of detaching a portion of the Honourable Company's troops from Secora to proceed to Atrowla and Bulrampore, and seize the persons of such marauders as may be found to reside in those districts, without any reference to the Vizier or to the local authority of the Aumil, as was done on a recent occasion, at the suggestion of the Magistrate of Elahabad, in the district of Pertaubghur.

2. The tenor of your letter to his Excellency the Vizier is entirely approved by the Governor-General in Council. With regard to the suggestion above referred to I am directed to state the following observations.

3. That suggestion is expressed in terms which create a doubt in the mind of his Lordship in Council with respect to the exact nature of it, or the measures actually adopted in the district of Pertaubghur, to which you refer, as the measures which you propose to be authorized on the present occasion do not seem to correspond with the description contained in your letter now acknowledged. You propose that the British troops should be authorized to proceed to Atrowla and Bulrampore, and seize the persons of such marauders as may be found to reside in those districts, without reference to the Vizier or to the local authority of the Aumil. In the case to which you refer, however, the orders issued by you to the commanding officer at Pertaubghur, directing, "on receiving information of the place of Kishen Sing's concealment, either from the Magistrate of the district of Elahabad, or from the Vizier's Aumil of Pertaubghur, to take the necessary measures for the apprehension of that marauder," were communicated to the Vizier previously to their being despatched. The mode of proceeding, therefore, adopted on that occasion, cannot be said to have been adopted without any reference to the Vizier. If, however, your proposition is to be understood in a more limited sense, that is to say, if you intended, as in the former case, previously to apprise his Excellency of the nature of the orders to be issued, and obtain his consent, and by the expression "reference to the Vizier or his Aumil" you merely meant that after obtaining his Excellency's general concurrence in the proposed measure, the troops should be at liberty to proceed to the apprehension of the marauders on receiving intelligence of the place of their concealment, without any additional reference or communication to the Vizier or to the Aumil, of course no objection exists to this mode of proceeding, because the only objection would arise from the want of the Vizier's consent, which is not supposed in this case.

I have, &c.

Fort-William,

(Signed) N. B. EMMERSON,
Chief Secretary to Government.

On a further consideration of the proposition contained in the above letter from the Resident at Lucknow;

Ordered, That the following further instructions be addressed to the Resident.

To

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

Bengal Political
Consultations,
21 Aug. 1812.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. A further consideration of the proposition contained in your despatch of the 5th instant, to which I had the honour to reply, under the orders of Government, by my letter of the 17th, has suggested to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council the expediency of endeavouring to obtain the Vizier's consent to a modified employment of the British troops stationed within his dominions, for the apprehension of robbers and criminals who find a refuge and asylum therein from the pursuit of justice.

2. Adverting to the interest which, under the existing system of the Vizier's Government, his Aumils and Zemindars have in conniving at the depredations and protecting the persons of professional robbers, a material advantage would be gained by our possessing the liberty of employing our troops, in certain cases, for the apprehension of such criminals without previous reference to the Vizier or to the officers of the district, in which they may be concealed. The cases in which this employment of our troops is alone contemplated are, when the commanding officer may receive authentic intelligence, that any of the marauders whose seizure is desired are concealed at some place within the distance of a rapid march from the station of the troops, and may have reason to believe that, by the delay of a reference to the Vizier, or of application to the Aumil or Zemindar of the district, or even of the latter's knowledge that such movement is intended, the opportunity of effecting the seizure would be lost, or would be defeated.

3. Strong objections oppose the measure of authorizing such a system of proceeding without the Vizier's consent; for although it is true, that even without such consent that system might be rendered necessary, and might finally be justified by provocations even of a negative kind, such as the refusal or the neglect of the Vizier to afford the assistance which we have a right to require against rebels and plunderers who take shelter in his territories, yet to redress ourselves at our own hands, in the manner above stated, would be a measure of at least modified hostility, and would throw a degree of perplexity upon the nature of our relations with Oude, in regard to the change which such a state of affairs might be supposed to operate upon them, as might create inconvenience and embarrassment of various kinds; and it is, moreover, extremely desirable to avoid any act which would afford to the Vizier even a plausible ground for complaining of a breach of treaty, as the movement of troops, and any operation executed by them without reference to him, for purposes of our own, would probably do.

4. For these reasons, his Lordship in council is not prepared to authorize the employment of our troops in the manner above suggested, without a reference to the Vizier, and without a general, if not a specific consent on his part. It is, therefore, the desire of his Lordship in Council, that you should request, and endeavour to obtain, the Vizier's consent to such orders for the sudden march of detachments, in the cases only of the emergencies described, being issued to the officers in command at the frontier stations within his Excellency's dominions, and that the application for this general sanction to the measure should be made to the Vizier, without specifying any particular case for which that power may be desired, but upon the general and well established ground that such occasions for the immediate employment of troops may, and actually do arise, and that, without the power requested, it must occasionally happen that the object which might otherwise be obtained must be defeated.

5. The Vizier has repeatedly and solemnly declared his solicitude for the seizure of the marauders who infest our territories, by means of the refuge which they find in his own. He cannot, therefore, consistently with these declarations, withhold his consent to the proposed measure, unless he can disprove the exigency on which the application is founded, or unless he maintains the probability of our availing ourselves of the solicited privilege, in a manner to disturb the tranquillity of his country, and to subvert the authority of his government in the districts where that privilege may be exercised: a supposition which, under the specified circumstances

Sir :

1. The secure state of the frontier of this district from incursions by Surnam Sing, Kishen Sing, &c. and his party, and from Bodia and his followers, is, in my opinion, to be ascribed to the vigilant watch which has been kept on their movements, and their consequent inability to plan, with their former ease and success, those sallies which have so long continued to distress the inhabitants.

2. I consider the fortunate result of your application to the Vizier for Colonel Kyan's aid in the apprehension of our fugitives, to have had a most powerful, good effect. as it has really alarmed the rebels for their own personal safety, and shewn them that, even with the decided protection of the Nawaub's officers and Zemindars, they cannot screen themselves from our search, as it manifests to his Excellency's local officers their impotency to expect to grant effectual shelter, and rendering them cautious of the consequences of our apprehending the offenders within their jurisdiction, after the penalties which have been denounced by his Excellency against them, but above all, as it has manifested the willing co-operation of his Excellency.

3. Under these circumstances, I am induced to suggest to you to urge his Excellency to the advancement of one step further towards the complete extirpation of the evil, especially as at this moment such reports and circumstantial accounts reach me of the anxiety and preparations of the fugitives, as leave no doubt in my mind of their intention to take advantage of the first opportunity, or want of vigilance, on the part of the people under my orders, to effect an incursion and plunder.

4. The plan I propose is nothing more than to station an officer's party from Pertaubghur, or elsewhere, in the vicinity of the harbour and abode of the fugitives within his Excellency's territories; and should you be able to prevail in this suggestion, I shall hereafter have the honour to advise you of the most advantageous position for the detachment.

5. You

5. You will readily perceive how much this arrangement may afterwards be improved upon, by an intelligent and active officer being chosen for the duty, who may be aided by an establishment of requisite persons to convey to him information; and although the chief object of his command may be considered merely to prevent the establishment of Kishen Sing, &c. and the assembly of his party in the neighbourhood (whence he always issues), his views may also be directed to their seizure.

6. It is unnecessary for me I presume to uphold what I have said, by proofs of the fugitives receiving support and protection within his Excellency's territory. 1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 8th instant, suggesting the detachment of a portion of the troops from Pertaubghur to take post and be permanently stationed in the vicinity of the principal haunts of the marauders, who have recently infested the frontier of the district under your jurisdiction.

2. I concur entirely with you in the expedience of the measure which you have proposed, with a view to the effectual protection of the subjects of the British Government from the future incursions of those mauraunders, and eventually to the seizure of their persons, and having little doubt of the ready acquiescence of his Excellency the Vizier in this measure, if proposed to him with the sanction of our Government, I shall submit a copy of your despatch to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, for his Lordship in Council's commands, with the least practicable delay.

3. The previous sanction of the Government seems necessary, to my judgment, as well as proper, not only with the view of conferring additional weight on the representation to be made by me to his Excellency the Vizier, but particularly with reference to an arrangement by which a portion of the military force is to be withdrawn permanently, or for a considerable period of time, from the ordinary place of its cantonment, and fixed in another position.

4. No inconvenience can arise from the delay which this reference will occasion in the execution of the proposed arrangement, because it could scarcely, under any circumstances, (save of great emergency) take place before the breaking up of the rains or the middle of the ensuing month, by which time you will have obtained the most accurate information regarding the fittest position for the detachment, and I shall have had the honour of receiving the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council's commands.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council entirely concurs in your opinion of the expediency of the measure suggested by Mr. Fortescue, and directs me to desire that you will point out to the Vizier the advantages to be expected from that measure, and request his Excellency's sanction to its adoption.

3. It will occur to you, that this arrangement is very similar to that which, by my despatch of the 21st instant, you have been directed to submit for the sanction of his Excellency the Vizier. The latter would include the former, excepting so far as relates to the previous march of a detachment to a position in the vicinity of the haunts of the marauders, for the purpose of being in readiness to effect the seizure of them. Although, therefore, the general permission suggested in my last letter should have been obtained, on your receipt of this, it will still be necessary to obtain the Vizier's specific sanction to the arrangement proposed in the district of Pertaubghur.

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch, under date the 5th instant, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the further information of the Government, the enclosed copies and translations of letters which have more recently passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me on the subject of that despatch.

2. The measures which have been ultimately adopted, at my recommendation, by the Vizier, appear to supersede the suggestion which was submitted in the third paragraph of my former despatch on this subject, and will, I trust, have the desired effect of preventing any marauders from finding refuge hereafter in Baraitch, as well as of conducing to the apprehension of the principal leaders of the gang who have hitherto infested our dominions.

3. If the measures adopted on this occasion be approved, I suggest for the consideration of the Government, that the adoption of similar measures, and the offer of pecuniary rewards for the seizure of the several marauders who have recently infested Elahabad, might perhaps supersede the necessity of the measure proposed by Mr. Fortescue, and referred for the orders of Government in my despatch of the 15th instant.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received 16th August 1812, or 7th Shabaun 1227.)

I have received two letters from you, the first dated 26th Rujub (15th instant), stating that you had received the orders of Government to solicit my adoption of effectual measures for the seizure and punishment of certain decoits and their abettors, with a translation of an extract from the judicial proceedings of the Government, and descriptive rolls of the decoits; and the second, dated the 5th Shabaun (14th instant), with translations of a letter to your address from the Chief Secretary to Government, and of further proceedings, in continuation, on the subject of your former address.

With regard to what you have stated of your "former frequent applications, in compliance with the requisitions of the judges, for the seizure of those offenders,"

"offenders," &c. (to the end); on the 10th Rubbee-ool-awul 1226, or 5th of April last, the copy of an arzee from Balek Ram deceased, late Aumil of Baraitch, with Bekhu, &c. eight sheghalkhors and 3,934 rupees were sent to you. Your subsequent applications for the seizure of such offenders have invariably been complied with, and orders to that effect have been issued by me to Umer Sing, Aumil of Baraitch, &c., copies of whose arzees, in reply, have been regularly forwarded for your information; nay, one or two other offenders, who had been seized by the Aumil, have been sent to you, with such property as was found on them. The Aumil, too, has exerted himself to the full extent of his power for the seizure of all the offenders, and in destroying their ghurries, being aware that the apprehension and punishment of such offenders is greatly wished for by me; but as the seizure and extirpation of this banditti cannot be expected to be produced by the single exertions of the Aumil, who, in consequence of the limited number of his troops, is unable to keep his own Elaka in good order, it appears to me to be advisable that an intelligent English officer, with a detachment of the Company's troops, be employed on this service; and that a confidential servant be appointed by me, to procure the necessary supplies and attend the commanding officer of the detachment, to report to him every particular; and that a shookha be addressed to the Aumil to the following purport:—That an English officer, with a detachment, has been deputed to seize such and such decoits and their accomplices, and send them to the Presence; that the Aumil must assist and obey the commanding officer of the detachment in the performance of this duty; afterwards all such persons as you may point out to be seized, orders for their seizure shall be issued by me.

A true translation :

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 18th August 1812.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated 7th Shabaun, in answer to my two letters of the 26th Rujub and 5th Shabaun.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that "several decoits and a large sum of money were seized and recovered by the Aumil of Baraitch," &c. it is true, as your Excellency has stated. But a recurrence to my letter to your Excellency, under date the 24th Suffur or 21st of March in the last year, containing a copy of the Magistrate of Goruckpore's proceedings on that occasion, will serve to evince to your Excellency that the success of my application was ascribable rather to the vigilance and zeal of the Magistrate and his officers, in tracing and following the robbers to their usual haunt and asylum in your Excellency's dominions, where they were seen with the stolen property under the charge of Looft Alee Khan, originally suspected and now believed, or rather proved, to be their abettor, than to any measures adopted by your Excellency's Aumil or subjects, with a view to putting a stop to those depredations. Indeed, there is every reason to believe, that if the Magistrate of Goruckpore and his subordinates had not enabled me to lay before your Excellency the accurate and minute information which I submitted on that occasion, the detection of the robbers and recovery of the money could never have taken place, and the failure of all my subsequent applications for the seizure of other decoits in the same district, affords a sufficient proof of the negligence, at least, of your Excellency's officers, if not of their connivance with the offenders.

In reply to your Excellency's remark of the inadequacy of the force of the Aumil to preserve the peace of his district, far more to seize those decoits, and your suggestion of the employment of a British force in Baraitch, I submit that, as a large detachment of the British troops with a battering train has been very recently employed in the district in question, every fortress and ghurry in which was destroyed, and every powerful landholder disarmed, it seems impossible now to conceive or account for the existence of any place of strength, or even secrecy, in the district, as an asylum for robbers or thieves, save the houses and villages of the landholders who have the power of apprehending those offenders, and consequently that the employment of regular troops cannot, on any principle, be required, nor be productive of the object in view, but on the contrary, must rather impede it; because, if the troops be openly employed, the Zemindars who protect the marauders must necessarily be apprized of the measure, and will naturally induce and facilitate the escape of those whom it is intended to seize, and whom the troops can never come up with. My advice to your Excellency is, that the measures which were recently adopted, with a view to the seizure of Budjha Sing, be had recourse to in the district of Baraitch; that proclamations and instructions to the landholders and Aumil of the district, in the terms of those adopted in Mohumdie, be issued without delay in Baraitch, and descriptive rolls of the marauders be furnished to the Aumil, Umer Sing, and that penal bonds be required from all the principal landholders, against their harbouring any of the marauders, in terms corresponding with those which were required from the Zemindars of Mohumdie.

The result of these measures, there seems every reason to hope, will be the speedy apprehension and punishment of all the principal offenders, the protection of the Honourable Company's territory and subjects from the depredations of the banditti in question, and the acknowledgment of obligation, on the part of the British Government, to your Excellency, for your ready acquiescence in its views.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 26th ultimo, enclosing copies and translations of letters which had passed between you and his Excellency the Vizier, on the subject of the robbers secreted in the district of Baraitch, in consequence of the communication and instructions conveyed to you in my despatch of the 5th, from which documents it appears that his Excellency had, at your recommendation, adopted, with regard to those robbers, the same measures that he had been persuaded to adopt with regard to Badjha Sing, and which you conceive to supersede the suggestions contained in your former despatch on the same subject, of the 5th ultimo; and if adopted, also, with respect to the marauders who have lately infested the district of Elahabad, and who find refuge in that of Pertaubghur, might equally supersede the necessity of the measure proposed by the Magistrate of the former district, and referred for the orders of Government in your despatch of the 15th ultimo.

2. It is satisfactory to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to learn, that the Vizier has issued the orders and the proclamation which you proposed; and his Lordship in Council concurs entirely in the expediency of issuing the same in the district of Pertaubghur, as you have suggested, with a view to the apprehension of the marauders who have been in the habit of infesting the district of Elahabad; and you will accordingly be pleased to make the necessary application to the Vizier on the subject. His Lordship in Council leaves it to your discretion, to decide whether or not the adoption of these measures shall supersede the proposition of the Magistrate of Elahabad, described in your despatch of the 15th ultimo, and approved by the Governor-General in Council, as signified to you in my reply to that despatch.

Consultations,

3. It does not, however, appear to his Lordship in Council, that the more general arrangement suggested in the instructions of Government to your address of the 21st ultimo, need be suspended, in consequence of the measures which the Vizier has consented to adopt in the district of Baraich, although you are at liberty to suspend the prescribed proposition, if you should judge it expedient so to do, on grounds which, in that case, you will of course submit to the consideration of Government.

Sir:

1. I am concerned to have occasion to report to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that her Highness the Begum, Shums-oon Nissa, has this day quitted the city of Lucknow, and proceeded to her jagier of Pertaubgunge, at the distance of twelve coss, with the declared intention of remaining there but for a short time, and then proceeding to the Presidency, or to some intermediate station in the Honourable Company's territory, where her residence may hereafter be fixed.

2. The lamentable detail of those unhappy disputes with her brother-in-law, the Vizier, and of her own consequent sufferings and distresses, which have at length impelled her Highness to take this step, in opposition to my earnest remonstrance and advice, needs not to be repeated at present for his Lordship in Council's information.

3. The Vizier sent me a letter to her Highness's address at a late hour of yesterday evening; and as the terms and manner of the letter were conciliatory and kind in the extreme, I accompanied the transmission of it with expressions of advice and entreaty, on my own part, which I trusted would have some effect. Her Highness, after again and again refusing to open or peruse the Vizier's letter, or to receive a communication from him on any subject whatever, at length yielded to my entreaty, received the letter from my messenger, and promised to suspend her journey for a few days at the least, and to communicate her sentiments to me, though not to his Excellency, with a reference to the contents of his letter. To my astonishment and concern, about an hour ago, a message from her Highness, by her Vakeel, informed me of her actual departure towards Pertaubgunge, and of her intention of explaining to me the causes of this movement by letter, immediately on her arrival at that place.

4. His Excellency the Vizier does not appear to be much concerned at her Highness's departure from Lucknow. He must be conscious that his own ungenerous conduct was the only original inducement to this measure, and that a timely change of conduct on his part, in compliance with the earnest and repeated advice of the British Government and its representative, would have sufficed to prevent her Highness from executing this design. As matters stand, he may perhaps consider her departure, after receiving his letter of last night, to form the ground of a solid argument against the truth of all her former complaints, and as a vindication of his own conduct towards her in the opinion of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, which is of course the principal object in his view.

5. The transmission of his Excellency's answer to the Governor-General's letter, which I received on the 26th ultimo, as reported in my despatch of yesterday's date, has been suspended by his Excellency's desire, for the purpose of revisal and reconsideration. I shall forward a copy of it, and a copy of my remarks on the tenor of it, submitted to his Excellency on the 29th ultimo, to the secretary in the Persian Department, for his Lordship in Council's information.

6. With a reference to the ultimate resolution of her Highness the Begum, after spending some time in her jagier, it seems to me to be advisable and conducive to the happiness and peace, not only of her own mind but of her brother's, if if a cordial reconciliation cannot be effected between them, that her Highness be permitted to reside in some one of the principal cities within the Honourable Company's territory; and I foresee little, if any, difficulty, in inducing the Vizier to consent to this measure, or to the subordinate arrangements connected with it, having a reference to her Highness's maintenance, which is of course a burthen on this Government wherever her Highness may reside.

7. In the case of the Begum's proceeding towards the Presidency, or of her protracted residence in the jagier, I propose detaching a guard of the Honourable Company's troops to attend and protect her Highness on her journey, or during her stay in the jagier. The propriety, and indeed the necessity of this measure, with a reference to her Highness's rank, as well as to the safety of her person, are apparent, and no objection to this measure can be expected on the part of the Vizier.

Letter

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 1st instant, on the subject of her Highness Shums-oon Nissa Begum's retreat to her jagier, and her solicitude to take up her abode within the territories of the Honourable Company.

2. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council deeply laments the failure of all the earnest and repeated endeavours which, aided by direct applications on the part of this Government, you have employed, to produce such an alteration in the conduct of the Vizier towards her, as by removing the distresses to which she has been so long subjected by the injustice and cruelty of his Excellency, would have removed her desire to emigrate.

3. If, as appears to be the case, all hope of a reconciliation between the Vizier and the Begum is extinguished, his Lordship in Council concurs in your suggestion, that she be permitted to reside at some one of the cities within the Honourable Company's territories, and is of opinion that Patna would be the most convenient. Under this arrangement, it will remain to make the necessary arrangements for her subsistence; and his Lordship in Council is disposed to render those arrangements, as far as may be practicable, agreeable to her wishes.

4. In a letter dated the 27th October 1802, your predecessor, the late Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, transmitted an earnest application from the Begum for permission to proceed to Kerbulla, and she at that time proposed that the collections from her jagier should be made by her own servants, subject to the authority and guidance, or in other words, under the guarantee of the British Government, and that after paying such salaries as she should appoint, the balance should be remitted to her monthly, or annually, through the officers of that Government. She proposed, also, that the provisions supplied for her use from the Vizier's kitchen should be commuted for an annual payment in money, and the amount be remitted to her.

5. The whole of the Begum's requests were complied with, as appears by the reply of the 13th November 1802 to the late Resident's letter, above mentioned; but the Begum's relinquishment of her design precluded the agitation of the question with the Nawaub Vizier.

6. The Governor-General in Council would not object to a similar arrangement on the present occasion; but the consent of the Vizier would be necessary, and it is probable that his Excellency would be disinclined to admit the intervention of the proposed guarantee.

7. A preferable arrangement would be, to commute the jagier for a stipend equal to its produce, his Excellency paying the amount regularly into your treasury, and the collector of the station at which the Begum may reside, paying the same to her by fixed instalments from his. To this arrangement, on the other hand, hand, the Begum might object; but you may not, perhaps, find it difficult to overcome her objections. You are authorized, however, to adjust the mode of providing for her subsistence either way, and the adjustment of it is accordingly left to your discretion; although you will endeavour, preferably, to carry the second suggested arrangement into effect.

8. I am directed to add, that it is by no means advisable, nor, under the resolution now adopted, can it for any purpose be necessary, that the Begum should proceed, as she appears to have intended, to the Presidency; and, therefore, if she should still entertain that design, you will dissuade her from carrying it into effect.

9. His Lordship in Council entirely approves your having furnished her with an escort of the Honourable Company's troops, to attend and protect her Highness on her journey to, and during her continuance in her jagier, and you are, of course, authorized to furnish her with an escort on her journey to the station at which she is to reside within the British territories.

10. When his Lordship in Council shall be apprized of the result of your proceedings under these instructions, such orders as may be necessary, will be issued to the civil officers at the place of her destined residence.

11. Your despatch of the 31st ultimo, to which the fifth paragraph of your letter now acknowledged refers, has not yet been received.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, dated the 21st and 28th ultimo, and to transmit to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council, the enclosed copy of a letter, on the subject of those despatches, which I have addressed to his Excellency the Vizier.

2. At a personal conference with his Excellency on the morning of the 12th instant, I took pains to convince him of the essential benefits to be derived by both States from the arrangement prescribed by your dispatches, and suggested in my letter to his Excellency, the draft of which I submitted to him on that occasion. The Vizier desired the letter to be sent to him immediately, and promised to pay due attention to its contents, and to the further remarks on the subject of it which I submitted at our conference. My present opinion is, that his Excellency will readily concur in the measure of stationing a portion of our troops on the frontier of the district of Pertaubghur, but that his Excellency will start many objections to the other part of the arrangement proposed, namely, that of a general licence to the commanding-officers of our troops for the seizure of marauders in his dominions, without previous reference on every occasion to himself.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

Some time ago, Mr. Fortescue, the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, with the view of endeavouring to put a stop to the very serious and alarming depredations committed in the district under his charge, by gangs of marauders and banditti finding refuge in the frontier districts of your Excellency's territory, suggested to me an apparently efficient, and in all respects an unobjectionable arrangement, to be carried into effect with your Excellency's knowledge and concurrence, namely, that of stationing a small portion of the British troops in some convenient position on the frontier of the district of Pertaubghur, to watch the motions of the marauders, and to profit by every opportunity of seizing their persons, as well as to deter the surrounding Zemindars from harbouring them or affording them assistance.

Although satisfied, in my own mind, of the wisdom and propriety of this arrangement, and assured of your Excellency's cordial concurrence in the views and motives with which it was proposed, I delayed submitting it to your Excellency till I should refer it for the consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and obtain a communication of his Lordship's sentiments regarding it.

Having now had the honour of receiving his Lordship in Council's commands on the subject, I offer, with additional confidence, the following respectful suggestions for your Excellency's mature consideration. It is obvious that the prevention of depredations in the Honourable Company's dominions, and occasionally also in your Excellency's, by persons finding refuge in this country, or on the common frontier of the two States, and the seizure and punishment of such offenders, must on general principles form an object of great interest and mutual importance to both States, and that in as far as the subjects of our Government may be supposed to be the principal sufferers by those depredations, and the chief asylum of the marauders to be found within your Excellency's territory, your Excellency must be peculiarly desirous of the accomplishment of the object in view. Now experience has fully convinced us, that your Excellency's repeated and most positive orders to the officers and subjects of your Government for the seizure of the marauders in question, and against their finding an asylum in your territory, are inadequate to the purpose proposed, since the atrocities of the banditti have increased instead of being put a stop to in any degree; and it follows, as a necessary consequence, that some new and more effectual arrangement should be devised, and that your Excellency should cheerfully concur in the execution of that arrangement, if it be unobjectionable on any other grounds. The arrangement proposed by the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, and approved by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as being in fact the only efficient or beneficial plan to be devised, must, therefore, I am satisfied, receive your Excellency's entire approbation, and your assistance in carrying it into effect.

I therefore propose to your Excellency, that a portion of the Honourable Company's troops, now stationed at Belagath, in your Excellency's district of Pertaubghur, be detached to a convenient station on the frontier of that district, and there cantoned for a season, or permanently, as circumstances may suggest, and that your Excellency's Aumil of Pertaubghur be directed to furnish ground and materials for a small cantonment on that frontier, in a position to be hereafter selected by the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad. An arrangement similar to this, having reference to the marauder, Budjha Sing, had effect, as your Excellency knows, for a considerable period of time, on the frontier of Khyrabad and Mohumdie.

As connected with the above arrangement, and peculiarly conducive to its success, I further propose to your Excellency, under the orders of his Lordship in Council, that the officer in command of the detachment to be posted on the frontier of Pertaubghur, and all English officers commanding military posts in the frontier districts of your Excellency's dominions, be furnished with general instructions, on their receipt of authentic intelligence from their own spies, or from those of the Magistrates of contiguous districts in our territory, that any of the notorious marauders whose seizure may be desired, are concealed at a village or place within a short distance from their station, to march immediately and secretly to that place, for the purpose of surprizing and apprehending such marauders, and to be guided in communicating this intention to your Excellency's Aumils and landholders, by the necessity of requiring, and probability of receiving, their assistance in the accomplishment of the object in view. Your Excellency will, of course, be pleased to convey such general orders to your Aumils on the subject of this arrangement, corresponding with the instructions above described, as to your Excellency's wisdom may seem proper. It seems almost superfluous, on my part, to explain to your Excellency the grounds of manifest justice and necessity on which this arrangement has been suggested.

Your Excellency's cordial desire and earnest solicitude for the seizure and punishment of the marauders who infest the Company's territory, by means of the refuge which they find in your dominions, have been repeatedly and solemnly avowed, nay, exemplified on several occasions, by the terms of the orders and proclamations which have been issued to your officers and subjects, at my particular desire. Yet, at the same time, it is sufficiently proved, that neither the hope of reward nor the dread of punishment, as held out in those orders and proclamations, has had the effect of preventing your Excellency's Zemindars in Pertaubghur, and in Mohumdie and Palee, as well as also in the province of Baraitch, from concealing and protecting the marauders, and from apprizing them and facilitating their escape, on every occasion of the employment of British Troops for their seizure; and, consequently, as it must be obvious to your Excellency that the plan which is now proposed is the only efficient plan for effecting the seizure of the marauders, I cannot entertain a doubt of your ready concurrence in this arrangement, and your assistance in giving it effect. The position of the new cantonment on the frontier of Pertaubghur shall hereafter be suggested to your Excellency.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch, under date the 19th instant, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copies and translations of two further letters which have passed on that subject between his Excellency the Vizier and me. I take this opportunity of acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated the 11th instant, in answer to my despatch of the 26th ultimo, which suggested, for the consideration of the Government, the substitution of another arrangement for that prescribed by your despatches of the 21st and 28th ultimo, and which suggestion has now, to a certain extent, received his Lordship in Council's approbation.

2. Being satisfied, however, in my own mind, after mature deliberation on the circumstances which induced my suggestion in my despatch of the 26th ultimo, and on the former proceedings of this Government, which suggested to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council the necessity of a still more efficient arrangement for the accomplishment of the object in view, as prescribed by your despatches above noticed, that the latter arrangement involved many more solid and more permanent advantages than the former, while they were perfectly consistent with each other, I have deemed it to be my duty, as his Lordship in Council will perceive, not only to propose the arrangement in question to the Vizier, but to use every argument that occurred to me for the removal of his Excellency's objections to a measure which that arrangement involved.

3. The partial success of my endeavours hitherto, and the probability of their total success hereafter, will be made known to his Lordship in Council by a perusal of the documents which are enclosed.

4. I have great satisfaction in reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that four of the principal decoits who were secreted in the district of Baraitch, and for whose apprehension rewards had been offered in behalf of the British Government, in the proclamations issued at my desire, have been seized by the Aumil of Baraitch, in obedience to the orders of the Vizier, and delivered over to me for trial. They shall be despatched to the Zillah court of Sarun without any delay. Lootf Alee Khan, Zemindar of Atrawla, the notorious protector and abettor of those marauders, has also been apprehended at Fyzabad, in compliance with my requisition to her Highness the Bhow Begum, at his Excellency's the Vizier's desire.

I have received your letter of the 4th of Rumzaun (12th instant). You state that "some time ago Mr. Fortescue, the judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, with the view of endeavouring to put a stop to the many serious depredations committed in the district under his charge, by gangs of marauders and banditti finding refuge in the frontier districts of my territory," &c. &c. (recapitulate.)

As the extirpation of marauders and banditti from the territories of both States is an object of importance to both, and would afford me infinite pleasure, I do not object to the plan which you propose for a portion of the Honourable Company's troops stationed at Belagath, being detached to the frontier of the district of Pertaubghur, for such a time as may be found necessary, in the same manner as detachments have heretofore, in cases of emergency, been posted at certain places on the frontier of my country, for the execution of services of the nature described; because the troops to be so stationed will not only seize or destroy the marauders and banditti of the Honourable Company's territory, but also those in the territory belonging to me, who constantly harass and distress the subjects of my Government, and the arrangement proposed will thus become of equal advantage to both States. Whenever you inform me of the position chosen for the cantonment, the requisite orders shall be issued to my Aumils.

With regard to your further proposal, that "all the officers commanding at military posts in the frontier districts of my dominions be furnished with general instructions on the receipt of authentic intelligence," &c. (recapitulate) the state of the matter is this: As it was formerly made generally known that the British troops would not be employed against the public debtors or refractory subjects of this State, and consequently many Zemindars in balance to Government withhold the revenue and resist my authority, the employment of the British troops stationed in my country, as now proposed, for apprehending insurgents, under the direction of the Judges, in the frontier districts of the British territories, and at the discretion of the British officers, will create a general belief among the people that I possess no power or authority, even in the execution of such measures as this, and that I have transferred the whole of my authority to the English gentlemen. This belief will tend to multiply disorders and disturbance, and a system of resistance and withholding the revenues revenues will be pursued, to the total disregard of the authority of my Aumils. It is a matter of surprize, that the British troops which, according to treaty, are stationed in my country, for the sole purpose of punishing insurgents and preserving the tranquillity of my dominions, should not be employed for those purposes, but be appointed to seize robbers, marauders, and banditti, who infest the British territory alone, and that all the measures now proposed should have for their object merely the seizure and extirpation of the offenders against that Government, while no measure is proposed for apprehending or punishing those against mine. I beg you to consider, that while the employment of your troops for the settlement of my country, and the punishment of insurgents, defaulters, and public debtors is suspended, and while even the seizure of criminals against my Government, who find refuge in your territory, is delayed, if such measures as those which you propose be adopted for the seizure of offenders against the peace of the British Government, what answer can I give to such a proposal? I am surprised, indeed, beyond measure by this proposal. Friendship and amity demand that the same means which are employed against delinquents in the British territory, be also recurred to in mine.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 25th September 1812, 17th Rumzaun 1227.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter dated the 11th Rumzaun (19th instant), in answer to mine of the 12th instant (4th Rumzaun); and with a view to the execution of the first part of the arrangement proposed, in which your Excellency has been pleased to acquiesce, namely, the detachment of a portion of our troops from Belagath to be stationed in a convenient position on the frontier of Pertaubghur, I have written to the Magistrate of Elahabad, whose answer shall be communicated to your Excellency when I receive it.

With a reference to the second part of the proposed arrangement, namely, that of furnishing general instructions to the commanding officers of our troops at frontier stations, for the seizure of such robbers and criminals as may be concealed in the neighbourhood of their posts, although the doubts and apprehensions which would seem to have arisen in your Excellency's mind be in my judgment totally imaginary, and very easily to be removed, and although I propose to offer some suggestions to your Excellency with this view in the sequel, yet as the proposal was originally offered to you under the orders of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, I shall deem it to be my duty to submit a copy and translation of your Excellency's answer for his Lordship in Council's consideration and further commands, before I renew my request of your Excellency's concurrence in the arrangement.

For the present, I content myself with remarking that the general knowledge to which your Excellency alludes, of a refusal on the part of the British Government to employ its troops in the punishment of rebels and criminals of your Excellency's State, if such be indeed prevalent, is entirely erroneous, and totally inconsistent with the truth. I have already repeatedly assured your Excellency, and do now again, with a view to your confidence, declare, that the suppression, seizure, and punishment of rebels, criminals, and offenders of every description, against your Excellency's person and Government, whether in your own or in the Honourable Company's territory, are objects, for the accomplishment of which the exertions of your well-wisher and of the British troops are, on every occasion of necessity, at your Excellency's perfect devotion, and ready to be zealously employed, as they have been on every former occasion; nay, that the detachment to be now stationed on the frontier of Pertaubghur, as your Excellency has very justly observed, "will not only seize or destroy " the marauders of the Honourable Company's territory, but also those in your

It would seem, from the above quotation, that your Excellency is not only fully aware, but perfectly satisfied, of the beneficial effects to be derived from the general arrangement proposed to you; and under this impression, I must confess myself much at a loss to account for the subsequent expressions of doubt and alarm, inconsistent with the foregoing quotation, which would seem to have arisen in your mind, with a reference to one part of the arrangement indispensable to its general success.

The natural and obvious distinction between rebels and felons, the subjects of either State, and the civil debtors of either, cannot, I am certain, have escaped your Excellency's penetration and observance. For the recovery of civil debts or pecuniary demands from the landholders or other defaulters of this description, the employment of a military force is unnecessary, and unknown in the British dominions; and it is the earnest and anxious wish of the British Government, that the adoption of the system of reform proposed to your Excellency, or of any other system to be devised by your Excellency's wisdom with similar views, should quickly and happily lead to a similar result in your dominions, and that the revenues of your Excellency's country should hereafter flow into your treasury, without any necessity, as heretofore, for its collection by military power. But until that happy period shall arrive, I have no hesitation in repeating to your Excellency, what I have submitted on many former occasions, that for the realization and enforcement, if necessary, of every just demand and decree of your Excellency's Government, under the provision and in the manner already so often described, my most zealous exertions, and the active operations of our troops, shall be ever at your Excellency's disposal. With the explanation here submitted, I conceive that every ground of surprize and alarm at the proposal offered for your consideration, should cease in your Excellency's mind.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, under date the 28th ultimo, enclosing copies and translations of two letters which have passed between you and his Excellency the Vizier, on the subject of the proposed mode of employing detachments of the British troops, stationed in his Excellency's country, for the apprehension of banditti which infest the Honourable Company's territory, and find refuge in the former.

2. The reply which you returned to the Vizier's extraordinary letter of the 20th ultimo is entirely approved by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, but the tenor of some part of his Excellency's observations appears to his Lordship in Council to require more special notice on the part of this Government.

3. The Vizier, in objecting to the employment of our troops for the apprehension of robbers and banditti, who acquire the means of committing depredations and murder within the British territories by the asylum afforded to them in his Excellency's country, entirely loses sight of the positive obligation imposed on his Government, and of his disinclination or inability to fulfil that obligation. The measure in question was proposed solely in consequence of the experienced inefficacy of reiterated applications for the due exertion of his Excellency's authority, in effecting the apprehension or expulsion of the marauders; and the observations contained in my letter of the 8th of May last, demonstrate that, in applying for his Excellency's consent to the arrangement described in my despatch of the 11th ultimo, this Government fell far short of the exercise of its undoubted rights. It is, moreover, a subject of just offence to the British Government, that the Vizier has withheld his consent, not on the ground of a real, or even a professed resolution to supersede the necessity of the proposed arrangement, by the due exertion of his authority over his own officers, but on the plea, or rather the unfounded imputation, of a declared design on our part, to refuse the aid of our troops in the execution of the services prescribed by the stipulations of existing engagements, and of our declining to employ a military force for the coercion of debtors and defaulters, which forms no part of the obligations imposed on the British Government by those engagements.

4. His Lordship in Council now deems it necessary that you should explain to the Vizier the principles described in my letter of the 8th of May last, above referred to, intimating to him, at the same time, in the event of his Excellency's continuing to manifest his aversion to concur in the prosecution of effectual measures for the redress of the grievous evils of which we have so long and so justly complained, that the British Government will be compelled to pursue the steps best calculated for the attainment of that object, without reference to his Excellency's authority. You will also make known to him the surprize and displeasure with which the Governor-General in Council has perused the offensive observations contained in his letter to your address of the 20th ultimo.

5. His Lordship in Council has received with great satisfaction the information communicated in the last paragraph of your despatch, of the seizure of four of the principal decoits who were secreted in the district of Baraich, and of the apprehension of Lootf Alee Khan, the Zemindar of Atrowla, the chief protector and abettor of the marauders.

Sir:

* 1. A part of the contents of your letter, under date the 11th ultimo, having been communicated to her Highness the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed translation of a letter which I have received from her Highness in reply, and in which his Lordship in Council will be pleased to observe that it is the wish of her Highness the Begum to proceed in the first instance to Elahabad, with the view of fixing her future residence there, if the climate shall be found to agree with her, and there be no other objection to this measure.

2. As I am not aware of any material objection to a compliance with the wish of the Begum in this respect, I take the liberty of suggesting that the necessary orders on the subject of her Highness's reception in a suitable manner at Elahabad, be issued to the civil officers of that Zillah.

3. I have been induced to postpone the discussion with his Excellency the Vizier, of the several arrangements connected with the Begum's departure, which are treated of in your despatch above noticed, chiefly by a contemplation of the facilities and advantages to be derived in this discussion, from the tenor of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's expected replies to his Excellency's and her Highness's letters, conveyed in my despatches of the 9th and 12th ultimo to the Persian Department, and partly by the visit to this capital of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and its attendant ceremonies, which have necessarily

from the Begum.

Your kind letter, received at the moment of expectation, has added to my comfort.

The perusal of the sentiments which the Right Honourable the Governor-General has expressed, in terms corresponding with the distinguished qualities of his Lordship's mind and with the friendship that subsisted between the late Vizier and the British Government, having reference to my statement of the causes of my disgust with my situation in this country, has had the effect, like the breath of the Messiah, of inspiring new life into my feeble frame. I expect still greater benefits from the friendly exertions to be adopted by you, who know all my rights and wishes, and whose uniformly kind attention to me hitherto might form a model of sincere friendship to the age. How shall I express in writing all my obligations for the interest you have so humanely taken in my concerns? They are beyond the power of the tongue or the pen to convey. Truly the great artizan of nature has nicely suited you with the habit of discovering truth and acquiring a knowledge of the just principles of human conduct, and the preceptor of the universe has taught you how to appreciate what is just and worthy among mankind. Being persuaded that you will uniformly employ all practicable means for the maintenance of my dignity, and to promote my welfare and happiness, I shall, in compliance with your opinion and advice, wait some time longer for the reply of the Right Honourable the Governor-General to my letter, as well as for the purpose of adjusting certain other matters of business, and I trust that, through your kind aid, the interval will be sufficient to produce the accomplishment of all the remaining objects of my anxiety and desire.

As it is my intention that the practice of receiving ready-dressed victuals from the kitchen of the Vizier should be discontinued from the 1st of Shuwaul (8th instant), I request that you will inquire into this matter, and obtain an allowance in cash in lieu of it for me, upon the principle established during the Residency of Colonel Scott, in order that wherever I may happen to reside I may receive this allowance in ready money, through the medium of the British Government. Further, I request you to receive for me the money accruing from my possessions in Delhi since the accession of my brother, Saadut Alee Khan, till the present year, together with an order addressed to the farmers of those possessions for their surrender to my servants without delay. If a delay occur in the settlement of the other points, it will be of no importance, as through the interest you feel for me they may be easily adjusted in my absence.

With regard to what you have written about the remaining objects, although the end in view might be attained by means of your letters, or a confidential agent, yet as your coming out to me yourself will afford relief to the distressed state of my mind, and give opportunities of conveying information which cannot be afforded by letter, you must consider it indispensable to gratify me with a visit to bid me a personal adieu, for I have many subjects to converse with you on that I cannot communicate by letter. I beg of you also to understand, with a reference to the route of my march and ultimate place of my retirement, that it is my intention after leaving the jagier to reside awhile at Elahabad, where the climate and the country are alike pleasant. Should they agree with my health, my object will be attained by fixing my residence there, but otherwise I shall proceed to Patna and fix my abode in that city.

What I formerly wrote to you, of inconvenience sustained by the want of carriage for my baggage, &c., was not intended to give you unnecessary trouble.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
2 July 1813.

If my own people be unable to procure the necessary carriage for my effects, I shall of course address myself to you, whose resources can supply every deficiency. The communication of the intended day of my departure will depend on your reply to this letter; let me therefore have the pleasure of soon hearing from you on the subject of it.

My departure from my jagier has been fixed for the 7th of the month of Zeekaad (13th or 14th of November next), and the necessary preparations for my march are now nearly concluded.

I beg that you will report this circumstance immediately to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in order that a consideration of the friendship which subsisted between the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah and the British Government may induce his Lordship to issue such orders to the officers of his Government at Elahabad, as may ensure my reception in a suitable manner on the frontier of that district, and such treatment uniformly, after my arrival at that station, as will banish all remembrance of the vexation which has heretofore corroded my mind.

1. I have great satisfaction in reporting to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that I have this day received two petitions, bearing the seals of fifteen of the principal ladies of the Khoord Muhl, who reside in the Imam Baree of this city, and written with the concurrence of all the others, save a few who are publicly supported by the Vizier, expressive of their earnest desire to be permitted to return to Fyzabad, and claiming merely a small increase of their allowance, which I have ever considered to be reasonable, and which I have no doubt of her Highness the Bow Begum's disposition to grant to those ladies from the surplus revenue of the jaidad. Corresponding letters from those ladies, addressed to Tuhseen Alee Khan, have been received and submitted to my perusal.

2. The tenor and contents of those petitions, translations of which are enclosed, and the circumstances under which they have been prepared and transmitted to me, have so obvious a tendency to develope the extraordinary and unworthy intrigues by which the clamour in the Khoord Muhl was excited, the respectable Nazir superseded, and the authority of her Highness the Begum suspended for a time, that I deem it to be totally unnecessary to offer any further remarks on the singular conduct of the Vizier, which has occasioned so much trouble to the Government.

3. I intend to have the honour of breakfasting with his Excellency to-morrow, and I shall use my best endeavours to bring this vexatious discussion to a final and satisfactory adjustment.

Enclosure.

By our unhappy destinies we were brought here and are dying of hunger. In the hope of an increase of salary, and of Siccass for Rikabee rupees, we exposed ourselves in the plains and came hither. Nearly four months have elapsed, and we are just as we were when we arrived ; not one of our desires has been accomplished. May God preserve you one hundred and thirty years in health and prosperity over our heads. We beg that you will obtain for us from his Excellency the Siccass for Rikabee rupees, and an increase of our pay, that we may return to Fyzabad without delay. To whom can we address ourselves but to you?

From the same, (with additional seals, and conveying an arzee to the address of the Vizier).

Enclosure.

We have no protector, relation, nor friend, save the Honourable Company and the Nawaub Vizier.

We left Fyzabad, uncalled by his Excellency, in the hope of an increase of pay and of Siccass for Rikabee rupees, which we claim as our right. Four months have elapsed, and not one of our desires has been accomplished. All mankind have justice from the Honourable Company : we also are hopeful that, through the justice of the Honourable Company, our petitions may be heard, our full pay with an increase and Sicca rupees may be given to us, and that we be permitted to depart to Fyzabad.

May God long preserve the Company. The Mohurram is fast approaching.

1. In continuation of the subject of my letter under date the 28th instant, I have now the pleasure of reporting the actual departure towards Fyzabad of the whole of the ladies of the Khoord Muhl, with the exception, as I believe, of four or five, in seeming harmony with each other, and perfect reconciliation with the Nazir, Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan. A copy and translation of an acknowledgment, under the seals of a number of those ladies, expressive of their perfect satisfaction with the Nazir and future submission to his authority, which was voluntarily prepared and transmitted to me at a late hour of yesterday evening, are submitted for the information of the Government.

2. This truly satisfactory result of a most unjust and unwarrantable proceeding on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, and of a consequent vexatious and long protracted discussion between his Excellency and me, cannot fail to be agreeable to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council. It has been brought about chiefly, in my opinion, by the manifest justice of the cause which his Lordship in Council was pleased to espouse, in the first instance, in compliance with my suggestion, and partly perhaps by the temperate firmness and perseverance with which the cause of justice has been maintained, in opposition to base intrigue and to groundless clamour, uniformly detected, investigated, and exposed, with a seeming disregard of their consequences, during a period of several months.

3. His Excellency the Vizier has been pleased, from what secret motive, or with what degree of sincerity I know not, to express his highest satisfaction at the departure of those ladies from Lucknow. He has furnished suitable conveyance for them and their servants to Fyzabad; and after declining, on some frivolous pretext, to furnish a guard of his own sepoys for their protection, he has readily acquiesced in my design to afford them the protection of a small escort of the Honourable Company's troops, which has proceeded with them accordingly to Fyzabad.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant with enclosures, and beg leave to acquaint you that I immediately addressed a letter to Mr. Fortescue, the Judge and Magistrate at Elahabad, informing him that a complete company of sepoy, with a Havildar, Naick, and twelve troopers, would march as yesterday, under the command of Lieutenant Ellison, to Kulla Bhudownee or Bhedowlee, agreeably to his desire, and with instructions to conform to such orders or directions as he might deem necessary to send to that officer. I also requested Mr. Fortescue to send to Mr. Ellison two or three intelligent natives, to identify the persons whom he wishes to have apprehended.

I understand the offenders, Surnam Sing and Kishen Sing, are fugitives skulking about from village to village, I therefore judge that the detachment placed under the command of Lieutenant Ellison will be perfectly adequate to any duty he may have to perform; and as the frontier of his Excellency's country on this side is not more than one march of eight or nine coss from hence, I cannot think it will be necessary to keep a detachment permanently stationed (as suggested by Mr. Fortescue,) in the neighbourhood of Kulla Bhedowlee, since detachments might be sent out secretly from this post to seize any offender within a forced march, with better prospect of success than if stationed near the frontier, where they would be constantly watched and unable to make any movement without its being immediately known. Certain banditti, at the head of which are persons of the names of Surnam Sing, Kishen Sing, and Boodie, have been in the practice of plundering in the district of Elahabad, and of evading apprehension by retiring into the territory of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. These banditti are supposed to harbour, and occasionally to assemble in large parties, preparatory to committing their depredations, in the village of Kulla Bhedowlee, in the purgunnah of Bel Khur and zemindary of Roy Zubber Sing.

Letter from
Lieutenant-Colonel
Frith.

The object of the detachment which has been placed under your command, by order of the Resident of Lucknow, is to put a stop to those depredations, and seize, if possible, the ringleaders and disperse those banditti; you will, therefore, proceed with your detachment to-morrow and encamp in the vicinity of the above-named village, choosing a convenient and secure position. Mr. Fortescue, the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, will send persons to you to identify and point out the persons to be apprehended, and you are to obey all orders and instructions which you may receive from time to time from him. You are also to correspond with him direct, and communicate such information as you may receive regarding the people to be apprehended, and such measures as you may adopt for this purpose, reporting occasionally all occurrences to me, for the purpose of forwarding for the information of the Resident at Lucknow and his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier.

You will be careful to keep your party at all times alert and on their guard; and though I think your force fully adequate to any duties you may have to perform, yet if you should, in the execution of the orders of the Magistrate of Elahabad, deem a reinforcement necessary, let me know without loss of time, and I will furnish it, as far as I am able, from the slender force at this post, since I would wish to leave as little to chance as possible.

As you are to be guided chiefly by the instructions which you will receive from the Magistrate at Elahabad, it is unnecessary for me to enter into any further details; I shall, therefore, conclude by observing, that I have perfect confidence in your best exertions being used to bring this service to a successful termination.

Lieutenant Ellison.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that I have made every enquiry in my power in order to gain intelligence regarding the banditti, both by means of men and letters, but without effect.

I have had ten men belonging to Mr. Fortescue, the Magistrate, out for the last eight days, but they cannot gain the least information respecting the persons I am in quest of.

I have the honour of transmitting to you two letters, which were received in answer to two which I have written for the purpose of getting information, one from Dewan Zubber Sing, the other from Isharee Bukhsh, and you will see by them that they are ignorant of any such people being in this part of the country. I also beg leave to inform you, that I enquired from the different villagers round, and they say that they were in this part of the country about four months ago, but they have not heard anything of them since ; and I beg leave to observe, that if they were in this part of the country, Mr. Fortescue's men would be likely to find them out, on account of their local knowledge.

I beg leave to state, that from its being unlikely that we can acquire any further information with respect to these men, I think the detention of the detachment at this place cannot be attended with any beneficial consequences, as the country around appears perfectly peaceable and quiet.

To Major John Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you that Lieutenant Ellison, commanding the detachment at Kulla Bhedowlee, sent in yesterday three Chupprassies belonging to Mr. Fortescue, the Judge and Magistrate at Elahabad, giving information that two of the offenders whom Mr. Fortescue wished to have seized, viz. Sookha Sing and Bisna Sing, were in a small village called Gomaun Sing-ke Poorwa, near Nowrengabad, and about five coss from hence, and that in consequence of this information I detached last night a company of sepoys and a small party of cavalry, under the command of Lieutenant Orlando Stubbs, for the purpose of seizing those offenders.

Lieutenant Stubbs returned this morning with his detachment, having succeeded in securing one of the offenders, Bisna Sing; the other, Sookha Sing, having left the village yesterday forenoon, in consequence, as the villagers report, of a quarrel with some of them, attended by four or five followers. They could not tell the direction he took, but expressed great regret that they did not know of the party's coming, as in that case they would have seized and secured him before he left the village.

Lieutenant Stubbs executed this duty with address and entirely to my satisfaction, and he reports that the villagers behaved remarkably well, and assisted with the greatest readiness in securing the offender.

As the man who has been seized is an inhabitant of the Elahabad district, I purpose sending him over with a party which will proceed for treasure in a few days, and delivering him to the Magistrate, which I hope will be approved.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of the 4th and 19th ultimo with their enclosures, and to inform you that the Governor-General in Council has received with satisfaction your report of the conclusion, with the sanction and concurrence of the Nawaub Vizier, of the arrangement for the protection of the frontier of the district of Elahabad against marauders from his Excellency's territory, and the success with which it has been already attended, by the apprehension of one of the principal offenders.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council, &c.

My Lord :

1. His Excellency the Vizier having been pleased to address a letter to your Lordship, in which his Excellency complains of my conduct as your Lordship's representative at his Court, I deem this to be a suitable occasion of addressing your Lordship directly, and of expressing my humble reliance on the wisdom and justice of the Government for a just and impartial decision on the merits of his Excellency's complaint.

2. That

2. That the nature of the negotiations and discussions which have arisen at the court of Lucknow, during the last two years, should have excited the resentment of the Vizier against the organ of your Lordship's instructions, and of the accomplishment of your just views, cannot be a matter of surprise: yet a formal and serious complaint, of the nature of that which is before me, was certainly as unexpected on my part, as the object of his Excellency's letter, and the principal circumstances which are stated in it, will appear to your Lordship, I trust, to be evasive and destitute of foundation.

3. With a view to facilitate and expedite the decision of your Lordship in Council on the subject of his Excellency's complaint, I have the honour of submitting for your perusal a verbal translation of his letter, with translations of all its enclosures, and a translation of a statement in answer, which I have presented to the Vizier, for the purpose of enabling him to reply to it, if the contents shall suggest a reply. This statement contains, as I have mentioned in it, the whole of the substance, a correct recapitulation of the language, and a faithful description of the manner, of my discourse to his Excellency the Vizier, at our conference on the 19th of December. Having previously written notes for the conference, in conformity with my uniform practice on occasions of the smallest importance, it is impossible that I should have erred from forgetfulness, and I am unconscious of a design to deceive.

4. The tenor of the instructions of Government, conveyed to me by the chief Secretary's despatch under date the 23d of October, and communicated to his Excellency the Vizier at the commencement of the conference referred to, was of a nature to create apprehension in the mind of a person disposed to persist in those unwarrantable proceedings, which gave rise to your Lordship's resolution regarding the eventual employment of the British troops in this country without reference to the authority of the Vizier.

5. It is possible, though by no means my opinion, that the communication of this resolution, with the inferences to be naturally deduced from it, and which were certainly pointed to by me as applicable to some other questions under discussion, might give rise to his Excellency's misconstruction of the remaining parts of my discourse; and a remark of an equivocal nature, which I now recollect him to have made towards the conclusion of our conference, would give ground for this supposition. After hearing a translation of the substance of the Chief Secretary's letter above noticed, and my comments on the tenor of that letter, as applicable to the questions in dispute between his Excellency and her Highness the Begum, his Excellency, in a taunting manner, observed, "You appear to have settled every thing, and of course I have nothing to say;" or words to that purpose; to which I immediately replied, without adverting to the drift of his remark, that in as far as depended on me, I had placed them in a train of adjustment, and should be happy when they were finally settled. The conference lasted, however, for some time after this. We conversed on desultory subjects, and parted, as I believed at the time, in perfect harmony with each other: nay, an interchange of visits and other friendly observances have passed between us, as usual, since the 19th of December last. A conference took place on the 28th, when the question of the Khoord Muhl was settled to his Excellency's apparent satisfaction, and a passport was promised for Hyder Bukhsh; and, under all these circumstances, your Lordship will readily believe that my receipt of his Excellency's letter, which is now submitted for your perusal, was an occurrence as unexpected on my part, as any that has taken place, in my recollection, since my arrival at the Court of Lucknow.

6. The more probable cause of this complaint, as consistent with and deducible from the Vizier's characteristic evasion, is a conviction in his Excellency's mind that the just views of the Government, and the objects of your Lordship in Council's repeated instructions to me and solemn advice to his Excellency, are no longer to be frustrated or opposed by any arguments that his Excellency can adduce, or by any reasoning on the merits of the questions at issue; and that the equivocal expression of a wish to travel or to relinquish his Government, so frequently resorted to before, is the only remaining expedient to induce your Lordship in Council to abandon your just views, to concede every point that has been argued, and to leave his Excellency at liberty to pursue his schemes of rapacity with the aid of the British power, and to satiate his feelings of resentment against our subjects and faithful dependants who reside within the verge of his control.

from Resident at

7. That the Vizier in reality entertains, or has ever entertained, the most distant idea of travelling beyond the limits of his own territory, is as far from my belief and persuasion, as my knowledge of his Excellency's character, founded on the careful observation and constant experience of years, is in my own judgment necessarily accurate: and I might venture with confidence to predict, that your Lordship's declared consent to his Excellency's proceeding on a pilgrimage, under the provisions which were settled by Lord Wellesley, would be followed by a limitation of his design to the usual hunting excursion, or would lead to its dereliction entirely, as on every former occasion.

8. But on this portion of the subject of his Excellency's letter to your Lordship it were presumption in me to enlarge, since your Lordship's wisdom alone can be competent to decide on the expedience of encouraging or opposing the disposition, pretended or real, of the Vizier, to retire from the government of his country. Of the remaining parts of his letter, in as far as my own conduct is concerned, I have afforded in the statement enclosed what will, I trust, appear to your Lordship to be a full and satisfactory exposition, and will serve to demonstrate beyond a doubt, that I have never at any time transgressed the limits of my positive duty in the execution of your Lordship's commands, nor failed in the observances of respect which are certainly due to his Excellency.

9. The Vizier, if I may credit reports, is already disposed to repent his having made so unjust an accusation. The manner of his messages to me since his transmission of the letter for your Lordship has been fully as conciliatory as before, and I have reason to suppose that a little encouragement on my part would induce the expression of his wish to recall the letter entirely, and to acquiesce in the explanation which I have offered. Yet it is my natural and earnest desire, that his Excellency's complaint should be heard, and that a solemn decision should be passed on the merits of a question of such importance to the credit of my official character and to my future prospects in life, as well as indeed to the security and confidence of every accredited agent at the Court of an Indian prince; since it is obvious that on many occasions of negotiation, like mine with the Vizier, an accusation of intemperance or disrespect may be preferred from malicious and interested motives, to evade, or at least to protract, the accomplishment of the views of the Government, by inducing the recall of its agent, or an investigation into the merits of the charge.

10. Before I conclude this address, I will take the liberty of submitting to your Lordship's humane consideration, the peculiar hardships and oppression to which the native officers and soldiers of the Honourable Company's service, and their numerous families and relations, are subjected daily more and more by the rapacity of the Vizier's Aumils and his Excellency's support of their proceedings. It is the general belief of those Aumils, and a prevalent opinion throughout Oude, that the favour and patronage of the Vizier can be by no means so effectually secured as by distressing the dependants of our Government and harassing them with groundless complaints. The particular case of Mal Tewaree, a Naick in the Twenty-fourth Regiment, which is referred to in the statement enclosed, is one of the most cruel that can be imagined. This unfortunate person, while on duty with his regiment in Lucknow, was informed of the distress of his family, in consequence of the extortion of an Aumil at no great distance from this place, and proceeding on leave of absence from his battalion in the month of July last, had no sooner arrived at his village than he was seized and confined in a fortress, and loaded with the heaviest irons, and the whole of his property confiscated, and converted to the use of the Aumil. The commanding officer in cantonments, when the naick's leave of absence expired, sent a person to enquire for him at his village, and on learning the particulars of his confinement made an application to me for his release. I accompanied my requisition for this purpose to the Vizier with a just and natural request, that the offending Aumil should be punished. He was accordingly, summoned to the Presence, continued in attendance for some days, and was permitted permitted to depart to his district, under a promise, announced to me by the Vizier, of immediate reparation to the complainant. Mal Tewaree has been ever since in attendance at his Excellency's gate or at mine, and the redress of his extraordinary grievance seems now as remote as on the day when it was first represented to his Excellency.

11. A number of other cases, equally in point though not so strong, might be submitted for your Lordship's information; but the above will be sufficient, I conceive, to justify, in your Lordship's opinion, the remarks which I deemed it my duty to offer for the consideration of the Vizier at our conference on the 19th December, which forms the subject of his Excellency's complaint.

From His Excellency the Vizier to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, dated the 1st January 1813.

Letter
from the Vizier.

After the usual compliments:

As your Lordship's sincere well-wisher considers your Lordship to be his kind and sympathizing friend, and knows to a certainty that you are his benefactor, and as it is obvious that the rank of a Prince which your well-wisher possesses has been acquired through the protection and assistance of the Honourable Company alone, for which your well-wisher is grateful to the Company; and as I consider your Lordship to be my kind and sympathizing friend, therefore deeming a representation of certain occurrences here to be indispensable, I write to your Lordship as follows:

After ceding the ceded provinces, which was done for the satisfaction of the English Government, I felt assured that, through the kindness of that Government, my life would be spent in perfect comfort and ease, with full power and security.

By chance unpleasant circumstances have arisen, of which the following is a statement: Major Baillie, in consequence of dissatisfaction with me, for some time past has failed in those observances of respectful consideration in his letters which were practised by the Residents at my Court. He prevented me from going on a hunting excursion. At a recent conference, on Saturday the 14th of Zeehijj (19th December), he observed to me in great anger, that he considered the respectful consideration which he had hitherto shewn to the Presence as improper; that, with regard to certain questions requiring adjustment, my consent was unnecessary; that it behoved him, in compliance with the requisition of the elder Begum, to send his own people and place her in possession of the disputed villages; to send his own people to adjust the complaints of the Honourable Company's sepoys and possess them of their rights, agreeably to their request; and to send a servant of his own to pass Hyder Bukhsh out of the city.

Your well-wisher became very apprehensive in consequence of those observations; and afterwards, on the 16th Zeehijj (21st December), the Resident sent me a letter of that date, containing a declaration, under the seal of Hyder Bukhsh, with a copy of a former letter, dated the 11th Zekaud 1224 (19th December 1809), in answer to a letter from the Presence, copies of all which are now transmitted to your Lordship, and will explain the particulars. It will appear to your Lordship from this letter, that the Resident has plainly falsified your well-wisher's words, and imputed oppression to your well-wisher: whereas, in reality, he himself formerly wrote to me, that if I had any demands against Hyder Bukhsh, he would see them liquidated, otherwise that he would give him leave to depart to his house; and consequently your well-wisher wrote to him a true statement of the case, in compliance with his request, as may be seen by the copies enclosed. Further, your well-wisher never in any way oppressed nor dealt harshly with Hyder Bukhsh, nor ever expressed a wish to this effect to the Resident.

Letter
from the Vizier.

As your Lordship's sincere well-wisher knows no other kind and sympathizing friend in the world than your Lordship, and the power and strength of your well-wisher depend on your Lordship's protection alone, and as the plan here has assumed another appearance, your well-wisher, seeing these matters, has become apprehensive in the extreme.

The wish of the Resident now is to settle all matters in his own way, and merely to apprise me of the settlement; but your well-wisher will never consent to this: and matters have come to such a pitch, that my statements are falsified in every case, and the assertions of others are believed, which is extremely distressing and disagreeable to me.

I can never reconcile myself to the idea of argument and altercation with the Resident on every question that occurs, for I consider this to be totally beyond my power, and I never expected such proceedings from any Resident at my Court. Therefore seeing all those occurrences, I am greatly distressed; and, considering it for my advantage to remove from hence, I am induced to solicit your Lordship's permission to my travelling, and I await your answer to this letter.

Hitherto matters have been carried on through your Lordship's kindness alone; but now, if the veil is to be removed, your well-wisher can do nothing; and therefore I beg your Lordship not to delay an answer to this letter, nor to consider your well-wisher like any of the other Princes, but as obedient to your Lordship at all times, and to treat me with kindness accordingly.

Letter

Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 19th December 1812.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's note, desiring me to submit for your perusal a translation of the orders of the Government regarding the case of Hyder Bukhsh.

The instructions which I received from the Government respecting all the dependents of the late Almass Alee Khan have been repeatedly explained to your Excellency, and a translation is already in your possession. The case, however, of Hyder Bukhsh, and his title to depart from Lucknow, are obviously not of a nature to require the especial notice and orders of the Governor-General in Council. Hyder Bukhsh is unquestionably a subject of the Honourable Company, and an inhabitant of Corah in the British dominions. His connection with Almass Alee Khan occasioned his temporary residence in Lucknow, which he now wishes to quit and to return to his house in the Doab; for which purpose he has obtained a passport under the Right Honourable the Governor-General's signature and seal, which is equivalent to the express order of the Government, for his departure whenever he thinks proper, and no cause for his detention has been shewn. If he be indebted to your Excellency's Government, and your Excellency will be pleased to explain and establish the grounds of your demand, I am ready to order the payment of it; but, otherwise, as I have already submitted to you, I deem myself to be fully authorized to grant him permission to go to his house, which I shall do accordingly, and report the circumstance to Government, with the other particulars of our conference of this morning at the Residency.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 20th December 1812.)

You have stated to me, that if I have any demands against Hyder Bukhsh, I should explain them, in order that you may direct him to liquidate them. The case is this: after the death of Almass Alee Khan this person appeared in the Presence, and represented that he had seventy thousand rupees and a few thousand gold monars, which he was ready to give me for permission to proceed on a pilgrimage. I desired him to remain in attendance with confidence, and shortly

shortly after he applied for the office of Darogha of the Dewan Khana, which I declined to confer on him. Shortly after this he sought the office of Khan-saman, and I gave him a khelat of distinction, on which he presented an arzee promising not to quit Lucknow without my permission, which arzee I showed to Fukeer-ood Deen Ahmud (Mirza Jafer). Since that period I have never distressed him in any manner whatever, and he then commenced his attendance on you, abandoning the Presence entirely.

He was originally a Hindoo, and afterwards became the slave of Almass, who was the slave of the Presence. Fyzoolla, the treasurer, and Gholum Mohummud Toshukchee, keeper of the wardrobe to the late Almass, assert that Hyder Bukhsh has appropriated part of the wealth of Almass; and if this be proved, let Hyder Bukhsh answer to the charge.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 19th December 1809.—11th Zekaud 1224.)

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter * of yesterday's date, stating that your Excellency had desired me to address the Right Honourable the Governor-General respecting Hyder Bukhsh; that I had accordingly done so, and had stated in person to your Excellency the orders of Government in answer, but that, as your Excellency had forgotten the substance of my verbal communication on this subject, you wished me to submit it in writing.

I do not remember that your Excellency ever desired me to address the Government regarding Hyder Bukhsh; but I perfectly well recollect, that on the death of Almass Alee Khan, I admitted, in conversation with your Excellency, your preferable right to the property of the deceased over the claim which the Begum had advanced to it, and pointed out the only unexceptionable, or even reputable means, by which your Excellency could get possession of the property. I also submitted, on that occasion, the whole of the circumstances of the case to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whose commands were communicated to your Excellency, the substance of which is as follows :

“ The Governor-General in Council is unwilling to admit the belief that the “ Vizier will exert the right of sovereigns of Mahometan countries over persons “ in the situation of the late Almass Alee Khan, to the extent of reducing his “ family and dependents to want or distress. Should you, however, have reason “ to apprehend that his Excellency contemplates any measures of severity and “ harshness, you will not hesitate to represent to him, in the most urgent and “ impressive manner, the injustice as well as impolicy of such acts, setting “ before him in the strongest light the injurious consequences to his reputation “ as a Prince, which acts of such unjust severity towards the family of an old “ servant of his house would produce. His Lordship in Council cannot doubt “ that your representation, urged with earnestness and made in the name of the “ Government, will produce a proper effect on the mind of the Vizier.”

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 21st December 1812.)

A perusal of your Excellency's letter dated yesterday, and having reference to the case of Hyder Bukhsh, has excited my surprise and concern; and although it be unnecessary and unpleasant to trouble the Government with references on such trifling matters as this is, I shall be compelled, on the present occasion, to submit a translation of your Excellency's letter, now acknowledged, with a correct and particular statement of the merits of this case, to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that his Lordship in Council may be apprized of the extraordinary grounds or pretexts on which your Excellency would seem to have resolved to distress the dependants of our Government, in opposition to his Lordship's advice.

At the same time, I must beg your Excellency to recollect, that the resolution now expressed upon my part of representing the case of Hyder Bukhsh to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, is by no means intended to supersede the requisition which I have conveyed to your Excellency for the unmolested departure of Hyder Bukhsh, as a subject of the British Government and furnished with a regular passport under the Governor-General's seal, whenever he may think proper to quit your capital. On the contrary, I repeat to your Excellency, that the permission which I consider myself as fully authorized to grant to that person for his departure is still in force, and that any attempt on the part of your Excellency's officers to detain him will be, in my judgment, highly improper.

Your Excellency has been pleased to remark, "that after the death of Almass Alee Khan, Hyder Bukhsh attended in your presence and declared," &c. (recapitulate.)

I have thought it my duty, with the view of ascertaining the real circumstances of the grounds on which your Excellency would forcibly detain Hyder Bukhsh in your capital, to summon that person before me, and to examine him particularly on oath. His deposition has been taken accordingly, and is submitted for your Excellency's perusal, without comment; for to comment on the particulars to which he has sworn seems to me to be totally useless.

Your Excellency's assertion, that an arzee on the part of Hyder Bukhsh, containing a promise never to quit Lucknow without your consent, was presented by that person to your Excellency, and exhibited by your Excellency to Mirza Jafer, a confidential servant of mine, seemed to require more minute investigation, and I have questioned Mirza Jafer on the subject. He denies his having ever seen such an arzee in the Presence; and it is certainly very extraordinary, if he had seen and read it as declared by your Excellency, that he should have concealed the circumstance from me.

A copy of the Arzee, however, has been exhibited to me this day by Hyder Bukhsh, and it certainly does not contain the promise which your Excellency has been pleased to adduce. The explanation, too, afforded upon oath, of the circumstances under which the arzee was wrested from Hyder Bukhsh, rather than voluntarily presented by him to your Excellency, is particularly worthy of notice. Your Excellency's allusion to the circumstance and causes of Hyder Bukhsh's attendance on me may be answered, by recalling to your recollection the occasion of your request of my agency towards the liquidation of your demands against Almass Alee Khan. On that occasion, as your Excellency knows, I summoned all the principal dependants of Almass before me, and induced them, by a promise of protection, to liquidate the arrears of Almass, with the view of his and their obtaining a general acquittance from your Excellency. To Hyder Bukhsh, who on that occasion contributed a considerable sum of money for the attainment of the object in view, I promised not only my protection, but also the permission of our Government to proceed on a pilgrimage to Mecca, or to visit and reside with his family in the Doab, provided he should not undertake any office or situation of responsibility in the service of your Excellency's Government. On the faith of this promise by me, and under fears of oppression by your Excellency, Hyder Bukhsh has continued to attend me, and occasionally to urge me for permission to depart from the city of Lucknow.

From the tenor of your Excellency's message to me on Saturday last, requiring a translation of my instructions from Government for the protection of the dependants of Almass, and more particularly from the intention which you evince of compelling Hyder Bukhsh to continue his residence in this city, it would seem that your Excellency had forgotten the contents of your own letter to my address, under date the tenth of Zeekaud 1224 (18th December 1809), and of my answer to that letter, which was written on the following day, conveying to you the sentiments of the Government, as expressed in the following words:

"Should you, however, have reason to apprehend that his Excellency contemplates any measures of severity and harshness, you will not hesitate to represent

" represent to him, in the most urgent and impressive manner, the injustice as well as impolicy of such acts, setting before him, in the strongest light, the injurious consequences to his reputation as a Prince, which acts of such unjust severity towards the family of an old servant of his house would produce."

I intreat your Excellency to compare the impressive and friendly advice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as expressed in the foregoing words, with the design which you now entertain of forcing Hyder Bukhsh to remain in a city, where he has neither subsistence nor employment, and preventing his retreat to his home in the Honourable Company's territory, where he enjoys or has a prospect of both.

A true copy :

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

Deposition, on Oath, of Hyder Bukhsh, taken on Monday the 21st of December, before the Resident at Lucknow.

Question. State, on your oath, with accuracy, the cause and circumstances of your attending in the presence of his Excellency the Vizier, both before and after the death of the late Almass Alee Khan.

Answer. The state of the case is as follows :—When Almass Alee Khan was pleased to grant me his permission for my proceeding on a pilgrimage to Kurbula, I presented a petition to his Excellency for an order to quit the city, without which no person can have egress, and the prayer of this petition was refused. I then applied to Ray Jeysook Ray, and afterwards repeatedly to Mirza Muhdee Alee Khan, who informed me that it was his Excellency's pleasure I should continue in attendance in the Presence and accept an employment in the State. This I most peremptorily refused, declaring that I had no wish for employment, or should have continued to serve my master Almass, who had much of the country in his hands : that my sole and earnest desire was to be permitted to proceed on a pilgrimage. Soon after this Shurf Alee Khan summoned me before him, and urged me strenuously to attend in the Presence, which I was thus forced to agree to, considering any further resistance to his Excellency's will as improper ; and accordingly, with Almass's permission, I attended, and was treated with extraordinary distinction, as well as encouraged to hope for permission to proceed on a pilgrimage.

Q. It would appear that while attending in the Presence after the death of Almass Alee Khan, you declared yourself to be in possession of seventy thousand rupees and several thousand gold mohurs, which you offered as a douceur to his Excellency for permission to proceed to Kurbula : state, on your oath, correctly, the circumstances of this transaction.

A. They are as follow. Shortly after the death of Almass, I renewed my application to the Presence for permission to proceed on a pilgrimage, and was desired to rely on his Excellency's favour with confidence. The mention of money, too, I recollect, and it occurred exactly as follows. I stated to his Excellency the Vizier that I did possess, at one time, the sum of seventy thousand rupees in silver and property, which I had devoted to the liquidation of the balances of revenue which were claimed from my master, Almass ; and that now the wreck of my fortunes, after disposing of every thing in my possession, might amount to fifteen or twenty thousand rupees and two hundred gold mohurs, which I reserved as an offering at the holy shrines ; but, if his Excellency should be pleased to deprive me of a part of this sum, and permit me to retain merely enough for the expenses of my journey, I was willing to pay any portion of it into his Excellency's treasury. I was commanded, in answer, to be at rest, and that a particular answer should be given on further consideration. The mention of the sum of seventy thousand rupees I solemnly declare to have occurred in the manner above stated, and the number of gold mohurs which I mentioned to have been no more than two hundred in all.

Q. It would seem that, at one period of your attendance in the Presence, you solicited the offices of Darogha of the Dewan Khana, and Khansaman to his Excellency the Vizier : state the circumstances under which you applied for those offices.

A. I solemnly deny, upon my oath, my having ever solicited or wished for an appointment of any description under his Excellency the Vizier. The inviolable practice of his Excellency's Government is known to be, that no requests nor negotiations on the subject of appointment to office are ever verbally heard or received, but that written applications, under the seal of the candidate, are uniformly demanded. If I had ever made such an application, it must have been in writing under my seal, and may now be produced against me. This application, if ever made in my name, was totally false and malicious. I had three times the honour of a khelat from the Presence, but never wished for, nor accepted, nor interfered in any manner in, the service of the State.

Q. It would appear that you presented an arzee to his Excellency, promising never to depart from Lucknow without his consent.

A. The true statement of this affair is as follows. Raie Ruttun Chund sent for me one day, and shewed me two drafts of an arzee and memorandum, to which, under the order as he said of the Presence, my seal was immediately required. I at first refused to sign any one of them, declaring that they were in direct opposition to my wishes, which tended only to my obtaining permission to depart, and consequently that I could never sign or seal them with my free will or accord. The Raie answered, that such were the orders of the Presence; that I must not on any pretext disobey them; that his Excellency was disposed to befriend me; and that I could never expect to live in peace, save by obeying the orders and conforming with the will of his Excellency.

By these means I was at length compelled to put my seal to the papers, which I delivered into the hands of Ruttun Chund; and two days after I got back the memorandum from the Raie with the sign manual of his Excellency, granting me an allowance of five hundred rupees per mensem. But being ever indisposed to receive place or pension from his Excellency, and desirous to proceed on a pilgrimage, I have not accepted nor been offered a single rupee of the salary from that day until this.

Q. Fyzoola Khan Khezanchee, and Gholam Mohommed Toshukchie of the late Almass Ale Khan, assert that you have fraudulently appropriated a part of the wealth of Almass. How is this?

A. This assertion is totally false and groundless, I solemnly declare upon my oath. If I had appropriated any part of Almass's wealth in his lifetime, he would doubtless have called me to an account, and would never have permitted me to proceed on a pilgrimage, far less have granted me an acquittance of my conduct and intromissions with his property in full of all demands. This is perfectly clear, I apprehend.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 2d January 1813.)

Your Excellency having been pleased, in your letter of yesterday's date to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which I shall have the honour of forwarding without delay, to convey some complaints of my conduct, which it behoves me, of course, to reply to, I deem it proper, in the first instance, to submit a few observations to your Excellency, with the view of requesting an elucidation of some points of your complaint which appear to require explanation.

Your Excellency has complained, in the first place, of a want of respect in my letters, proceeding from dissatisfaction or displeasure. Now, although the displeasure of the British Government, and consequently my dissatisfaction at your Excellency's recent proceedings, and the obvious grounds of them, namely, your your Excellency's uniform opposition to the just views of the Government and total disregard of my advice, be readily admitted and established, yet as I am totally unconscious of any failure in the observances of personal respect, I am naturally at a loss to conceive to which of my recent letters your Excellency has been pleased to allude, and therefore I beg to be informed, whether your Excellency refers merely to those of which copies are conveyed in your address to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and are indeed already before him, or there be any other letters of mine to form the ground of your Excellency's complaint, that those also may be submitted to the Government.

Your Excellency's second complaint has a reference to my supposed prevention of your hunting excursion last year. In answer to this, if it were necessary, I might beg your Excellency to recollect that an annual hunting excursion, in the hottest season of the year, was never your Excellency's practice till I had the honour of residing at your Court; since which I have on four successive occasions, without reluctance, and with a view to your Excellency's pleasure, suffered all the fatigues of a journey, and cheerfully attended your Excellency in camp for months during the most inclement season of the year. But, with a reference to the last year in particular, which is the subject of your Excellency's complaint, the real state of the case your Excellency must admit to be as follows: at a conference in my own house, in the month of March or April, when the hunting excursion and the preparations for your journey were mentioned, I begged your Excellency to reflect that a letter from the Right Honourable the Governor-General, on a subject of the utmost importance, the reform of your Excellency's administration, had been before you for upwards of a year, and that it seemed to me to be advisable that your Excellency should take some steps in this business, and prepare your answer to the Governor-General before you set out on your journey, but that your Excellency might act as you thought proper; to which your Excellency immediately replied, that you would put off the hunting excursion.

If your Excellency be now pleased to consider the above suggestion on my part, to the verbal accuracy of which I am ready to depose upon oath, as a prevention of your hunting excursion, I must acquiesce in your Excellency's construction.

The third ground of complaint is the substance of my conference with your Excellency on Saturday the 19th of December, at which I submitted an abstract of the orders of Government, under dates the 8th of May and 23d of October last, having reference to the employment of the British troops for the suppression or seizure of banditti infesting the Honourable Company's territory and finding refuge in your Excellency's dominions, applying those orders of the Government, and their necessary consequences, with the purest motives of friendship, as a salutary caution to your Excellency against the effects of your continuing to oppose the just views of our Government.

To those orders, in fact, and to my exposition of their tendency, in the strict discharge of my duty, and from the purest motives of friendship, I ascribe entirely and exclusively the tenor of your present complaint. To persons who know much less, and to others who know more, than your Excellency of my disposition and manners, I may safely refer for the truth of my solemn and candid assertion, that I am incapable of shewing anger in argument, on subjects or occasions of the nature to which your Excellency alludes, and that the words which your Excellency has been pleased to ascribe to me were never uttered by me in the manner, nor to the effect, which you have stated.

Our conversation was entirely in Hindoostanee, and I held written memoranda of my own part of it in my hand at the time. I commenced with observing to your Excellency, that it had long been my practice, and should ever be my earnest desire, from motives of respect for your Excellency, to avoid urging you repeatedly, or with earnestness, on any question whatever, however just in my own opinion, without a previous reference to the Government and receiving its positive orders to that effect. That the cases of Budjha Sing and of the banditti in Elahabad were striking examples of this remark; and that the result of the references on those subjects now before you, and on many other questions formerly referred, as removing the veil from your conduct, should naturally suggest to your Excellency the wisdom, and even the necessity of paying some degree of regard to my suggestions on other points. That the questions of the superintendence of the Khoord Muhl, disputed villages in Binga, and other contested points between your Excellency and her Highness the Begum, were fully as clear as the former, were originally susceptible of decision by me, without any reference to the Government, and that the result of the references on these points might be naturally expected to be the same with that which I had just read in your presence; for it was clearly the province of the British Government, in its character of guarantee of the rights of both parties, to arbitrate and decide on all matters contested between them, and to place the party aggrieved in the full possession of its rights, and that such in my belief would prove the consequence of your Excellency's delay to do justice to her Highness the elder Begum. Digressing from more important subjects to questions of smaller moment, I complained in strong, but respectful terms, of your Excellency's delay to acquiesce in the departure of Hyder Bukhsh, a native subject of the British Government, and holding the Governor-General's passport in his hands for his departure from Lucknow and on a pilgrimage. I complained, further, of your extraordinary delay to redress the grievances of the Honourable Company's sepoys, and specified the particular case of Mal Tewarree, naick, who had been confined in irons by one of your Excellency's Aumils for weeks, and the whole of his property plundered, and whose redress, like that of many other persons, was evaded by the contending statements of the aggressors and aggrieved, the former supported by your Excellency, and the means of due investigation denied.

With regard to all those cases I argued, that a constant reference to the Supreme Government was totally unnecessary, save from motives of respect for your Excellency, since my own judgment and official authority were sufficient to bring them to an equitable decision.

That the obviously just and most simple method of doing so was to depute Ameens or Chuprassies to the spot, for the purpose of investigating the grounds of complaint, and to consider and act on the reports of those Ameens as decisive of the questions at issue between the Aumils and the parties aggrieved. That this seemed to me to be now the only remaining expedient for redressing the wrongs of the sepoys; and with regard to the departure of Hyder Bukhsh, as a question already decided by the instructions of the Government to me, I have no hesitation in admitting that I frankly declared to your Excellency my resolution of employing a servant of my own to pass him beyond the gates of the city, if your Excellency should persist in refusing to permit him to depart to his home in the Honourable Company's dominions, or to shew some good cause for his detention.

The above, to the best of my recollection, is the whole of the substance, and a faithful description of the manner, of my share in the conference with your Excellency on the morning of the 19th of December. If there be any thing demonstrative of anger, or of a wish, far less a resolution, "to settle every point in my own way," and merely to apprise your Excellency of the settlement, your Excellency has now to explain it, and the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will decide.

To express a direct contradiction of the assertion of any person, the lowest in the world, is totally foreign to my forms of speech, and can never issue from my pen. But I am perfectly ready to admit, that cases have arisen, and may arise, in which a manifest difference between your Excellency's statement on a particular question at issue, and that of a poor person, the other party in the cause, may require that I should form a judgment of the merits of the case from concomitant circumstances and proofs, and that my judgment being at variance with your Excellency's, I feel it my duty to declare this opinion, in argument or in correspondence, without reserve. If by this conduct on my part, your Excellency should be induced to complain that I have falsified your Excellency's assertions, I may frequently give cause of complaint without the smallest intention of offending.

Your

Your Excellency has observed in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, that you never expected such proceedings from the Resident at your Excellency's Court; yet the obvious cause of those proceedings, and of every circumstance or measure on my part which can give uneasiness to your Excellency's mind, is your determined perseverance in opposing the advice of the Government which I represent, and whose sentiments I submit to your Excellency, and consequently the removal of that cause is alone in your Excellency's power. Your declaration, at the close of your letter, of entire obedience to the will of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, when compared with your uniform disregard of every counsel which his Lordship has conveyed to you during a period of two years, seems to me to be deserving of reflection.

Having now concluded those remarks on the whole of your Excellency's letter conveying a complaint against myself, which I propose transmitting to the Government, I submit them, in the spirit of candour, for your Excellency's perusal in the first instance, that if your Excellency wish to reply, you may be furnished with the best means of doing so by considering the purport of my remarks.

My Lord :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 4th instant to your Lordship in Council's address, I have now the honour of transmitting to you a copy and translation of a letter received from his Excellency the Vizier, in answer to the statement which I submitted on the subject of his Excellency's complaint contained in his letter to your Lordship under date the 1st instant.

2. It was my original intention to have abstained from further correspondence with the Vizier on the subject of his letter to your Lordship, and after submitting a copy of his answer to my statement, with such remarks as the tenor of it might suggest to me, for your Lordship in Council's decision, to have awaited the communication of that decision to his Excellency directly or to myself, before I should address him again on any subject whatever, unless it were of a nature so urgent as could not with propriety be postponed till I should receive your Lordship's instructions.

3. But the general tenor and the manner of his Excellency's letter to my address, and particularly some of the doctrines which are stated and supported in that letter, seemed so novel and extraordinary to my judgment, that I could not, consistently with my duty, refrain from submitting to his Excellency my sentiments on the nature of the degradation which he has thus attempted to impose on the high official station of your Lordship's representative at his Court.

4. A copy and translation of the letter which I have deemed it to be my duty to address to his Excellency the Vizier on this occasion are submitted for your Lordship's perusal, and supersede a repetition of the remarks on the subject of the complaint against myself, which it was originally my intention to have conveyed in a direct address to your Lordship.

5. With a reference to the exceptionable manner of writing which the Vizier began to adopt in the latter years of the Residency of the late Colonel Scott at Lucknow, and has gradually brought to a pitch which is, in my judgment, highly offensive, it may be necessary to account to your Lordship in Council for my having omitted to notice it before, and thus affording an opportunity to the Vizier, not only to persist in and to aggravate his own exceptionable style, but to be the first to complain, however groundlessly, of a want of respect upon my part.

6. The causes and motives of this omission, by my predecessors as well as myself, are to be traced in the intricacies and delicacies, as I may term them, of the forms of Persian correspondence as practised in this country; in an imperfect knowledge, or a disregard of those peculiar intricacies by Colonel Scott; the total ignorance of them by Colonel Collins; the gradual and imperceptible advantage of those circumstances which has been taken by his Excellency the Vizier; the establishment of nearly the present form of correspondence on the part of his Excellency before my arrival at his Court, and my natural desire to conciliate, and to refrain from serious remonstrance regarding matters of mere form, till they became of considerable importance; combined with a hope, I confess, that the model which I thought proper to adopt for my own letters to his Excellency, being that of the earlier periods of his, and of the whole of his brother's administration, would have ultimately answered the purpose, by recalling to his Excellency's mind what was proper and becoming on his part, with a reference to the official rank of the Representative of the British Government at his Court, which in every other instance, save that of letter-writing, he has generally most strictly observed.

7. With a view to elucidate the remarks on this branch of the subject of his Excellency's letter to my address, which are contained in my answer to that letter, and now submitted to your Lordship, I shall transmit to the Persian department copies of a number of letters from the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, addressed to Mr. Ives and Mr. Lumsden, and of letters from those gentlemen to the late Nawaub, with copies of a number of letters from the present Vizier to Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott, and from those gentlemen to his Excellency; a comparison of the style and manner of which with those of his Excellency's recent letters to me, will enable the Persian Secretary to report to your Lordship in Council on the general accuracy of my remarks; and after receiving the report of that officer, it will remain for your Lordship in Council to decide whether the present forms of correspondence adopted by his Excellency the Vizier to your Lordship's representative at his Court, and the submissive and derogatory style which his Excellency requires from the Resident, shall be continued, or the less exceptionable practice of former times, and of the early part of his Excellency's Government, shall be resumed and established for the future.

8. With a reference to the more essential degradation of the rank and official influence of the Resident at the Court of the Vizier, which his Excellency has very plainly expressed his design of imposing on me in the concluding paragraphs of his letter, I deem it to be totally unnecessary to intrude on your Lordship's time, by submitting any other remarks than those which are stated in my reply.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 7th January 1813.)

Your writing submitted on the 28th of Zeelhijj (2d January), containing an answer to the contents of a letter from the Presence to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, dated the 26th of that month (31st December), has been perused. You have submitted, that "although the causes of the displeasure of the British Government and your own, namely, my uniform opposition to the just views of the Government and total disregard of your advice, be admitted and established, yet you are totally unconscious," &c. (to the end.)

In reply to which, the case is this: Your failure in the observances of respect for the Presence began before the discussions to which you allude took place; and, on the part of the Presence, no alteration in the manner and style of writing has ever been made, as the shookhas (mandates) of the Presence and your writings of the former and present times, compared with each other and with the writings of former Residents in your office, will show. If you look at them you will perceive the difference, and the Presence has no occasion to explain it.

After

After acknowledging your dissatisfaction, you submit that "you are at a loss to conceive to which of your recent letters I have been pleased to allude as a cause of complaint, and beg to be informed," &c. The case is this: From the representations contained in your writing submitted on the 3d of Jemadec-sance 1226 (27th June 1811), the manner of your respect for the Presence is apparent, and of the representations in your writing containing the deposition of Hyder Bukhsh, what was disagreeable to the mind of the Presence has been stated in my letter to the Governor-General. Your writing in answer to that letter, too, contains a manner of respect for the Presence which is obvious.

The speech which you submit in denial of your prevention of the hunting excursion was made last year. But as you must have accompanied the Presence on the hunting excursion, the answer to the Governor-General's letter might have been written there as well as here. And on one occasion before, last year, when the Presence intended moving to Nawaubgunge, you prevented it, and after all the preparations for the hunting excursion were made according to custom, till you obtained a promise of an early return, you did not approve of the march of the Presence: nay, further, after our return, when Lucknow was enlightened by the Presence, and the Presence was afflicted with rheumatic pains in the joints, to a degree which rendered speaking or breathing unpleasant; when in that state the Presence removed for change of air to Beebeepore, at so short a distance from the palace of Furhu Bukhsh as to be no more than a change of residence, even this movement was disagreeable to you. If the cause of your disapproval was merely the difficulty of transacting business or obtaining answers to your requests, the distance was of no consequence whatever, and in a state of sickness what could be done?

In reply to your representation of "your having submitted an abstract of the orders of the Government dated the 8th of May and 23d of October, regarding the employment of the British troops, to the Presence, at our conference of Saturday the 14th of Zeehijj (19th December), and your having applied those orders and their consequences from motives of friendship, and your considering those orders to be the true cause of this complaint from the Presence," the case is this: At the conference abovementioned, the two papers described were taken, and regarding them not a word was issued from the Presence; but, with regard to other matters, the expressions which you submitted to the Presence were, in the opinion of the Presence, clearly demonstrative of anger and disrespect. You admit your application of the words "necessarily removing the veil," &c.; and after this admission, what more need be written from the Presence?

With regard to your representation, that it was "the province of the British Government, in its character of guarantee, to arbitrate and decide on all contested points," &c. What has been already repeatedly said upon this subject shall never be departed from with my consent. If done contrary to my consent, you are at liberty.

With regard to your complaints at the conference above mentioned "on the case of Mal Tewarree, naick, and other sepoys and dependants of the British Government, and the support of the Presence to the statements of the Aumils, and a denial of the means of investigation," the case is this: It was never the wish nor desire of the Presence, that the complaints of those sepoys should not be justly decided, or that their investigation should be delayed; far less that the rights of the poor should be lost, or the statements of the Aumils confirmed. But the cause of the delay is this: that the sepoys will not agree to the statements of the Seghadars (revenue officers) and persons versant in the business, nor will they submit their complaints to arbitration, nor be satisfied with anything short of the accomplishment of their own views. Reflect that conversation on business does not require anger, nor wrath, nor forgetfulness of the respect for situation, and that the expressions which you submitted in the Presence, as tending to diminish the authority of the Presence, clearly indicated anger and wrath, since the plan which you propose of deputing Ameens and Chupprassies to diminish the power and authority of the Presence can never be agreed to by the Presence, as has been already repeatedly signified.

With regard to the dismissal of Hyder Bukhsh, the method which you have adopted has never been seen in any country. Notwithstanding your promise to make him pay any demands of the State that might be established against him, without investigating the statement of Fyzoolla and Gholam Mohummud, or confronting them with him, you permitted him of your own accord to depart. And, with a reference to your statement of his being a British subject, the case is this: that he left the purgunnah of Corah, which you represent to be his country, long before it was ceded to the Company, and became the slave of Almass Alec Khan deceased, whose property he was at his death, and by whom in this city he was educated and brought up. It would, therefore, have been becoming your friendship, to have confronted him, in the first place, with the two persons above mentioned, and called on him for an answer to their assertions; and in the case of nothing being proved against him, you might then have applied to the Presence for his leave to depart, instead of declining to confront him with his accusers or to attend to the commands of the Presence, and using angry words on the subject of his departure, which did not become you in any degree, and which you yourself acknowledge your having used.

Again, with regard to your representation, that "a manifest difference may arise between the orders of the Presence on any subject and that of a poor person," &c. (to the end). The case is this: that the very thing which is disagreeable to the mind of the Presence you yourself have acknowledged; nay, you add that this cause of complaint by the Presence may often happen again; and, if so, what respect for the Presence can remain? Your application even of the word "Complaint," with a reference to the Presence, is contrary to the due observances of respect to which the Presence is entitled.

Independently of the case of Hyder Bukhsh, there are many other affairs of the Presence still unsettled: and with regard to your submission of the denial of Fukhur-ood-Deen (Mirza Jafer), of his having ever seen the arzee of Hyder Bukhsh, what was signified from the Presence to Mirza Jafer, and what he submitted in answer, shall be written in detail from the Presence, on the condition of his swearing on the Koran in confirmation or denial of what shall be written.

In reply to your observation, that "my professions of entire obedience to the will of the Governor-General, when compared with," &c. (to the end). There is no manner of doubt whatever of the obedience of the Presence to the Governor-General, for the Governor-General is the benefactor of the Presence; and if the accomplishment of a matter be beyond the authority and power of the Presence, writing a true statement of the case to a benefactor is in no way inconsistent with obedience. What more shall be written? 3d of Mohur-rum 1228.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 8th January 1813.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's gracious letter of yesterday's date, and have carefully perused its contents.

The tenor and substance of the letter, in my candid opinion, are such that I might safely submit it to the Government without a single comment or remark, and rely on the justice of the Government for a judgment of absolute acquittal of the charges of disrespect and intemperance which your Excellency has preferred against me. Yet a sense of my duty to your Excellency, as well as to the Government which I represent, my wish for a solemn decision on the whole of the merits of this complaint, from even the remote period to which your Excellency has now referred for the grounds of it, and some other considerations which will appear in the sequel of this letter, induce me to trespass on your time with the following detailed observations.

At

At a very early period after my arrival at your Excellency's Court, the forms of correspondence then recently adopted on the part of your Excellency to the Resident, and seemingly expected by your Excellency from him, seemed to me to be deserving of most serious attention and revisal. I looked back to the records of my office for the forms of letter-writing on the part of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah to the Resident, and found them to be as different from your Excellency's as they are from the mandates of the Emperor of Delhi to his Majesty's subjects and servants, which latter your Excellency's mandates, rather than letters, to the Representative of the British Government at your Court exactly resembled, and do resemble at this day. I compared your Excellency's letters to Mr. Lumsden, and a few of those to Colonel Scott, and their letters to your Excellency, with your Excellency's letters to Colonel Collins and myself, and found them to be totally different from each other. Being, of course, mortified and surprised at the change, I submitted my sentiments regarding it in the most delicate terms to your Excellency, through the medium of my confidential-servant, and was referred to the correspondence with Colonel Collins for the only satisfaction that could be given.

Letter
from Resident at

Upon this I determined, perhaps improperly, though my motive could not be misconstrued, to abstain from any formal remonstrance to your Excellency, on the apparent want of consideration in correspondence, which classed the British Resident at your Excellency's Court on a footing of rank with your Excellency's subjects and servants, and to content myself with framing my own letters to your Excellency on the model of those of Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott, which had never been objected to by your Excellency in the times of those respectable officers, and indeed has never been questioned by your Excellency with me till the date of your letter to the Governor-General. A number of no less than thirty letters from the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowla to Mr. Ives and Mr. Lumsden, from those gentlemen to the late Nawaub, from your Excellency to Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott, and from the last-mentioned officer to your Excellency, are now submitted for your inspection, and copies of them shall be forwarded to the Government; and I shall leave it to your Excellency's justice and candour to decide, in the first place, whether the least respectful of all the letters from me to your Excellency, during a period of five years, which form the subject of your present complaint, do not exceed the most respectful of the enclosed, in every point to which your Excellency has alluded; and, secondly, whether the style and language of all your Excellency's letters to me, more particularly of that which is now before me, do not more resemble the mandates of the King of Delhi to his servants, than the letters of any of your Excellency's august predecessors, or your own, to the former Residents or representatives of the British Government at Lucknow.

Under all the circumstances which are stated, and with a particular reference to your Excellency's remark, that "no alteration in the manner and style of writing has ever been made by your Excellency," I deem it now to be my duty to solicit from your Excellency's justice, as I shall submit to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in vindication of the dignity of his Lordship's Government, that the style and manner of writing to the Resident at your Excellency's court, which was practised by your august brother and by your Excellency during the time of Mr. Lumsden, be resorted to and scrupulously observed for the future, and that all the exceptionable expressions and omissions which have subsequently crept into use be hereafter withheld and attended to.

A copy and translation of my letter of the 3d Jemadee-oos-sanee 1226 (27th June 1811), on the subject of reform, to which your Excellency has now been pleased to object, as well as copies and translations, indeed, of all my letters on every subject of importance, are already before the Government, and have passed the ordeal of its approbation.

Regarding my prevention of your Excellency's hunting excursion last year, your Excellency has admitted the truth of my declaration. With regard to the circumstances of your intended movement to Nawaub-gunge, my soliciting a promise of your early return to Lucknow from a former hunting excursion, and my dissatisfaction with your movement to Beebeepore, I cannot, at this distance of time, sufficiently charge my memory to submit a detail of them to your Excellency.

Excellency. The grounds of my surprise and concern at your sudden departure to Beebeepore are submitted, and fully explained, in my letter of the 27th of June 1811, already referred to: but, with a reference to all those complaints, I may surely be permitted to plead, that your Excellency's gracious letter of the 9th of July 1811 should, in justice and candour, supersede any further explanation on my part. The words of that letter are as follow: "Reposing confidence, as I do, in your friendship, and having no other real and sympathizing friend than yourself, whose kindness could give consolation and confidence to my mind, I therefore write to desire, &c.....In the whole world I have not one such a friend as yourself."

Your Excellency's repeated reference to the substance of our conference of Saturday the 19th of December, as demonstrative in your opinion of anger, can require no other reply than a solemn declaration on my part, which I am ready to repeat upon oath, that friendship and conciliation, with the accomplishment of the just views of the Government, were the sole objects of my discourse, and that anger and wrath, or disrespect, were as far from my manner at the time as they are at the present moment. My application of the words "removing the veil from your Excellency's conduct," to the orders of Government, dated the 8th of May and 23d of October, was, in my judgment, correct, respectful, and friendly in the extreme.

Your Excellency's repeated refusal to admit of the mediation and arbitration of the British Government between her Highness the Begum and yourself, cannot surely form a necessary obstacle to the Government's continuing to urge the just settlement of her Highness's claims, or the redress of her manifest grievances; but as this question has been finally referred to the Government, I have nothing further to offer regarding it.

The question of the redress of the grievances of our sepoys and other dependants, may also be passed over without remark. It is my firm and decided opinion, that till regular courts of justice be established throughout your Excellency's dominions, for the investigation of all complaints, as recommended by the British Government, by your Excellency's benefactor and friend the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, our subjects and dependants, in common with, but in perhaps a greater degree than, your own, must be subjected to distress and oppression; and that the only alternative which exists for the redress of the grievances of our sepoys and other dependants, is that which I submitted to your Excellency at our conference of the 19th of December, and which your Excellency seems disposed to resist.

With a reference to the case of Hyder Bukhsh, I certainly promised to your Excellency, and do now repeat the promise, to procure the liquidation of every just demand of your Excellency's Government against him. He was dismissed to Corah with your Excellency's declared consent. A rahdaree dustuck, in the terms of that under the Governor-General's signature and seal, was regularly applied for to your Excellency, nay, was promised on the 28th ultimo by your Excellency to me, and was ultimately refused to my servant Ameer Hyder, with a declaration from your Excellency that it was unnecessary, and that Hyder Bukhsh, like Gholam Reza Khan, might proceed unmolested without a dustuck. Your Excellency has omitted any notice of the Governor-General's passport to this person, which was uniformly, in my judgment, decisive of the question of his departure. If the statement referred to by your Excellency of Fyzoolla and Gholam Mohummud had been that of a debt due to your Government by Hyder Bukhsh, instead of a vague assertion of his appropriating the wealth of Almass, it might have deserved, and would have formed the subject of, investigation in the manner which your Excellency has now for the first time suggested: but when I beg your Excellency to recollect that Hyder Bukhsh has an acquittance from Almass, and that the whole of the property of that Aumil has been locked up under your Excellency's seals since the moment of his death, and guarded in the strictest manner by the Honourable Company's sepoys and your own, it cannot be a matter of surprise that I should have been satisfied with the deposition of Hyder Bukhsh, in refutation of a charge so extraordinary. But, with a view to your Excellency's satisfaction, I now entreat you to be convinced that Hyder Bukhsh is still answerable in every respect, as before, for your Excellency's just demands, and amenable to the regular investigation of the charge which has been preferred by Fyzoola and Gholam Mommud, and which the accredited agent of Hyder Bukhsh is now in attendance to answer; nay, that he may be recalled, if necessary, at any time, with the permission of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, to answer to such charges and demands as your Excellency may wish to bring against him.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

My opinion is still, I must confess, what has already been submitted to your Excellency on the question of his being a native subject of the Honourable Company's Government, as being a landholder in the district of Corah, where the bulk of his property is situated and his family have always resided. But be that question as it may, I have your Excellency's repeated authority for submitting, that no Mussulman can be a slave, and that he is entitled to every privilege of a free subject as well as of a dependant of the British Government, although your Excellency seemed disposed to refuse him any of those privileges by detaining him forcibly at Lucknow: a circumstance, surely, more unprecedented, than my submitting the most urgent application for his release. That this application was accompanied with expressions of anger or disrespect, I most solemnly and sincerely disavow.

From your Excellency's next observation, that "the submission, on my part, of a difference in point of fact between any of your Excellency's statements and that of another person," in other words, "of an opinion different from your own, is the very thing which is disagreeable to you;" that, "I have acknowledged this fault," nay, "predicted its future occurrence," and "that this is incompatible with respect;" it would seem to my judgment to follow as your Excellency's wish and expectation, that the rank of the British Resident at your Court should be that of the lowest of your subjects: that he should have no opinion of his own, nor even the right of submitting the sentiments of his Government to your Excellency, unless in perfect coincidence with yours, and demonstrative of the most profound submission to your will. If such be, indeed, your Excellency's wish or expectation, and the design of the British Government in maintaining a representative at your Court, it is certainly far from my conception of the nature and duties of my station, and remains to be explained to me by the Government. If even "the use of the word complaint," with a reference to your Excellency's proceedings, be inadmissible on the part of the Resident, the exercise of his functions at Lucknow would seem to me to be completely suspended.

Your Excellency's demand of an oath from Mirza Jafer, who has long voluntarily ceased to be the medium of my communications, and may naturally have forgotten the circumstances to which your Excellency alludes, seems to me to be objectionable on many grounds; but if your Excellency will be pleased to explain the particular points regarding which the deposition of this respectable and highly creditable person is required, I shall consider of the justice and propriety of acquiescing in your Excellency's requisition, and shall submit a reference on the subject to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

Of the sincerity of your Excellency's professions of entire obedience to the will of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, his Lordship in Council himself is the only competent judge.

The Governor-General in Council deeming it advisable to suspend a reply to the letter from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to the Governor-General, of which a translation was enclosed in the Resident's despatch of the 4th instant, until he shall receive a report from the Persian Secretary to the Government on the subject of the documents which Major Baillie states that he has forwarded to the Persian Secretary, Ordered,

Bengal Political
Consultations,
23 Jan. 1818.

Ordered, That an extract from the proceedings be sent to the Persian Secretary's Office, and that the Persian Secretary be informed of the desire of his Lordship in Council to receive his report with the least practicable delay.

Ordered, That the following Instructions be addressed to the Resident at Lucknow.

To Major J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, enclosing the translation of a letter addressed to the Governor-General by the Vizier, in which his Excellency charges you with disrespectful and intemperate language and conduct, and renews the expression of his desire to travel.

2. This extraordinary and groundless accusation appeared to the Governor-General in Council to require the decisive interference of Government, in order to vindicate your official conduct and proceedings, to uphold and strengthen the influence of your representative character, and to counteract the evident design of the Vizier in framing the letter to his Lordship's address, viz., to deter the Government from persevering in the prosecution of the objects which have formed the topics of your recent discussions with his Excellency, by accusations against its representative at his Excellency's Court, and by renewing the subject of his travels.

3. The Governor-General in Council was accordingly prepared to address a letter to his Excellency, calculated to effect the important object above stated, when the receipt of your further despatch of the 11th instant, enclosing the continuation of your correspondence with his Excellency, appeared to the Governor-General in Council to render it advisable to take the new and higher ground which the Government was enabled to assume, by the discovery of the improper and indecorous style in which the Vizier himself has of late been accustomed to indulge in his correspondence with the British Resident.

4. It has become necessary to suspend the preparation of an answer to his Excellency's letter, under the different view of the question which, in consequence of the receipt of your last despatch, has been taken by the Governor-General in Council, until a particular report shall be received from the Persian Secretary, founded on your communications to that officer, and on the materials which the records of his office will supply of the several changes which have occurred in the manner of conducting the correspondence between the Vizier and the successive Residents at his Court, the origin of the departure from those forms of respect which were formerly observed both by the present Vizier and his predecessor, and the nature and extent of those deviations from the proper style of address. Such a report is necessary to form the foundation of a grave and official remonstrance with the Vizier on the subject, and of a requisition in the name of the Governor-General, that his Highness will revert to that correct and decorous mode of conducting his correspondence with the British Resident, from which he ought never to have departed. It is not necessary on this account, however, to delay the communication to you of the sentiments of the Governor-General in Council on the subject of your two despatches above referred to.

5. The instructions, which I had received the orders of his Lordship in Council to address to you, on the case of Hyder Bukhsh, not having been despatched when the receipt of your despatch apprized the Governor-General in Council of the actual departure of that person from Lucknow, they have been cancelled; but such of the reflections and observations which arose in the mind of his Lordship in Council on perusing the report of your proceedings in that case as it may be proper that you should still be apprized of, will be included in this despatch.

6. It is not necessary to enter into a particular and minute examination, in this place, of the several charges of intemperate and disrespectful language and conduct brought against you by the Vizier, which have been in general successfully cessfully refuted in your letter to his Excellency, of which a translation is enclosed in your despatch of the 4th instant. The only exception to this remark is the case of Hyder Bukhsh, above noticed, and which will be adverted to in a subsequent part of this despatch.

7. His Lordship in Council trusts, that the effect of the letter which the Governor-General proposes to address to his Excellency the Vizier will make a suitable impression on his mind, and will both induce him to retract his groundless and injurious imputations against your personal and official character and conduct, and dispose him to pay more regard to the remonstrances and representations which it will be your duty to continue to address to him on various subjects of discussion, and will also effect the immediate re-establishment of the epistolary intercourse between his Excellency and you, on a footing suitable to the rank and dignity of your representative character, upon which the Government is determined to insist.

8. The proposed letter will, moreover, be so framed, as to prepare his Excellency's mind for the renewal of the subject of the reform of his administration and other depending questions, on which the extreme pressure of other business of more immediate urgency has rendered it necessary for the Governor-General in Council to suspend his deliberations, but which will form the subject of an early communication to you.

9. The question of the reform will now be urged, with all the advantage to be derived from the effect which must be produced by the decided interference of the Government on the occasion, which is the immediate subject of this letter. A similar advantage may be expected to be found with respect to the other questions depending with the Vizier, which still remain to be adjusted. On all these points the instances of the Government to the Vizier will be renewed and enforced.

10. It was extremely satisfactory to the Governor-General in Council to find that the departure of Hyder Bukhsh from Lucknow had superseded the necessity of interposing the direct authority of the Government in support of your proceedings in that person's case, as that case involves the very delicate question of the degree in which our interference with the Vizier, in favour of persons of that class, can properly be exercised; and as the view which the Governor-General in Council has taken of it differs materially (although with much reluctance on the part of his Lordship in Council) from yours, I have been directed to enter at some length into a consideration of the whole transaction.

11. The Governor-General in Council is unable to consider Hyder Bukhsh in the light of a British subject, on the ground merely of his having been born and possessing landed property in the Ceded Provinces, since the circumstances of his having been from his infancy resident within the dominions of the Vizier, and employed from an early period of his life in the service of the Government of Oude, combined with the relation in which he stood towards Almass, himself a servant of that State, must, in the judgment of his Lordship in Council, be considered to supersede any claim to the personal privileges and rights of a subject of the Company, which perhaps he might otherwise, but still doubtfully, derive from the possession of lands in a province now belonging to the Company, but formerly to the Vizier, and ceded by the latter, at a period long subsequent to the origin of Hyder Bukhsh's connection with Almass and the Government of Oude.

12. A long course of events and transactions, affecting mutually the interests of the two States, in which a principal part was borne by Almass Alee Khan, had established a sort of relation between the British Government and that person, so much more intimate than generally subsists between the supreme authority of one State and the subject and officer of another, as to afford him a strong claim to our countenance and support, in case he should be exposed to unjust and cruel treatment by his immediate masters; but it was never maintained, that his partial dependence on the British Government derogated from the authority of the Vizier over his subject. After the death of Almass, the Governor-General in Council felt disposed to afford, to a certain extent, similar countenance and favour to his family and dependants, and you were accordingly authorized, by the instructions of the 10th of October 1808, above referred to, to interpose in their behalf, by employing the language of representation and remonstrance, in order to divert the Vizier from any measures of harshness and injustice which he might meditate against them. The whole spirit and tenor of those instructions (and, as applicable to any supposed designs to deprive the persons in question of their property, the express letter of them) demonstrate the objection of the Government to the adoption of measures of a more decided character, any right to employ which is disclaimed as inconsistent with the acknowledged prerogatives of the Vizier, and the provisions of treaty.

13. As connected with the personal claim of Hyder Bukhsh to our support, it is proper in this place to observe, that the Governor-General in Council does not consider the grant of a passport under the signature of the Governor-General to form a valid ground for insisting on his being allowed to depart from Lucknow, nor does the grant of that paper place him in the condition of a person enjoying the protection of the British Government, at least in the manner in which you have considered it. In fact, the Governor-General's passport can only become of authoritative force on the entrance of the person holding it, being the subject of another State, within the Honourable Company's territories.

14. By the stipulations of the treaty of 1801, explained and confirmed by the result of the subsequent negotiations between the Marquess Wellesley and the Vizier at Lucknow, the British Government is empowered to offer its advice to the Vizier on all matters connected with the affairs of his Excellency's Government, and the Vizier is bound to act in conformity to the advice of the Government; but this reciprocal obligation must be interpreted by the general spirit and objects of the alliance, and cannot be made the ground of indiscriminate interference on our part in questions between the Vizier and his subjects. It is, indeed, desirable on many grounds of practical expediency, as well as because it is consonant to the general spirit of the treaty, that we should abstain from interposing in cases of inferior importance, as the frequent occurrence of such interposition would be apt, by exciting irritation and discontent, to indispose the Vizier to listen to our remonstrances in affairs of greater magnitude, for which the weight of our authority ought to be reserved. On all these grounds, the Governor-General in Council would have wished that you had not taken up the cause of Hyder Bukhsh so warmly, as your just and natural feeling of compassion for the hardship of his situation, combined with your conviction of his claim to the protection of the British Government, prompted you to do.

15. It cannot be denied, that the character of the Vizier's conduct towards Hyder Bukhsh partakes largely of that capricious and tyrannical exercise of his power, which has unfortunately become habitual to his Excellency, and which appears to afford him peculiar gratification when it is directed against any person who either is, or is reputed to be, an object of the consideration and regard of the British Government.

16. His Lordship in Council fully appreciates the delicacy of your situation, and the difficulty which you must experience in cases in which the limits of interference and forbearance are so inaccurately defined; in avoiding the opposite evils of trenching upon the independent authority of the Vizier on the one hand, and withholding the support of your representative situation from persons looking up to the British Government for protection, on the other. The repeated testimonies which you have received from the Governor-General in Council, of his Lordship's approbation of your conduct in the discharge of the arduous duties of your station, will satisfy your mind that, in forming a judgment of the course which you were called on to pursue in the present affair different from your own, the Governor-General in Council has given the most unqualified credit to the motives of public zeal and of warm and generous feeling which governed your conduct.

17. The part of your proceedings relative to Hyder Bukhsh which proved least satisfactory to Government, was the menace which you held out to the Vizier of affording to Hyder Bukhsh the protection of an escort of sepoys, to enable him to quit the city of Lucknow and his Excellency's dominions. This was the more to be regretted, as it might have placed the Governor-General in Council in the embarrassing embarrassing dilemma either of withholding his support to the proceedings of an officer high in rank, and in the confidence and esteem of the Government, or of enforcing an act which his judgment could not approve. Fortunately the difficulty is removed, and the question closed, by the departure of Hyder Bukhsh from the city; and all that remains is to express the satisfaction of Government at this termination of the affair, and to intimate to the Vizier that, although Hyder Bukhsh has left his dominions, he will still be liable to be called on to answer any charge or demand which his Excellency may produce against him. You will accordingly take an opportunity of signifying this to the Vizier, at such time and in such manner as you may judge most likely to impress him with a sense of our desire to do impartial justice between his Excellency and an alleged defaulter.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
22 Jan. 1818.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

18. I am directed to observe, that the details of your conferences with the Vizier, at which his Excellency consented to permit Hyder Bukhsh to depart, are not before Government, and that the fact of his departure is only known by the incidental mention of it in your letter to the Vizier, of which a translation accompanied your despatch.

19. The Governor-General in Council is satisfied that the Vizier entertains no intention whatever of putting his plan of travelling in execution. His design in bringing it forward is evidently that stated in a preceding part of this letter, namely, to induce Government to remit its endeavours to obtain his compliance with its requisitions, by leading it to apprehend that he really will put in force his plan of leaving his dominions if he is pressed on any unpleasant subject of negotiation. His expectations of success have probably been encouraged by the great desire which has on former occasions been evinced, to prevail on him to abandon his intention. It is highly desirable, however, that he should be made to understand that Government views it as a matter of indifference; and the Governor-General, therefore, purposes to express the readiness of the British Government to afford every facility to the accomplishment of his Excellency's wishes, requiring no other condition than that he shall make a suitable arrangement for the administration of his Government during his absence.

20. The only arrangement for that purpose which would be satisfactory to the Governor-General in Council, or which could be sanctioned, is that pointed out in the instructions addressed to the late Colonel Scott, under date the 11th November 1802, and which will of course be found among the records of the Residency, viz., "the appointment of a regent, who shall be bound by a specific engagement to regulate all his official proceedings by the advice and recommendation of the British Government, and to adopt all such measures as may be suggested by the Resident, under the authority of that Government, for the prosperity of the country," &c. &c.; in other words, to place the administration virtually in the hands of the British Government. If his Excellency were to consent to such an arrangement, his departure, though certainly an undesirable event even then, would be the less to be regretted, from the opportunity which it would afford of introducing an improved system of administration into his dominions. You will observe, that the condition formerly annexed to our consent to the Vizier's undertaking the proposed journey, viz. that he should previously carry into effect the proposed reform, will not be insisted on; but it will be proper to intimate to the Vizier, that his departure will not cause any relaxation of the endeavours of this Government to accomplish this important object.

21. It is unnecessary, however, in the present stage of the business, to expatiate on this subject. If, contrary to all reasonable expectation, his Excellency should continue to express a desire to travel, the Governor-General in Council will be prepared to take up the whole question.

22. Recurring to the complaint against you contained in the Vizier's letter, the Governor-General in Council remarks, that it is superfluous to state his unabated confidence in your zealous, able, and judicious performance of the arduous duties of your office. His Lordship in Council is satisfied that the calumnious charges against you are to be ascribed to the displeasure excited in the mind of the Vizier, by your zealous and persevering endeavours to mitigate the rapacious and oppressive system of his Excellency's Government, and to prevail on him to regulate it by the principles of justice, moderation, and good faith.

23. Such further observations as may occur to his Lordship in Council, will be stated to you when his Lordship's proposed letter to the Vizier is transmitted. It does not seem advisable that you should make any communication to the Vizier previously to the delivery of the letter; but it is left to your discretion to apprise his Excellency of your expectation of the early receipt of a reply to the letter which his Excellency addressed to the Governor-General, if you should deem such previous notice to be expedient.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 29th January 1813.

To John Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government, in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir:

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copy and translation of a letter which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, in reply to my communication to his Excellency of the substance of the orders of the Government, conveyed by the Chief Secretary's despatches of the 8th of May and 23d of October last, having reference to the method proposed of employing detachments of the British troops stationed in this country for the apprehension of banditti infesting the Honourable Company's territory and finding refuge in the Vizier's.

2. The transmission of this letter by his Excellency would appear to have been hastened by a communication which I deemed it to be my duty to make to him, in consequence of a letter received from the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, a copy of which, and a translation of my letter to his Excellency on the subject of it, are submitted for the notice of the Government. His Excellency's answer to that letter, a translation of which is enclosed, was conceived in a style which induced me to suspend the orders that I had issued to the commanding officer at Sooltanpore for the seizure of Surnam Sing and his associates, and gave me every reason to expect the immediate accomplishment of this object through the exertions of his Excellency's Aumil.

3. My disappointment in this hope has been aggravated in a peculiar degree by the tenor of his Excellency's reply to my communication of the orders of the Government, in which his Lordship in Council will observe a continued disposition to oppose the just and necessary arrangement suggested for his Excellency's acquiescence, under the flimsy disguise of a declared solicitude, combined with an ineffectual proposition, for the accomplishment of the object in view, by means that have been already repeatedly tried and uniformly found to be unavailing.

4. The attendance of the Vizier's Aumils, or of any of his Excellency's officers, on the commanding officers of detachments of British troops employed in the pursuit of delinquents or fugitives from the British dominions, nay even the previous knowledge by his Excellency's officers of the movement of a British detachment for such a purpose, has been proved, by the uniform experience of ten years, to be the certain cause of failure and disappointment in every instance that has occurred; and the imposition of this provision on a consent which could not be withheld, to the occasional employment of our troops for the seizure of our rebellious subjects finding refuge in his Excellency's territory, would appear to have no other motive than the defeat of the object in view.

5. His Excellency's resistance or objection to the measure which is now proposed, as founded on the declaration of Lord Cornwallis, seems to me to be totally misplaced, since the proposition from which his Lordship receded was of a nature totally different from that which is here discussed; and, at all events, his Excellency had before him, in the substance of the Chief Secretary's despatch under date the 8th of May last, an exposition so clear and satisfactory of the grounds on which Lord Cornwallis's admission, or rather concession, should now be modified or withdrawn, that his Excellency's recourse to it on this occasion may be justly thought a matter of surprise.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 9th January 1813.)

Letter
from the Vizier.

Your letter of the 18th December, with translation of a letter from the Secretary to the Government, and translation of former orders which were issued to you, soliciting an answer to your letter to the Presence submitted on the 17th of Ramzaun (25th September), has been perused.

The case is this: The proposal of establishing a military post on the frontier of Pertaubghur, in the dominions of the Presence, for the purpose of apprehending, dispersing, and extirpating marauders, decoits, and plunderers, has been already agreed to, in the shookha of the 11th of Ramzaun (19th September); and it was also written, that this arrangement would be beneficial to both Governments.

On the other hand, the apprehension or punishment of Aman Sing and others, regarding which orders were issued to you from the Presence, has not yet by chance been carried into execution. But let the past be considered as past, for it is not the wish of the Presence to enter into controversy or altercation, and it was merely for the sake of information that the mention of some plan for the apprehension of fugitives from the dominions of the Presence was conveyed in the above shookha, and it is impossible that the Presence should ever have neglected the means of seizing fugitives, rebels, or plunderers, belonging to the British Government. With regard to the apprehension of the rebel Budjha Sing, proclamations have been issued by the Presence, and moochulkas (penal bonds) taken from the Zemindars, agreeably to your suggestions, without the least delay or neglect. A detachment of British troops was also employed for the seizure of the said rebel. The Zemindars who were stated by you to be the partizans and abettors of Budjha Sing, have been apprehended and are still in confinement; therefore the fact of the rebels not being seized can on no principle be ascribed to a want of exertion or inclination on the part of the Presence.

As the happiness and tranquillity of the subjects of both Governments, and the extirpation or seizure of plunderers, marauders, and decoits, to whatever country they belong, have ever been, and are now, the sincere desire of the Presence; and, as it is further the wish of the Presence to satisfy to the utmost extent the Right Honourable the Governor-General, on whose favour and aid the establishment of the full power and authority of the Presence rests; for this cause only the cantonment of a British detachment on the frontier has been agreed to by the Presence: and, if it be necessary to have some horsemen to act in conjunction with the infantry, portions of the cavalry stationed at Pertaubghur may also be employed for that purpose. Nay, further, as the destruction or apprehension of rebels and plunderers is the sincere desire of the Presence, the measure now proposed for this purpose is agreed to by the Presence in the following manner.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
29 Jan. 1813.

Letter
from the Vizier.

That whenever the abode of any plunderer or decoit is ascertained to be in a village in the dominions of the Presence, and you may wish to detach a force to apprehend him, you shall first apply for the permission of the Presence to that effect, and then orders shall be immediately issued from the Presence to the Aumil to attend the commanding officer of the detachment and obey his orders in the execution of this service. Or, if you entertain a suspicion that the Aumil, through connivance with the plunderers, is likely to acquaint them of the movement of the troops, and enable them to escape; in this case an order to the Aumil shall be issued merely to the following effect, viz. "That an English officer with a detachment is proceeding in such a direction, for the accomplishment of a certain object, and that he or his Naib must accompany that officer and obey all his commands." Again: if it be wished, with a view to the apprehension of a particular offender, that the detachment employed on this service shall continue constantly in the pursuit, and never relinquish it until the service be accomplished, in this case, on your representing the circumstance to the Presence, permission for the employment of the detachment shall at once be given by the Presence, in such terms as that, until the object in view be accomplished, there shall be no occasion to ask permission from the Presence a second time. But the Aumil or his Naib shall continue in attendance on the commanding officer so long as the detachment may be employed; and, in consideration of the friendship subsisting between the two States, the commanding officer of the English detachment must protect the subjects of the Presence against injury to their cultivated fields, by marching over them in the same manner as is practised in the Company's provinces. If it be proved to you that any of the subjects or Zemindars of the Presence afford assistance or protection to rebels or marauders, and you represent this to the Presence, the offending person shall be seized and punished, or expelled, and his zemindary shall be sold by auction.

On an occasion, many years ago, when the Marquess Wellesley proposed that the British troops should enter the dominions of the Presence, in pursuit of rebels and fugitives from the British territory, and carry them away, and that in like manner the troops of the Presence might enter the British territories in pursuit of defaulters and others, to apprehend them; this proposal was rejected by the Presence, and shortly after this Colonel Collins submitted a representation to the Presence by order of the Governor-General, Marquess Cornwallis, an extract from which is transmitted for your perusal. Now that measures have been sanctioned for the seizure of delinquents and fugitives from the British territory, in the manner above explained, do you inform the Presence, through friendship, of the measures proposed to be adopted for the seizure of fugitives from this country, since the due arrangement of the affairs of the Presence is a necessary duty on your part.

Enclosure.

Extract (above alluded to) from a Letter from the Secretary to Government addressed to Colonel Collins, dated the 12th August 1805.

"You will accordingly take an early opportunity of signifying to the Vizier that the British Government suggested that arrangement to his Excellency's consideration, under a conviction that the benefit of its adoption would be experienced by his Excellency's Government, as well as by the Government of the Company's contiguous territories, and that it was not calculated to trench, in the slightest degree, upon his Excellency's rights and independence. That the British Government fully admits his Excellency's right to withhold his concurrence in the proposed arrangement, and that it is not the intention of the Governor-General to urge his Excellency's concurrence against his decided aversion to the adoption of that arrangement."

1. I have the honour to acquaint you that I have received information that Surnam Sing, one of the banditti who has infested this district, is traced, with about thirty followers, to the village of Buhia on the right bank of the Goomtee, about three coss above Sooltanpore, Oude; and that the Talookadar of this village (Bukhtawar Sing, of the Rajkoomar caste) is related to Kishen Sing (another of the same banditti) by marriage, who therefore harbours and protects these offenders.

2. I beg to suggest to you, that you adopt measures with a view to furnish me with authority to apply to the commanding officer at Sooltanpore to proceed to the apprehension of any of the banditti whom I may send people to point out; the present moment, whilst Lieutenant Ellison's detachment is out, appearing to me the most favourable for our best and united efforts to extirpate this horde of depredators.

I have the honour of submitting to your Excellency a translation of a letter received from Mr. Fortescue, Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad. The spirit and tenor of the orders of Government to me, which were recently communicated to your Excellency, both verbally and in writing, cannot have escaped your recollection. In pursuance of the orders referred to, as it is established by Mr. Fortescue's letter that the marauder, Surnam Sing, and his associates are now concealed in the village of Buhia, in the zemindary of Bukhtawar Sing, where they are protected by that Zemindar, if your Excellency conceive that your orders to the Aumil of Sooltanpore will produce the apprehension of the marauder, or his detention in the village abovementioned till the British troops can arrive to apprehend him, I suggest that those orders be issued, in order that, if possible, the accomplishment of this important object be effected through the exertions of your officers, for the satisfaction and gratification of our Government. But, with a view to greater precaution, I shall instruct the commanding officer at Sooltanpore to detach a part of his force for the seizure of the marauder in question.

I further propose to your Excellency, in compliance with the desire of the Magistrate, that a general order be issued to Colonel Kyan, to apprehend such other fugitives from the Honourable Company's territory as the Magistrate's spies may point out.

Letter
from the Vizier.

Your letter submitted yesterday, with a translation of Mr. Fortescue's letter, stating "the abode of Surnam Sing in the village of Buhia," &c., (to the end) has been perused.

The apprehension of those marauders is desired by the Presence, and a plan for this purpose, which has been devised, shall be written to you the day after tomorrow. You are, therefore, required to suspend issuing any orders to the commanding officer, until the plan and manner of apprehending those marauders be adjusted.

When the manner is adjusted you may write.

From the same, of the same date.

Letter
from Secretary to
Government.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 15th January, with the several documents stated to be enclosed in it, and to communicate to you the following resolutions, which the unaccommodating conduct of the Vizier on the subject to which your despatch relates, has compelled the Governor-General in Council to adopt.

2. The conditions which the Vizier has thought proper to annex to his consent to the employment of the British troops stationed within his territories for the apprehension of banditti infesting the Honourable Company's adjoining provinces and finding refuge in the Vizier's country, demonstrate either the absence of any cordial desire on his Excellency's part to co-operate with the Company in repressing so great an evil, and depriving the offenders of the shelter and support they now find in his territories, or some unwarranted and offensive suspicion and jealousy respecting the object this Government may have in view in the proposed plan, the nature and grounds of which his Excellency should be called upon to avow distinctly, and to substantiate, if he can, by some satisfactory proof.

3. The almost invariable failure of every attempt to secure offenders in which his Excellency's officers have had any share, leaves no room to hope that they will be more successful in future ; and his Lordship in Council is concerned to declare, that he can ascribe his Excellency's conduct in insisting on a mode of proceeding, of the inefficacy of which experience has afforded the strongest proof, to no motive consistent with friendship or sincerity.

4. Under a deliberate conviction of the truth of this proposition, it has now become the duty of the British Government, after one more attempt to obtain his Excellency's co-operation, to resort to the only means which remain to secure the territory and subjects of the Honourable Company from the evils to which they are exposed, by the weakness, treachery, and corruption of the Vizier's officers, namely, by the employment of the troops stationed within his Excellency's dominions, as often as occasions for employing them on this species of service may arise, without reference to his Excellency's authority.

5. His Lordship in Council has accordingly resolved to authorize the officers commanding posts and detachments within the territory of Oude, on the receipt of an application, either from you or from the Magistrates of the neighbouring districts, accompanied by certain information of the hiding places of public offenders, to detach the troops under their command for the apprehension of the persons so pointed out, without any communication with the officers of the local government.

6. It is judged proper to limit this authority to cases in which the information is precise and authentic, as any such movements of the troops on uncertain grounds, would afford some countenance to those objections to the measure of employing them on the service in question, which are now so entirely destitute of force or plausibility.

7. With this limitation, then, you are desired to furnish the commanding officers with authority and instructions to the foregoing effect, transmitting a copy of your instructions for the information of Government, and to make the necessary communications to the Magistrates of the adjacent districts in the Company's territory.

8. As it would on all accounts, however, be desirable that the measures now determined on should be taken in concert with the Vizier, it will be proper for you, previously to issuing the instructions in question, to apprize his his Excellency of the substance of the present orders, and make another attempt to obtain his assent to the arrangement, and his cordial co-operation in carrying it into effect. It may be proper, on this occasion, to recall to his attention the representations which you conveyed to him under the instructions of the 8th May and 23d of October, pointing out to him that the measure now taken falls far short of the exercise of our unquestionable rights, which would entitle us not only to employ the force within the country for the apprehension of robbers and murderers, but under the many ineffectual applications to his Excellency for the same purpose, to march the troops across the frontier in order to effect that object. Our preference of the former measure may be instanced as a strong proof of the moderation of the British Government, and its desire to accomplish this just and legitimate object by the means least repugnant to his Excellency's feelings.

9. You will again press upon him the explanation of Lord Cornwallis's declaration, contained in Mr. Edmonstone's despatch of the 8th of May, exposing the futility of his attempt to pervert it into an entire abandonment of our right to correct those evils for which no remedy can be obtained from his Excellency's own Government.

10. It will not be inappropriate to the present purpose, to exhibit the contrast between his Excellency's conduct and that of the States in alliance or friendship with the British Government. The enclosed extract from a despatch from the Resident at Hyderabad will enable you to explain the cordial and effectual co-operation afforded by the Government of his Highness the Nizam, for the purpose of seizing or destroying marauders who plunder the Company's territories and find refuge in those of the Nizam.

11. The recent proceedings of Scindiah's Government, and the exertions of the Maharajah, between whom and the British Government no other relation than that of peace and friendship subsists, in effecting the apprehension of the banditti who attacked Mr. Halhed in Sindouse, have probably come to your knowledge, and will afford another, and even stronger ground of representation to the Vizier, whose much more intimate connection and intercourse with the British Government would naturally have led to the expectation of a very different result of any comparison between his conduct and that of other princes, in instances so nearly affecting the interests of the British Government.

12. The enclosed extracts from the recent correspondence on this subject with the Resident at the court of Dowlut Rao Scindiah, will enable you to state the transaction in a clear and authentic manner.

13. His Lordship in Council hopes that, by a solemn representation to the foregoing effect, accompanied by a communication of the positive resolution of the Governor-General in Council, as notified in this dispatch, you may succeed in your endeavours to prevail on the Vizier to withdraw his opposition to the arrangement above adverted to; and in that case, the several orders, both to the British officers and to his Excellency's Aumils and others, will be issued in concert with his Excellency. If unhappily, however, his Excellency shall continue to refuse or evade a compliance, you will proceed without further delay to carry into effect the instructions contained in the fifth paragraph of this letter.

Letter

Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 15th January 1813.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of the 9th instant, in answer to mine of the 18th ultimo.

As the whole of the contents of this letter are in direct opposition to the arrangement proposed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, as explained in my letter of the 12th of September last (4th Ramzaun 1227), and to the orders of Government received by me, and submitted to your Excellency in my letter of the 19th ultimo; and as it is the decided opinion of the Government, as well as my own, proceeding on the experience of a period of ten years, that the co-operation of your Excellency's Aumils with the commanding officers of British troops employed in the pursuit of delinquents or fugitives from our dominions, nay, even the previous knowledge by your Excellency's Aumils of the movement of a British detachment for such a purpose, must prove the certain cause of failure and disappointment in the accomplishment of the object in view; in addition to which it should be remembered, that the proposal now offered for your Excellency's acquiescence has been induced not merely by the negligence of your Excellency's officers, or their connivance with the delinquents in question, but by the apparent and established inefficacy of all the measures which your Excellency has hitherto adopted for the apprehension of those marauders, in other words, by your Excellency's disinclination or inability to redress the injuries of which we have so long and so justly complained, and which the experience of ten years has proved to be unsusceptible of redress, by any other means than those now suggested for your acquiescence: under all these circumstances, it is, of course, with the deepest concern that I feel myself called upon to report to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, your Excellency's ultimate rejection of the just and unobjectionable arrangement which his Lordship in Council proposed, and to submit for his Lordship's perusal, in the correspondence that has recently passed, the apparently frivolous grounds on which your Excellency's rejection has proceeded.

I request that your Excellency will inform me whether or not the Aumil of Sooltanpore has obeyed your Excellency's orders for the seizure of the marauder, Surnam Sing; and if not, I again submit to your Excellency the propriety of your sanctioning my orders to the commanding officer of the troops at Sooltanpore, in the terms which were formerly suggested.

The original nature and tendency of the late Governor-General, Marquess Cornwallis's, concession to your Excellency, as conveyed in his orders to Colonel Collins, and the just and obvious grounds on which that concession should now be modified or altered, have been already fully explained to you in the abstract of the orders of Government under date the 8th May last, which I submitted to your Excellency in writing, at our conference of the 19th ultimo.

Letter
from the Vizier.

Your letter, submitted on the 15th instant, in answer to the shookha of the Presence dated the 9th, stating that "the whole of the contents of the shookha were in direct opposition to the measures proposed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General," &c. has been perused.

The case is this: what has been written from the Presence is in conformity with the terms of the treaty. The sole wish of the Presence is to retain full power and authority in my own country; and the seizure of fugitives and marauders, which is the sincere desire of the Presence, may be accomplished in the manner which the Presence has pointed out.

In answer to what has been submitted by you, that "the suggestion of the measures proposed has been induced, not merely by the neglect and inattention of my officers in the seizure of delinquents, but by the apparent inefficacy of the means adopted hitherto for that purpose by the Presence," &c.

The case is: That in the event of the British troops being employed on this service, with the consent of the Presence, neglect and inattention on the part of the Aumils can no longer be an obstacle to success. And with a reference to the case of Surnam Sing, the arzee of Gholaum Hoosein, Aumil of Sooltanpore, in answer to a shookha from the Presence, has already been sent for your information.

In reply to your request of being informed of the sentiments of the Presence, regarding your issuing orders to the commanding officer of the troops at Sooltanpore, in the terms suggested by the Magistrate of Elahabad; my wish on this subject is still the same, which has already been made known to you.

And with a reference to what you have stated "respecting the orders issued by the late Governor-General, Marquess Cornwallis, to Colonel Collins," &c. As many important affairs are conducted agreeably to the treaty, and the Presence has confidence in its tenor and contents, which might be shaken in other instances, also, by a departure from it on the present occasion, therefore it is better to adhere to it. But the Presence is adverse to long discussions, which are highly disagreeable; and therefore, if, through your friendship, this matter can be settled in the way the Presence wishes, it is well.

I have the honour of submitting to your Excellency a translation of a letter which I have received from Mr. Fortescue, the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad.

The failure of the apprehension of Surnam Sing and his associates, in consequence of the suspension, at your Excellency's request, of the orders which I had issued in the first instance to Colonel Kyan, and the improbability, or rather the impossibility of the seizure of the above offender, or any other, save by the means which our Government has suggested, must now be as apparent to your Excellency as they have been made manifest to me by the experience of several years; while, on the other hand, your Excellency's apprehension of a loss of power or authority, by your acquiescence in the proposal of the Government, detailed in its orders to me, of which your Excellency has been furnished with a copy, must appear, on mature consideration, to your Excellency, as well as to me, to be totally imaginary and groundless.

To my judgment there is not a single remark, far less an argument, in your Excellency's letter on this subject of the 23d instant that could require consideration or reply.

With a reference to what your Excellency has written, that "your proposal is agreeable to treaty:" there is surely no provision in the treaty, nor in the orders orders issued by Lord Cornwallis, which can possibly militate against the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council's recent proposal to your Excellency for the employment of British troops, already stationed within your territory, in the only manner that can render their services effectual for the apprehension or suppression of marauders.

Nay, on the contrary, Lord Cornwallis's instructions to the Resident at your Excellency's Court, under which he desisted from urging you on the point of the pursuit of marauders by our troops from the ceded territory, proceeded on the obvious supposition, and indeed on the express provision, that our troops in your Excellency's dominions should perform the service effectually, and should accomplish the object in view; and, under these circumstances, it is obvious that your Excellency's continued objection to the only practicable means of the accomplishment of the object in view, may be very fairly ascribed to a desire for the protraction of those injuries which our Government has so justly complained of, and called upon your Excellency to remove.

The whole of our former correspondence on this subject having been already submitted to the Government, whose final orders I have reason shortly to expect, I might have awaited the communication of those orders ere I addressed your Excellency again; yet, in the spirit of cordial friendship, and with a view to the preservation of harmony, I entreat your acquiescence once more in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's proposal.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th, together with its enclosure in the Persian Language from his Excellency the Vizier, detailing the measures adopted under his orders for the apprehension of Surnam Sing, and regret to observe, that the plan followed was ill calculated to effect the object intended.

2. It would seem obvious, that previous, open, and systematic preparations for proceeding to the village, without a guide or a person to point out Surnam Sing, who is always on his guard, afford but little prospect of success, whilst, on the other hand, the informers whom I had sent to Sooltanpore could have shewn the place of his residence to the troops deputed to seize him, and they would not have induced Colonel Kyan to move until they had accurately marked the spot of Surnam Sing's concealment.

3. I request you will induce his Excellency to sanction the renewal of the orders which you had given to Colonel Kyan of the 5th instant; and although the alarm given to Surnam Sing, by the late unsuccessful proceeding, may for the present defeat our efforts to secure him, yet I trust, by the active co-operation of those immediately subject to our Government, we may hereafter obtain possession of his person, with others connected with him. At the same time, I cannot omit the present opportunity, of strongly recommending that, on every occasion, we endeavour to dispense with the proffered aid of his Excellency's officers, which, although granted with every apparent feature of a sincerely good intention on his part, is seldom attended with that success which, under a different system of Government, might be expected, and which, if left to ourselves, we may effect.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 26th February 1813.

To John Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir :

1. The necessities and importunities of her Highness the younger Begum, since her departure from this province towards Elahabad, have induced me to open a negotiation with his Excellency the Vizier for the commutation of her jagier and provisions for a fixed annual stipend, under the instructions of Government contained in the Chief Secretary's letter of the 11th of September last, sooner than I originally intended, and without awaiting a communication of the sentiments of the Government regarding it, in a direct address to his Excellency the Vizier, or to the Begum, from the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

2. The enclosed copies and translations of letters which have passed on the subject between his Excellency and me, will shew the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council the actual state of the negotiation, and will evince to his Lordship in Council that there is scarcely a shadow of hope of persuading his Excellency the Vizier to do full justice to the Begum, or of inducing her Highness to accept the allowance which his Excellency has offered.

3. A number of creditable witnesses might be called to establish the original amount of the allowance for the supply of her Highness's table ; but his Excellency has distinctly expressed his resolution to reject every evidence that may be offered, save authenticated written documents, which he knows cannot be produced, and indeed were never extant on the subject : and, with regard to the revenue of the jagier, which appears to me to be established in the ordinary manner, by the attested statement of the hereditary revenue officers of the district, his Excellency's refusal to admit that statement, and his wish for an investigation ex-parte by a person of his own exclusive selection, would seem to me to be unreasonable in the extreme.

4. His anxiety to get possession of the jagier on any reasonable terms, as the only practicable means of precluding future disputes, was acknowledged and apparent, while the Begum's consent to relinquish it was a matter of doubt and apprehension : but no sooner had her Highness consented to a transfer, on just and reasonable terms, at my earnest entreaty, than his Excellency's anxiety was at an end ; and an alleged inaccuracy in her Highness's statement of the revenue became a pretext for an unprecedented species of investigation, which has manifestly for its object the reduction of her income to a sum inadequate to her support.

5. I suggested to his Excellency in vain, the deputation of Ameens on both parts, with a third to be selected by me, for the purpose of ascertaining the real revenue of the jagier, or its being offered publicly in farm, and his Excellency's receiving it at the valuation, which a farmer might undertake to pay with undoubted security for the establishment and with a firm and steady supply of provisions.

stated a mean ratio between her Highness's demand and his offer, which appeared to be reasonable for both parties, but which his Excellency has been pleased to reject in the most positive and resolute terms.

6. Under all the circumstances described, any further attempt upon my part to reconcile those personages to each other, or to induce his Excellency the Vizier to do justice to her Highness the Begum, must of course be totally unavailing; and I am compelled to submit the question again for the consideration and final decision of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

7. I shall use my best endeavours to dissuade her Highness the Begum from quitting Elahabad for the present; although her disappointment in the hope of comfortable accommodation, and the uncommonly high price of provisions at that place, must render her residence there extremely irksome and inconvenient.

With a reference to what you have stated regarding the provisions supplied to her Highness the Bhabee Begum, the case is this:

An Extract from my letter of the 18th ultimo to your address is enclosed for your information; and agreeably to my promise in that letter, the sum of Rupees 4,662 is sent to you on account of the Khassa, being the amount due from the 29th of Rumzaun to the 14th Zeehijj, at the rate of sixty-three Rupees per diem.

With regard to her Highness's jagier, I transmit for your information an account of the jumma of it.

I have never heard, nor has any person ever represented to me, that confusion and disturbance have been excited in it by the Aumils of the Khalsa.

Extract from His Excellency the Vizier's Letter, dated the 18th November, referred to in the above.

"With regard to the future satisfaction of the Begum and the fulfilment of all her reasonable wishes and views, no fault shall be committed hereafter on my part; and with a view to her immediate gratification, I agree to commute the provisions which are cooked and supplied to her Highness by my officers, though it be contrary to the custom of my Government, for a certain allowance in money, according to your desire."

Letter

Lucknow.

The money which I received from your Excellency on account of the Khassa of her Highness the Begum Shams-oon-Nissa, namely, the sum of Rupees 4,662, has been deposited in the treasury, as already stated to your Excellency, to await the adjustment of the account. I now submit to your Excellency what I deem to be just and proper, with a reference to the khassa and jagier of her Highness.

The daily expenditure, as originally fixed in the time of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood Dowlah, for the supply of her Highness's kitchen, amounted, as she herself was pleased to declare to me, to the sum of one hundred and twenty-five Rupees; and this statement has been subsequently confirmed, in my belief, by the reports of her Highness's officers and others, who must have been acquainted with the circumstances of the case; in addition to which, it would appear from the statement of Tuhseen Alee Khan, supporting the Begum's declaration, that on an occasion during the Residency of the late Colonel Scott, when the supply of ready-dressed provisions to her Highness was suspended, on some account, for a time, your Excellency sent to her Highness by the hands of Tuhseen Alee Khan at the requisition of Colonel Scott, the sum of Rupees 3,400, on account, as Tuhseen declares, of twenty-eight days in the month of Rumzaun 1216.

It is highly probable, however, as your Excellency has remarked, that the actual expense of the khassa, in latter times, has been no more than sixty-three Rupees per diem: and this is consistent with the fact, that since the year of my arrival at Lucknow her Highness has constantly complained to me of the badness and scantiness of her provisions. Not a month, nor scarcely a week, has elapsed, without complaints of this nature being brought to me; so that the persons appointed by your Excellency to supply provisions for the Begum must have reduced and debased the allowance and quality of the supplies, with the view of pleasing your Excellency by their economy, without regard to her Highness's comfort; and thus the original sum of one hundred and twenty-five Rupees per diem has by degrees been reduced to sixty-three. But it is surely very apparent, that a reduction of this nature can never be pleaded in proof of the sum of sixty-three Rupees having been fixed originally as the allowance for her Highness's supplies; and, consequently, that the amount of the original allowance is that of her Highness's just claim. Nevertheless, as it is always my anxious desire to adjust matters in the easiest and most satisfactory manner, I submit for your Excellency's consideration, that the sum of one hundred Rupees per diem be now fixed by your Excellency as the allowance for her Highness's provisions; and I offer my mediation with her Highness to induce her acceptance of this sum. A smaller allowance than this I cannot, with any propriety, presume to propose to her Highness.

The amount of the revenue of the jagier will still remain to be adjusted; and with this view I submit, for your Excellency's information, a triennial account of the jumma, under the seal of the Chowdree of the jagier, by which your Excellency will perceive that the gross revenue of the fusly year 1219 amounted to the sum of Rupees 62,623, exclusive of the rent of a village which is held by Tuhseen Alee Khan from her Highness rent free, and which will of course remain as heretofore. From the above amount, agreeably to the statement delivered in by the Begum's Vakeel and the Chowdree, the sum of Rupees 5,045 is to be deducted for the annual expenses of collection, the particulars of which will appear to your Excellency on perusal of another statement which is enclosed. Thus, after deducting the expense of collection, the net jumma of the jagier for one year is Rupees 57,578 1.

In the statement which was sent by your Excellency, a further deduction of Rupees 4,094 8 6 per annum is claimed under the head of unrealized balances, which are said to be annually remitted.

It is surprising, your Excellency will admit, and unprecedented in my belief, that in a district of so limited a revenue and extent, so large a deduction should be claimed under the head of irrecoverable balances, so as to constitute an annual loss; and, besides, I am perfectly satisfied, that if so great a deduction were just, the Chowdree of the jagier would have noticed it. Nevertheless, if your Excellency desire a more minute investigation of this matter, I shall require from the Aumil, and produce to your Excellency the kabooleats of all the Zemindars of the jagier for the present fusly year, to prove the amount of the assessment. Again, the expense of collection, which is stated in your Excellency's estimate at the rate of ten per cent. on the jumma, seems to me to be highly exorbitant. In the Honourable Company's dominions, it is true, at the commencement of the system of Tehsildarree, an allowance of ten per cent. was granted to the Tehsildar; but at that period the country was unsettled, and since the settlement has been properly made the above allowance has been withdrawn; and in many muhals, to my knowledge, only five per cent. is allowed to cover the expense of collection. In addition to which, it is obvious that if the officers of her Highness the Begum, with power and means so circumscribed, have been able to collect her revenue at the small expense which is stated, your Excellency's power and means should reduce that expense still further; and as I can never permit myself to suppose that your Excellency in this arrangement would seek any personal gain, to the prejudice of her Highness the Begum, I submit with confidence for your ready acquiescence and sanction, the following statement of the amount to be annually paid to her Highness, in lieu of her jagier and provisions.

The annual jumma of the jagier to be estimated at Rupees 57,578-1, and the supply for her Highness's kitchen at the annual sum of Rupees 36,000, making in the aggregate Rupees 93,578-1 per annum, or the sum of Rupees 7,798-2-9 per mensem. If your Excellency be pleased to agree to this estimate, and to pay into the Honourable Company's Treasury at Lucknow the sum which is above stated, I am prepared, under the authority of the Begum, to place your Excellency's officers in possession of the jagier without any further delay, and I shall instruct the Collector of Elahabad to pay that amount to her Highness.

The collections from the jagier for this year, when ascertained by your Excellency's officers in concert with the Begum's, shall be carried to your Excellency's credit in account.

Resident.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 27th December 1812.)

Your letter, dated the 23d instant, regarding the amount of the allowance in money, in lieu of the provision and revenue of the jagier of her Highness the Bhabee Begum, with its enclosures, has been received. The state of the case is this : The full amount of the allowance for provisions up to the 14th of Zeehijj has been sent to you already, agreeably to my promise, and at the same rate it may be paid to you hereafter. It was formerly my determination to give nothing on this account till her Highness should accede to my desire ; yet, although it be contrary to the custom of my Government, in compliance with your request I relinquish that resolution, and in the terms of my shookha dated the 18th of November (13th Zeekaud), I still agree to continue the allowance at the rate which is there specified.

Regarding what you have stated respecting an occurrence in the time of the Residency of Colonel Scott, as a proof of a larger allowance, I recollect nothing of the matter ; and there being no writing to prove it, I cannot credit the mere assertion of any person.

I transmitted to you formerly a copy of the statement of the revenue of the jagier which was submitted for my information ; and as I know nothing of the actual amount of the revenue or capability of the jagier, nor, as you say, do I wish either profit to the prejudice of the Begum, nor loss to my own prejudice, it appears to me to be advisable that a person be deputed from the Presence to the jagier, to ascertain its actual revenue and assets from the Seghadars on the spot, and report them to the Presence ; and agreeably to his report, an allowance in money for the jagier, after making the necessary deductions for expense of collection, &c. shall be regularly paid to her Highness. The commission on the amount of the revenue, as expense of collection, has been fixed agreeably to the custom in my dominions.

Letter
from the Begum.

From Her Highness the Begum Shums-oon-Nissa. (Received the 10th January 1813.)

By the blessing of God my health is now re-established. On the 16th of December I arrived at Elahabad, and was anxiously wishing to hear of your health and welfare, when your letters, dated the 24th and 29th of December, with copies of two letters from my brother to your address, were received. I have understood all their contents. My friend, you have undoubtedly exerted yourself to the utmost in your power for the adjustment of the affairs of my Sircar; but as the settlement was not in your power, and the result was in the hands of others, nothing has been done to my satisfaction.

With regard to what you have stated of the demand of my brother for authentic documents to establish the amount of my khassa (provisions), and his agreeing to pay sixty-three rupees per diem on that account, if my brother will not admit what was paid to me by himself in the time of the late Colonel Scott, and demands stronger proof than this payment, to what else can I ascribe it than his desire to continue to vex and harass me? and, in this case, how can I expect that he will credit the testimony of other witnesses, who are well acquainted with the original circumstances of the case? It seems advisable, and now indispensable, that I quit this city and proceed to Calcutta, to lay my grievances before the Right Honourable the Governor-General, Lord Minto, in person; for as justice is the peculiar attribute of the Honourable Company, and his Lordship in a particular degree has ever been attentive to my distresses, he will doubtless, on this occasion, befriend me, prevent others from oppressing me to such a degree, and direct the satisfaction of all my just claims and demands by my brother.

Under these circumstances, I do not wish, for the present, to take money in lieu of my jagier. I shall shortly transmit to you a letter to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, stating the hardships which I still suffer from my brother, notwithstanding my having quitted his country, and my intention of proceeding to Calcutta to seek redress.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 12th ultimo, on the subject of the commutation of the jagier of Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and the supplies for her Highness's table, which she has been accustomed to receive from the Vizier's kitchen, for a fixed annual payment in money.

2. It is with regret that the Governor-General in Council has learned that the Vizier, after admitting the principle of the proposed arrangement, has pertinaciously opposed the accomplishment of it, by withholding his consent to the only fair and equitable means of ascertaining the value of the objects of the commutation.

3. His Lordship in Council can ascribe to no other cause than a desire to defeat an arrangement to which he has given a pretended consent, the conduct of his Excellency, in requiring that the value of the jagier shall be determined by the result of an investigation to be conducted by Ameer of his own selection, and in demanding the production of written vouchers in support of the amount of the supplies which, as you state, he knows have never existed.

4. After having undertaken the adjustment of this affair on behalf of the Begum, and having obtained her consent to the commutation of the jagier, as a mode of adjustment supposed to be more satisfactory to the Vizier than that formerly proposed by the Begum, the Governor-General in Council cannot with propriety relinquish his endeavours to effect the attainment of these objects without a further effort. It is true that we cannot insist upon his Excellency's acquiescence in the proposed arrangement; but since he has admitted the propriety of it generally, we shall be justified in urging him to adopt the only measure which can give it effect, by consenting to a fair and impartial inquiry into the actual amount of the jagier and of the provisions. You are, therefore, authorized to renew, in urgent terms, and in the name of the Governor-General in Council, your representations on this subject, pointing out to his Excellency not only the injustice of exposing the Begum to pecuniary loss, by an arrangement rendered necessary only by the vexation and disquiet which have compelled her to seek an asylum in the Honourable Company's dominions, but the deep injury which his reputation for humanity, generosity, and good faith, must sustain, if, after consenting to the measure in question, he shall continue to throw obstacles in the way of its accomplishment, which will doubtless be ascribed by the world to the most unworthy motives. You will urge his Excellency to admit the valuation of the jagier, founded on the statements of the hereditary revenue officers of the district, or to consent to one of the other modes of ascertaining the value of it offered by you to his Excellency's consideration. If he shall persist in his opposition to all those modes of proceeding, you will state to him expressly that the Governor-General in Council will consider him to have retracted the consent already formally given, and urge him to reflect on the impression which such conduct must make on the mind of his Lordship in Council. You will then proceed to apprise him of the desire formerly expressed by the Begum to Colonel Scott, to place the management of her jagier under the superintendence and guarantee of the British Government, accompanied by the explanation suggested in the fifth paragraph of Colonel Scott's letter of the 27th October 1802; and you will omit no argument calculated to prevail on him to accede to this arrangement, or to the preferable one of a just and fair commutation of the jagier for a fixed annual stipend. If your endeavours to obtain his consent to either shall be fruitless, you will be pleased to submit the case for the further consideration and orders of the Governor-General in Council.

5. With respect to the supplies, you appear to be satisfied that they have been greatly under-rated by the Vizier, and his Lordship in Council trusts that, by renewing your representations on this subject, and stating to the Vizier the earnest desire of the British Government that the just expectations of the Begum on this head should be realized, you will succeed in fixing the amount to be paid to her Highness at the rate you proposed, or at least at a sum more nearly approaching what is supposed to have been the cost of the provisions than that tendered by his Excellency.

6. The Governor-General in Council is not aware of any further instructions that can be furnished in the present state of the business.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 29th ultimo, in answer to mine of the 15th, conveying the orders of Government for the employment of the British troops stationed in the Vizier's dominions, on the requisition of the Magistrates of contiguous districts, to seize the persons of marauders and other public offenders against our government, who may find refuge in the territory of the Vizier.

2. The substance of your letter above noticed was communicated, and translations of all its enclosures were presented and read, to the Vizier, at a conference which took place in the palace, on Tuesday the 16th instant, when his Excellency was formally and solemnly apprized of my resolution to carry the orders of Government into effect, with or without his concurrence, on the ensuing Thursday or Friday, and every argument that I could think of was adduced to obtain his concurrence in the measure, and to save him the discredit of having opposed, from motives of enmity to our Government, an arrangement so totally unobjectionable, and so indispensable to the protection of our subjects from injuries, for the redress of which his Government was solely responsible.

3. On my return from the palace on Tuesday last, I was followed by a messenger from his Excellency, to request a translation of the orders of Government conveyed to me by your despatch, and to announce his intention of committing his sentiments and ultimate determination on the subject of them to writing, though without any wish or design to suspend the execution of the orders which he was aware of the necessity of my obeying.

4. I complied with his Excellency's request, repeating my earnest advice and entreaty that his determination might be such as I should feel pleasure in conveying to his Excellency's friend, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and suggesting the utter impossibility of any further delay, upon my part, in the execution of his Lordship's commands; as well as announcing my resolution to refrain from making any reply to such remarks and objections as his Excellency had been in the habit of offering, and might now be disposed to renew, for the purpose of evading this arrangement. I accompanied my transmission of a Persian copy of the substance of the orders of Government with that of a copy of instructions to be issued to the commanding officers of our troops, and of corresponding instructions from his Excellency to his Aumils, which I submitted the propriety of his issuing, in the case of his concurrence in the arrangement. Copies of both those documents are transmitted by this despatch, for his Lordship in Council's information.

5. On Friday the 19th instant, I had the honour of receiving from his Excellency a short letter, conveying and referring to a statement of his sentiments and wishes on the subject of the proposed arrangement, in which his Excellency was pleased to depart from one of the conditions that were formerly annexed to his consent, namely, the presence and co-operation of his Aumils with the commanding officers of our troops, but to insist on a particular communication to himself, through the medium of the Resident at his Court, of the precise nature and object of every requisition from a Magistrate, before that requisition should be forwarded, or a movement of the troops be authorized, in any emergency whatever. The letter further conveyed a document of considerable length, intended as an answer to the arguments arising out of the amicable conduct of their Highnesses the Nizam and Maharajah Dowlut Rao Scindiah towards the British Government, on occasions similar to the present, contrasted with the conduct of the Vizier.

6. The nature of the latter condition imposed by his Excellency on his consent to the arrangement prescribed by our Government being obviously hostile to its success, if not intended to frustrate its object, and the arguments, or rather the groundless remarks, by which this condition was supported, appearing to me to be frivolous and perverse in the extreme, I adhered to and repeated my resolution to refrain from making any reply to them; and I exhibited to his Excellency's confidential servant, who brought me his letter, my instructions to the commanding officers of Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, in the form of despatches prepared for transmission, and to be transmitted in the course of that evening.

7. His Excellency shortly after announced his intention to honour me with his company at breakfast on the following morning: and in the expectation of ultimate success in obtaining his consent to the arrangement, I postponed the transmission of my letters to the commanding officers of the troops.

8. The

8. The result has been propitious to my views. At a conference this morning, which lasted for several hours, and during which I successively combated the remarks in his Excellency's statements, and a number of others equally frivolous, perverse, and absurd, I succeeded at length in obtaining his seemingly cordial consent to an arrangement, which appears to be calculated to answer all the purposes in view, to the extent contemplated by the Government, and prescribed by its instructions to me in the Chief Secretary's despatch under date the 21st of August last.

10. Translations of the letter and statements received from his Excellency the Vizier on Friday the 19th instant, and a detail of the arguments by which his Excellency's remarks were successfully combated at the conference of this morning, shall hereafter be submitted for his Lordship in Council's information.

Sir :

1. The frequent outrages and depredations committed in the district of Elahabad, by fugitives and outlaws from the British territory, finding refuge in the dominions of the Vizier, and the general failure of the measures hitherto adopted by this Government for the suppression or seizure of those marauders, or their expulsion from the territory of the Vizier, appearing to his Excellency and to me to require the adoption of more prompt and effectual measures for the accomplishment of the object in view, I have the honour of transmitting to you, for your particular information and guidance, the enclosed translation of instructions which have this day been issued by his Excellency, in compliance with my suggestion, to the Aumils of the districts around you; and, in the spirit of those instructions, I have further the honour to desire that, on every future occasion of your receipt of authentic intelligence from the Magistrate of the zillah of Elahabad, or from persons deputed by that officer, of the concealment of a marauder or other public delinquent in the vicinity of the station which you command, you will be pleased, without any delay, on the requisition of the above-mentioned officer, to adopt the necessary measures for the seizure of the delinquent described, by proceeding with the troops under your orders, or detaching a portion of them on this service, as the circumstances of the case may suggest.

2. You will exercise your own judgment in deciding on the propriety of your apprizing the Vizier's Aumil, or other officers, of the intelligence which you receive from the Magistrate, and the measures which you intend to adopt, requiring or dispensing with the aid and co-operation of the Aumil, as they may tend, in your own opinion, to facilitate or impede your success; and you will be pleased to report to the Magistrate and to me, for the information of his Excellency and of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, your proceedings on every occasion of the nature to which these instructions refer.

Instructions to Aumils.

The relations of friendship and amity between the Honourable Company's Government and this being established in such a degree, that the rebels or enemies of either Government, and all public offenders against either, are alike the enemies of both, and the seizure and punishment of such offenders the duty and interest of both, and it being understood by the Presence that, notwithstanding repeated and most positive injunctions to the contrary, a number of fugitives and outlaws from the British territory, finding refuge and protection in this country, commit outrages and depredations in the Honourable Company's districts, and evade the punishment of their crimes; therefore, with a view to the more effectual prevention of those depredations in future, and to the seizure and punishment of the offenders, as well as in consideration of the firm friendship and unity subsisting between the two States, it is now determined and agreed, that all commanding officers of British troops stationed in the frontier districts of the territory of the Presence, be, for the future, instructed and authorized, on their receiving authentic intelligence from the Magistrates of contiguous districts in the British dominions of the concealment of a rebel, marauder, or other public offender, in any village or place in the vicinity of the station which they command, to march promptly and suddenly, without previous communication with any one, to the place of the delinquent's concealment, and seize and secure his person, requiring for that purpose, or not, as the commanding officer may think proper, the aid of the officers of this Government and their co-operation in the service proposed.

You are therefore commanded to take notice of the object and purport of these orders, and to warn the Zemindars, &c. of your district, by proclamation, that they hereafter refrain from protecting or harbouring marauders or fugitives of any description from the British territory, the inevitable consequences of which must be the employment of the Company's troops for the seizure of the fugitives so harboured, and the most severe and exemplary punishment of the Zemindars by the Presence, in proportion to the enormity of their crimes.

You are further, on every occasion of a requisition or summons from the commanding officer of the troops, to comply with the object of his requisition, to give implicit obedience to his orders, and provide supplies for the troops in whatever direction they may proceed.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my letter under date the 9th instant, I have now the satisfaction of informing you, that an arrangement has been concluded this day between the British Government and his Excellency the Vizier, under which the several commanding officers of British troops stationed in his Excellency's dominions will hereafter be authorized and instructed to comply with the requisitions of the Magistrates of all the contiguous districts in the Honourable Company's territory, for the apprehension of every marauder and public offender against our Government, who may be ascertained by precise information to have found refuge, and to be actually concealed, in the neighbourhood of any station or post within the Vizier's dominions.

2. The conditions of this arrangement on the part of the British Government are merely the two following, namely: First, that the information of the place of residence or actual concealment of the offender to be seized, on which the Magistrate's requisition to the commanding officer of a post or station may proceed, be particular, precise, and authentic, with a view to preclude, as far as possible, the unnecessary movement of the troops; and secondly, that before issuing a requisition for the seizure of any marauder in the territory of his Excellency the Vizier, the Magistrate of the contiguous district shall transmit to the Resident at Lucknow, for his Excellency's exclusive information, a general list of

of the names of all the public offenders whose apprehension may be desired by the Magistrate, and for whose seizure his requisitions are to be afterwards issued without reserve, in his ascertaining the place of their concealment.

3. On the part of his Excellency the Vizier, in addition to the general authority for the employment of the British troops in his dominions on the requisition of the Magistrates, as above-mentioned, for the seizure of offenders against our Government, it is particularly provided and agreed, that the officers of his Excellency's Government shall have no knowledge whatever of, nor any participation in, the measures to be adopted by commanding officers, save by their own immediate communication and desire; and further, that even the names of the offenders, to be communicated in the first place by the Magistrates for the Vizier's exclusive information, shall never, on any occasion, or for any purpose whatever, be mentioned to his Excellency's Aumils, or to any other officer of his Government.

4. I transmit for your more particular information regarding the details of the important and beneficial arrangement which has thus been concluded with the Vizier, the enclosed copies of instructions which will be issued by his Excellency and by me to his Aumils and our officers respectively, without any further delay; and I have only to solicit the favour of your furnishing, at your earliest convenience, the list of public offenders which his Excellency has been pleased to require, and which I have engaged to submit to him before the actual movement of any detachment of our troops in compliance with your requisition.

2. The principal condition of his Excellency's consent to the beneficial arrangement under which those instructions have been issued to the several commanding officers of British troops in his dominions, is that of his being previously furnished by the Magistrates of contiguous districts, through the medium of the Resident at his Court, with a general list of the delinquents who have fled from the British dominions, are supposed to have found refuge in his territory, and whose apprehension may hereafter become the object of a requisition for the employment of our troops, on the place of their concealment being ascertained.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 20th February, reporting your proceedings under the instructions communicated to you in my letter of the 29th January last, and the successful result of your efforts to obtain the acquiescence of the Vizier in the indispensable measure of authorizing the employment of the British troops stationed in his Excellency's dominions, on the requisition of the Magistrates of contiguous districts, for the seizure of public offenders against our Government who find refuge in the territory of Oude.

2. Tardy and reluctant as his Excellency's consent has been, it is a source of satisfaction to the Governor-General in Council that the measure has been effected in apparent concurrence with his Excellency, instead of being promulgated as the act of this Government, independently of the authority of the Vizier, thus exhibiting to the public a marked disagreement between the British Government and the Vizier, on a question of primary importance. You will observe, that the completion of this arrangement is adverted to in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, of which you will receive a copy in my separate despatch of this date. You will be pleased to exercise your own discretion, with regard to anticipating that part of his Lordship's letter by a corresponding communication to his Excellency from yourself on the part of the Government.

3. The conditions annexed to his concurrence in the measure by the Vizier, are not considered by his Lordship in Council to be likely to affect the efficacy of the arrangement.

4. The instructions issued by you to the commanding officers of the troops, and the tenor of your communications to the Magistrates, are entirely approved. There is nothing to be added but the expression of the Governor-General in Council's approbation of the judgment, spirit, and firmness, with which you have executed the instructions above referred to, and which have effected the accomplishment of a most desirable arrangement, and the removal of one more of the many vexatious and embarrassing subjects of contention between this Government and his Excellency the Vizier.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. With reference to the subject of my despatch of this date to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, I have the honour of transmitting to you thirty copies of Persian letters, exhibiting the forms of correspondence which were practised by the late Nawaub, Assuf-ood-Dowla, and by his Excellency the present Vizier during the first years of his Government, in their letters to the Resident at Lucknow, and also the forms of address to the Vizier which were practised by the late Mr. Ives, by Mr. Lumsden, and by Colonel Scott, while those gentlemen were Residents at this Court.

2. The object of transmitting the enclosed documents to you, is that of enabling you to report to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, if his Lordship in Council shall be pleased to require your report, on the nature of the change which has taken place on the part of his Excellency the Vizier in the manner of his correspondence with the Resident, and further, on the justice or injustice of the charge of disrespect in correspondence which his Excellency has preferred against me.

3. It must be totally unnecessary, on my part, to request your particular attention to the various epithets and expressions which are used in Persian correspondence, to denote the different degrees of inferiority in the rank of the person addressed with relation to the writer of a letter. You are aware that the term shookha, and the words hoozoor and ershad, are never adopted in correspondence as descriptive of the letter, the person, or the desire of the writer, save by princes or persons of the highest authority and rank, with a reference to their subjects and servants; and that the word arsee, areeza, marooz and goozarish, as descriptive of the letter, the written statement, or verbal representation of the person addressed, are highly derogatory to the condition of any person but a subject or servant. Accordingly, you will not fail to observe that in the whole of the bundles of letters marked 1, 2, 3, and 4, from the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and from the present Vizier to the Residents, Mr. Ives, Mr. Lumsden, and Colonel Scott, there is not a single instance of the application of any one of the exceptionable words above noticed, and that the terms morasula, cinjanib, goftu, khut, mokatuba, murkoom, erkām, ezhār, &c. are very properly substituted to express the same meaning: while, on the other hand, in the bundle No. 5, containing his Excellency the present Vizier's letters to my address, you will observe not only the constant application of all the above exceptionable terms, but also the style and manner throughout of a shookha or mandate from a prince to his servant of nearly the lowest degree. The expression "bu moolahuza dur amud," too, instead of woozool numood, in every one of his Excellency's letters, to signify his receipt of the Resident's letter, is, in my judgment, extremely exceptionable, and constitutes another remarkable distinction between the manner of former times and that of the present day: in addition to which, the constant introduction of the date at the end of his Excellency's letters, as well as on the envelope, denoting the manner of a shookha, is superfluous, contrary to former usage, and manifestly intended to give offence. The omission of the word sahib on the envelope is another mark of disrespect, by which his Excellency has been pleased to distinguish my immediate predecessor and myself.

5. With reference to the second object of this letter, and of the transmission of the enclosed documents to you, it is superfluous, and would perhaps be improper, to make any remarks. A comparison of any one or all of my letters to his Excellency the Vizier, of which copies are lodged in your office, with the documents in the bundle No. 6, or with the forms established in your office for your own correspondence with the Vizier, will enable you to form an accurate judgment on the nature of the charge which his Excellency has preferred against me, and to submit your opinion, if required, to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

Resident.

Persian Secretary's Report. Persian Secretary's Report on the Forms of Correspondence between the late and present Vizier and successive Residents at Lucknow.

Having been directed to report on the subject of the Persian documents transmitted by Major Baillie in his letter of the 11th ultimo, for the purpose of enabling Government to form a judgment of the general accuracy of the remarks contained in Major Baillie's address to his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier on the 8th of January, on the nature of the charge preferred by his Excellency against the Resident, of disrespect in the forms of his correspondence with his Excellency; I have examined those documents with attention, and have now the honour to report the result of that examination for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

There appear to be two questions for consideration: first, the form of the Vizier's letters to the Resident at his Court; secondly, the form of the Resident's letters to his Excellency: I shall accordingly discuss them separately in that order.

The document marked No. 1 is a copy of a letter from the late Nawaub, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, to Mr. Ives, in which the term used as descriptive of the letter received is "Khut-ikhyreeut numut," and that signifying the receipt of the letter is russeedu.

The documents marked No. 2 consist of copies of five letters from Asuf-ood-Dowlah, addressed to Mr. Lumsden.

The terms used in these letters to designate the writer and his own letter, are een janeb, or dili-dostee-munzil, or Mizaji-mowuddut-indimaj, and Muktoob-i-khyr-usloob; while those which are descriptive of the letter received are Khut-i-lhyreeut-numut, or mookatüba-khyreeut-teraz; of the person addressed, aun geramee kuddur; of the receipt of the letter and knowledge of its contents, russeedu kâshif-i hâlât gurdeed, or wusool numoodu musroor-o mootülla sakht, or wusool-i ibtilâj shumool numoodu musroor o moonbussit sâkht.

Of the letters above enumerated, none bear any date either at the foot of the letters or on the envelope.

The documents marked No. 3 consist of copies of five letters addressed by the present Vizier to Mr. Lumsden.

The writer in these letters designates himself een janeb. He terms the letters of the Resident, khut-i-khyreeut numut, mookatüba-i khyreeut teraz, or mooräsula; signifies the receipt of them by the terms chihru-i wusool ufrokht or wusool numoodu; and on one occasion signifies his knowledge of the contents of a letter which he had received by the terms kâshif-i hâlât gurdeed.

Of these letters one is without date, three are properly dated on the envelope, but the last letter bears the date at the conclusion of it.

The documents No. 4 consist of copies of five letters from the present Vizier to Colonel Scott.

In these the writer designates himself een janib, calls his correspondent's letters mooräsula or mookatüba, with the epithet khyreeut teraz, and signifies his receipt of them, in his first letter, by the words ber muzmoon-i-moondereja ittala o agahce dustad, and in his subsequent letters by the term kâshif-i hâlât gurdeed.

Among the documents comprised in Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, I find the words gofu erkâm and novishtu employed, to express the verbal or written statement of the person addressed.

These

These letters are all dated not only on the envelope but also at the conclusion of them.

The documents No. 5 consist of copies of letters from the present Vizier to Major Baillie.

Persian Secretary's
Report.

The term shookha, and the words hoozoor and ershaud, are employed in all these letters to express the letter, the person, and the desire of the writer; while the terms mookatüba-i-khyreeut teraz, and bu moolahiza der amud, are employed to express the letter of the person addressed and the receipt of his letter, and the words maarooz and goozarish are used as descriptive of the written statement, or verbal representation of the person addressed.

These letters are all dated at the end, as well as on the envelope.

The preceding documents fully prove the correctness of Major Baillie's observation, that the Vizier, in his correspondence with the present Resident, has departed very essentially from the forms which the late Vizier, Asuf-ood Dowlah observed towards Mr. Ives and Mr. Lumsden, and which his Excellency the present Vizier himself used during the early part of his administration, and that the present style of the Vizier's letters resembles the style of mandates issued by a Prince to his subjects or servants, which was not before the case.

Thus we find, in the present correspondence of his Excellency the Vizier with the Resident, the words shookha, hoozoor, and ershaud, denoting the letter, the person, and the desire of the writer, substituted for those of muktoob-i-khyr-usloob een janib, and goftu; and the terms bu moolahiza der amud, maarooz, and goozarish, implying the receipt of the letter addressed to the writer, and the verbal or written statement received, supply the place of wusool numoodu, or wusool-iblihaj shumool numoodu, and erkäm, izhär, &c.

The forms observed by Asuf-ood-Dowlah, even, do not exhibit a perfect uniformity or consistency of style. For instance, in signifying his receipt of a letter and his knowledge of its contents, Asuf-ood-Dowlah has at one time said wusool-iblihaj-shumool numoodu musroor o moonbussit sakht, while at another he has simply said russeedu kashif-i-hälät gurdeed; the former being a term of equality, whereas the latter expression is only applicable to a perwanah or order. But I ascribe the deviation alluded to rather to accident or ignorance on the part of the Moonshee, than to design on the part of the late Nawaub, since the other parts of the letter, which contains the expression kashif-i hälät gurdeed, do not partake of the style of a perwanah. The absence of all date to Asuf-ood-Dowlah's letters is rather irregular than indicative of any want of due consideration for the Resident.

From the Persian documents transmitted by Major Baillie, the first change introduced by the present Vizier into his correspondence with the Resident at his Court appears in his last letter to Mr. Lumsden, in which I observe that the date is placed at the conclusion of the letter, whereas the date to the other letters from his Excellency to that gentleman appears on the envelope. The distinction is this: that letters have their date on the envelope, and perwanahs or orders at the foot of the writing. But why this change was introduced into the last letter to Mr. Lumsden, whether by design or in consequence of any accidental change of the Vizier's Moonshee, of course does not appear. The last letter to Mr. Lumsden which is dated at the conclusion does not bear any date on the envelope; but all the letters addressed to his immediate successor, Colonel Scott, (of which copies have been transmitted by Major Baillie), bear date both at the conclusion of them and on their envelopes. The circumstance of the date being on the envelope also, does not, however, in the least degree counteract the humiliating effect of the appearance of the date at the conclusion of the letter.

The next change which appears in the form of the Vizier's correspondence, is that which his Excellency now observes towards the present Resident.

It has been observed by Major Baillie of the Vizier's letters to Colonel Scott, that not any material difference exists in point of form from that observed towards other Residents, excepting the change of the place of their date which has been already noticed. This change seems to have been introduced from the very first commencement of Colonel Scott's time, since the letters, of which Major Baillie has transmitted copies, are all dated in 1799 and 1800. Major Baillie is correct, however, in stating generally, that the change in the form of the Vizier's correspondence with the Resident began in the latter part of Colonel Scott's Residency, since I have found in the Persian office a copy of a letter from Colonel Scott to the Vizier, dated 17th July 1801, in which Colonel Scott acknowledges the receipt of the Vizier's shookha, or mandate, in reply to his areeza. Thus it appears that nearly the present form of correspondence was established in that year; and it seems to have been maintained, as far as depended on the Vizier, to the present time. Whether this essential change ever attracted the notice of Colonel Scott, or whether his acquaintance with the intricate forms of Persian correspondence was such as to enable him to detect the change, cannot now be known, but it appears from the tenor of his reply just cited, that he, or at least his Moonshee, acquiesced in that change. The important negotiations, however, in which Colonel Scott was then engaged with the Vizier was not a time to cavil about mere forms of epistolatory intercourse. He was looking to the attainment of substantial benefits for the Company, and if he was aware of the change, he was probably not disposed to enter into any controversy about it at that moment. But, excepting under peculiar circumstances, such inattention on the part of the representative of the British Government to those forms to which the natives attach so much importance is perhaps not proper.

Major Baillie has adverted to the omission, on the part of the Vizier, of the word sahab on the envelope of his Excellency's Letters to his address, and that of his immediate predecessor, as a mark of disrespect on the part of the Vizier.

The documents transmitted by Major Baillie, as specimens of the late and present Vizier's correspondence with Mr. Ives, Mr. Lumsden, and Colonel Scott, all contain the word sahab on the envelope. This word, as stated by Major Baillie, is omitted on the envelope of the letters to his address, and the omission Major Baillie says refers to Colonel Collins's time.

Whether the Nawaub Vizier, by omitting the word sahab on the superscription of his letters to the late Colonel Collins and to the present Resident, intended to manifest less consideration for them, I do not know. The other changes which his Excellency has introduced into the form of his correspondence, certainly countenance the belief that the omission in question was suggested by similar motives; but considering the question abstractedly, I doubt whether the omission of the word sahab, in a case where the person addressed, as in the instance of Major Baillie, possesses elevated Oriental titles, can properly be considered as any disrespect.

I know that the word sahab is generally omitted in the superscription of letters to the address of English gentlemen, when high sounding Oriental titles are associated with their names.

Now Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott had no titles: might not the Vizier, then, say that the word sahab was properly applied to them because they had no titles, but that the circumstance of Colonel Collins and Major Baillie being distinguished by titles rendered the insertion of the sahab unnecessary if not improper.

Mr. Ives, however, had titles, and the single letter from Asuf-ood-Dowlah to his address (of which Major Baillie has sent a copy) certainly does bear the word sahab on the envelope. Still there is no doubt that the word sahab in such cases is generally omitted, and the use of it, in addressing gentlemen who are distinguished by high titles from the throne of Delhi, is esteemed wrong, because the former is considered to be lost in the superiority of the latter.

I believe that Major Baillie obtained his titles from the throne of Delhi subsequently to his appointment to the Court of Lucknow; if, therefore, it should appear that the Vizier omitted the word sahab in the superscription of the letters letters to Major Baillie's address before he obtained his Oriental titles, the intention of his Excellency in omitting it would be placed beyond all doubt, and leave his Excellency without the shadow of a plea for his conduct in that respect. On referring to the few letters from his Excellency to my address, I find that I, who have no titles, have not the compliment paid to me of being styled saheb, which shews that the Vizier does not always introduce the word saheb where titles are not enjoyed.

Persian Secretary's
Report.

Of the degree of offence offered to the dignity of the representative of the British Government by the changes which the Vizier has introduced into the form of his correspondence with the Resident, the Members of Council will be able to form a correct opinion, from their knowledge of the high importance which the natives of all Asia attach to points of this nature.

Having disposed of the first question, I now proceed to the consideration of the second.

The document No. 6 contains copies of the undermentioned letters from the gentlemen who have successively filled the station of Resident at Lucknow.

- 1 Letter from Mr. Ives,
- 1 Do. from Mr. Johnson,
- 4 Do. from Mr. Lumsden,
- 3 Do. from Colonel Scott.

The terms used by these gentlemen, to express the letters of the Vizier, are by Mr. Ives, newauxish nama; Mr. Johnson, ashfauk nama wurood-i shufkut amood; Mr. Lumsden, inayet nama-i tufuzzool amood, or inayet nama i aātee; Colonel Scott, ditto.

It will be observed, that every succeeding Resident has described the Vizier's letters, by a more respectful term than his immediate predecessor; and the correspondence of these gentlemen embraces the greater part of Asuf-ood-Dowlah's administration, and the early part of the present Vizier's Government.

The term now used by Major Baillie to express the Vizier's letter is inayet-nama, with the varied but equally respectful epithets of shufkut amood, tuluttuf amood, &c. The terms used in speaking of the Vizier, his desire, &c. are more respectful than those which I have had an opportunity of seeing in the correspondence of which he has transmitted copies. Thus Major Baillie, as he has stated, has only reverted to the forms which were observed by the Residents during the late Vizier Asuf-ood-Dowlah's administration, and continued for a time after the present Vizier's accession, while, on the other hand, the Vizier addresses the Resident in a style which places him in a rank relative to his Excellency far inferior to those of his predecessors, who practised the same forms of correspondence as are now used by Major Baillie.

In short, as far as I can judge, the language of Major Baillie's letters to the Vizier is highly respectful. Whether there is any thing in the spirit of them which can justly give umbrage to his Excellency, is a point on which it is no part of my duty to pronounce an opinion, since it is one on which Government has ample means of judging, through the medium of the translations of the Resident's letters; but it is fair to presume, that if any such objection did exist, it would have been noticed in the progress of his correspondence with the Vizier, translations of which have been regularly submitted to the observation of Government.

Mr. Edmonstone's Minute, 27th February 1813.

Mr. Edmonstone's Minute.

The Persian Secretary's analytical observations on the relative forms of correspondence between the Vizier and the British Resident are entirely consistent with all the knowledge I possess of the rules and principles by which those forms are regulated, and I fully concur in the conclusions which Mr. Monckton has drawn. It is to be observed, that the Vizier's charge against the Resident, on the subject of the latter's written and verbal communications, and the Resident's statement relative to the impropriety of the style of writing adopted by the Vizier, stand on very different grounds. It is the matter and spirit of the Resident's representation of which the Vizier complains. It is the assumption of a high and authoritative style of address, unsuited to his Excellency's relative rank, that constitutes the Resident's charge against the Vizier. The first is compatible with the observance of the strictest forms of Oriental correspondence; the latter is inadmissible and offensive, however gracious the substance of the communication may be.

Although the severity of some occasional passages in the series of the Resident's letters to the Vizier might perhaps have been avoided, without weakening the force and effect of his representations, yet the general language of argument and controversy employed by the Resident, naturally, and even necessarily, proceeds from the very nature of the subjects of negotiation, combined with the peculiar temper and disposition of the Vizier, the defects of his character, and the vicious system of his Government. That language of argument and controversy offends the Vizier, because it is addressed (unavoidably addressed) to him. In every other State there is a Minister, who conducts with the representative of a foreign power the details of negotiation: the freedom of discussion is not embarrassed by the inequality of rank, and offence to the sovereign is avoided by the intervention of an agent. If the Vizier thinks proper to undertake the detail of duties which belongs to an officer of Government, he must submit to the inconvenience which necessarily attends the assumption of that subordinate character. He has no title to complain of the spirit and matter of communications which belong to the subject of negotiation, and which under the system adopted by him for the conduct of public affairs can only be addressed to himself. The language of Major Baillie's letters, considered with reference to the minute rules prescribed for the selection of words and phrases, according to the relative rank of the parties, rules complicated and extensive, and altogether unknown in the system of European correspondence, is not merely unexceptionable, but perfectly respectful, and the Vizier does not appear to me to accuse him of a departure from those rules.

The Vizier himself, however, deviates from them essentially. The style of his letters to the Resident is that which no person of rank inferior to that of royalty is entitled to employ in addressing the representative of a foreign State: it is an offence to the British Government, as well as personally to the Resident. The terms, shookha, hoozoor, ershaud, &c. applied to himself, and maarooz, goozareth, applied to the representations of the other party, are precisely those which he would adopt in writing to the lowest of his subjects, and this gross impropriety should certainly be corrected.

Letter from the
Governor-General.

From the Governor-General to His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 5th March 1813.)

I have received your Excellency's letter, dated 1st January, answering to the ....., stating certain causes of dissatisfaction with Major Baillie, the Resident at your Excellency's Court, and expressing your desire to carry into effect the intention which your Excellency has frequently intimated of travelling into foreign countries.

The

The respect which is due to every statement proceeding from your Excellency, and the grave and serious nature of the charges which you have preferred against the Resident, having rendered it my duty to give your Excellency's letter the most mature consideration, and to examine with attention the grounds of those charges, some delay necessarily occurred in the preparation of an answer to your Excellency's letter. That delay has been unavoidably still further increased, by the intermediate receipt from the Resident of the correspondence which passed between your Excellency and Major Baillie subsequently to his letter to your Excellency's address of the 2d of January, the tenor of that correspondence having brought to my observation some circumstances connected with the style and manner which your Excellency has of late years adopted in your letters to the Residents, as I shall have occasion to notice before I conclude this letter, which rendered a previous revision of the correspondence of your Excellency and your illustrious predecessor with the several successive Residents at the Court of Lucknow necessary, to enable this Government to form a correct judgment of the merits of the question.

Letter from the
Governor-General.

I proceed, in the first instance, to reply to your Excellency's letter of the 1st January.

I cannot but lament, that your Excellency should have so far misconstrued Major Baillie's conduct and language, as to found on them a formal charge against that officer of a deficiency in the respect and honour due to your Excellency's exalted rank.

The tenor of the statements which Major Baillie had the honour to submit to your Excellency, in answer to the charges contained in your Excellency's letter, to which I now reply, and in your letter to his address of the 7th January, together with the reports which I have received from him of his proceedings in the several cases to which your Excellency refers, enable me to return a specific answer to every part of your letter.

Your Excellency first states, that "Major Baillie, in consequence of dissatisfaction with your Excellency for some time past, has failed in those observations of respectful consideration in his letters which were practised by the Residents at your Excellency's Court."

Major Baillie is in the habit of communicating to the Governor-General in Council copies of all letters and memorials which he is called on to address to your Excellency in the course of his official duty.

Many of those papers contain urgent representations and remonstrances to your Excellency on points of discussion between your Excellency and the Resident, equally affecting the honour and interests of the two Governments, in which the Resident was required, both by the nature of the subject and the tenor of the instructions under which he acted, to employ the language of complaint and expostulation. In such discussions, it must necessarily happen that sentiments and expressions will occur which cannot be altogether agreeable to your Excellency; but while this is admitted, I am compelled to state my dissent from your Excellency's opinion, that there is any thing in the style of Major Baillie's addresses which can bear the construction of intemperance or disrespect. I can only, therefore, account for their having appeared to your Excellency in that point of view, from the dissatisfaction which your Excellency felt at the repeated instances of the Resident, on subjects in their nature unpleasant to your Excellency's feelings.

Your Excellency must be sensible, however, that Major Baillie would have neglected his duty to the Government which he serves, as well as your Excellency's true interests, if he had omitted to exert all his powers of persuasion and argument to prevail on your Excellency to comply with the just and reasonable expectations of this Government. It has been at all times, and is still in your Excellency's power, to relieve yourself from the discussion of these unpalatable subjects, by acquiescing in requisitions so just and moderate, and so clearly conducive to the true interests of your Government ; but while your Excellency shall continue to disregard the friendly counsel of the British Government, and of the Resident as the representative of that Government, and shall withhold a compliance with its just demands, or salutary advice, your Excellency must be prepared to receive similar representations, as it is impossible that I can discontinue my efforts to accomplish objects which I am entitled by treaty, and impelled by the manifest interests and reputation of the two Governments, as well as by the common feelings of humanity, to pursue.

Consultations,

Your Excellency next proceeds to state, that Major Baillie prevented you from going on a hunting excursion. After the satisfactory statement which Major Baillie has submitted to you on this point, I trust your Excellency will excuse me from enlarging on the subject.

The next article of complaint against Major Baillie stated in your Excellency's letter, is expressed in the following terms : " At a recent conference, on Saturday the 14th Zeehijj (19th December), he, Major Baillie, observed to me in great anger, that he considered the respectful consideration which he has hitherto shewn to the Presence as improper : that with regard to certain questions requiring adjustment my consent was unnecessary ; that it behoved him, in compliance with the requisitions of the elder Begum, to send his own people and place her in possession of the disputed villages, to send his own people to adjust the complaints of the Honourable Company's sepoys, and possess them of their rights agreeably to their request, and to send a servant of his own to pass Hyder Bukhsh out of the city."

The clear and satisfactory statement of the substance of what passed at the conference between your Excellency and Major Baillie, on the 14th of Zeehijj, contained in his letter to your Excellency's address of the 2d of January, and resting on the acknowledged integrity and veracity of that officer, leaves no room to doubt that your Excellency must have entirely misapprehended the tenor, spirit, and manner of his discourse to your Excellency on that occasion. That part of Major Baillie's representation which related to the eventual employment of the British troops for the suppression or seizure of banditti infesting the Company's provinces, was made by my express direction, and was founded on the absolute right which we possessed of resorting to our own means of obtaining that redress and security which was denied by your Excellency, in direct contradiction to the spirit of the alliance.

I have now learned with the most cordial satisfaction that your Excellency has acquiesced in the arrangement which the Resident has again proposed to your Excellency by my orders. The gratification which this result of the discussion has afforded me is proportioned to the regret which I should have experienced if your Excellency's perseverance in refusing to comply with the just expectations of this Government had compelled me to resort to the only means which would then have remained of providing for the security and tranquillity of the Honourable Company's possessions. I am willing to receive your Excellency's consent to this arrangement as a proof of your desire to afford satisfaction to the British Government on all points connected with your administration, by which its interests are affected.

With regard to the subjects of difference between your Excellency and her Highness the Bhow Begum, which were referred to by Major Baillie, your Excellency is aware that the British Government not only possesses the right, but is under a positive obligation to protect and secure her Highness's rights, and to investigate and determine all disputes that may arise between her Highness and your Excellency, or between your respective officers and servants. It is superfluous to refer more particularly to the terms of an engagement which I have so recently had occasion to bring under your Excellency's particular notice in my letter of the 8th May last. Major Baillie was perfectly justified in agitating the subject with your Excellency, and in expecting your acquiescence in his judgment, without a special reference to my authority.

The

The case of Mal Tewarree, naick, a sepoy in the service of the British Government, is so striking an instance of oppression and extortion on the part of one of your Excellency's Aumils, practised against a person actually in the service of the Company, and consequently entitled in a peculiar degree to the protection of this Government, that Major Baillie would have shrunk from his duty, if he had not strongly urged your Excellency to take measures for redressing the grievances of that unfortunate person and of others of the same class suffering similar injuries. His conduct, therefore, was exactly that which he would have been instructed to pursue, had the case been such as to require a reference to my authority.

Letter from the
Governor-General.

The case of Hyder Bukhsh was submitted to me by the Resident previously to my receipt of your Excellency's letter; but before my instructions to Major Baillie on that subject were prepared, I had the satisfaction to learn, by a communication from that officer, that your Excellency had permitted Hyder Bukhsh to depart from Lucknow. This happy termination of the affair renders it unnecessary to pursue the subject further.

However repugnant to your Excellency's feelings may have been the agitation of the questions above referred to, I am unable, as I have already stated, to perceive any thing in Major Baillie's share of the conference which ought to have given offence to your Excellency.

With regard to what your Excellency states, of Major Baillie's having falsified your words, it is necessary to observe, that the Resident is bound by the obligations of his duty to adopt such measures as will serve to ascertain the real nature of the facts and circumstances of any case which becomes a subject of negotiation and discussion between your Excellency and him, and to state explicitly to your Excellency the result of those measures. It must, therefore, occasionally happen, that the representations of the Resident, deduced from proofs and arguments, in his judgment conclusive, differ from the communications of your Excellency on the same subject. This course of proceeding on the part of the Resident cannot be justly characterized by the expression of "falsifying your Excellency's words;" an expression indicating a rudeness of language, of which I perceive no trace in the correspondence before me, and of which I am satisfied that Major Baillie is incapable.

I am equally at a loss to discover the ground of your Excellency's allegation, that "the wish of the Resident now is to settle all matters in his own way, and "merely to apprise your Excellency of the settlement;" since it is well known to your Excellency, that many arrangements and measures, calculated for your Excellency's benefit and that of your subjects, and for the advantage of the British Government, as affected by the prosperity of the state of Oude, have either been suspended or relinquished, for no other cause than the forbearance which has hitherto been shewn by the British Government in urging your Excellency to comply with requisitions which it is entitled to prefer, and with advice to which your Excellency is bound to conform, but which both directly in letters from myself and through the organ of the Resident have repeatedly been urged in vain. Such forbearance, if carried too far, becomes censurable remissness; but it shews how entirely opposite the facts are to any encroachment on your Excellency's independent authority. I entreat your Excellency to reflect on the consequences of a continued opposition to the just demands, and a persevering disregard of the advice, of the British Government, whether offered directly from myself or through the Resident.

I have deemed it incumbent on me to enter into this explanation, for the purpose of vindicating the conduct of an officer of high and unblemished character who possesses a distinguished place in my confidence and esteem, and whose zeal and activity, in endeavouring to carry into effect the views of the British Government for the promotion of your Excellency's genuine interests and the prosperity of both States, appear unfortunately to have exposed him to your Excellency's displeasure. I trust, however, that deliberating on the sentiments expressed in this letter, and giving a fair and impartial consideration to the the passages in Major Baillie's written and verbal communications, which form the grounds of your Excellency's complaint, you will see reason to recall the charges of disrespectful and intemperate conduct and language which you have imputed to him.

Having thus replied to the charges against the Resident as they are stated in your Excellency's letter, I proceed to offer such further remarks as have been suggested to my mind by the perusal of your Excellency's answer to the letter addressed to you by the Resident on the 2d of January, and of the Resident's rejoinder.

In your Excellency's reply to Major Baillie you have referred to two specific letters, one on the subject of reform, and one respecting Hyder Bukhsh, as affording proof of disrespect towards your Excellency; and you have referred also to specific occasions of verbal communications with the Resident, in which his language was indicative of resentment. I am compelled to express my dissent from the opinion stated by your Excellency respecting those two letters. With regard to the latter article of charge, it is of course impossible for me to judge of the tone of verbal communications; but I think myself warranted in giving implicit credit to the Resident's assurances and explanations on that head, as contained in his own reply to your Excellency's letter above referred to. On the whole, I cannot allow that your Excellency has succeeded in establishing or enforcing any charge against the Resident, by the more particular statement contained in that letter. To enter into a minute examination of that statement, would be little more than to repeat what I have already represented to your Excellency.

At the commencement of this address I have alluded to a late change in the style and manner of your Excellency's letters to the Resident, as brought to my notice by the correspondence which passed between your Excellency and him, subsequently to his letter to your Excellency of the 2d January, and expressed my intention of adverting to it more particularly. I now proceed to fulfil that intention.

Major Baillie, agreeably to the intimation contained in his letter to your Excellency of the 8th January, has transmitted to me, for inspection, copies of a number of letters from the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, to Mr. Ives and Mr. Lumsden, from those gentlemen to the late Nawaub, from your Excellency to Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott, and from the latter to your Excellency. Having directed the proper officer to prepare and submit to me a report on this subject, founded on a careful revision of those documents and a comparison of the style of writing at present employed by your Excellency, and that which your predecessor, and formerly your Excellency yourself, observed in letters to the Resident, I find Major Baillie's statement on that subject, contained in his letter to your Excellency of the 8th of January, to be perfectly accurate. It is demonstratively shewn, that while Major Baillie has scrupulously observed, nay exceeded, the respectful forms of address employed by former Residents, your Excellency has departed entirely from those which were uniformly employed by the late Nawaub, and, in the earlier part of your administration, even by your Excellency yourself, and has assumed a style of address in your letters to the Resident, not only degrading to him but to the Government which he represents.

It is unnecessary to recite the particular expressions, as they occur in your Excellency's letters and those of Major Baillie, on which the above remark is founded. They will be sufficiently obvious to your Excellency's discerning mind, by a comparison of the letters which passed between your Excellency and the present Resident, and the documents which Major Baillie submitted to your Excellency with his letter of the 8th of January.

I regret most sincerely, that a disinclination, on the part of the successive Residents at your Excellency's Court who have been the objects of this indecorous corous proceeding, to trouble your Excellency on matters of form, should have suffered this evil to continue for such a length of time; but as it has now been brought to the notice of this Government, more especially by means of a complaint on your Excellency's part against its representative, of a want of respect in the language of his letters, I cannot permit it to continue; and your Excellency must allow me to express, in the strongest and most explicit terms, my desire and expectation that you should revert to those observances of respect, which were uniformly practised from the early periods of the intercourse between the two States, until they were set aside by your Excellency's own act.

Letter from
Governor-General.

I consider your Excellency's immediate compliance with this requisition to be essential to the maintenance of the dignity of the British Government and of its accredited representative at your Excellency's Court, and I rely with confidence on your immediate attention to it.

Your Excellency may be assured, that as no just cause of offence has been given to you in this respect hitherto, so the future correspondence of the Resident will always be conducted in strict conformity to those observances of respect and honour which are due to your exalted rank and station, and with every possible regard to your Excellency's feelings, on the points on which it will be his duty to address you.

It only remains to reply to that part of your Excellency's letter which relates to your desire to travel. On that point Major Baillie has been instructed to make known my sentiments to your Excellency; and I have only to state in this place, that when your Excellency shall have made the necessary arrangement for the administration of your Government during your absence, and shall be pleased to apprise me of the time you may fix for your departure, every practicable arrangement shall be made to facilitate the accomplishment of your wishes, and for your honourable reception and entertainment during your progress through the British territories.

Major Baillie has received my instructions on every point comprehended in this letter, and I request your Excellency to consider his representations as proceeding directly from myself, and equally demanding your attention and regard.

(Signed) J. ADAM,
Secretary to Government.

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. You were apprized, by my despatch of the 22d January, of the intention of the Right Honourable the Governor-General to address his Excellency the Vizier, in reply to the letter from his Excellency which accompanied your despatch of the 4th January. I am now directed to transmit to you the enclosed English draft of his Lordship's letter: the letter itself will be forwarded to you by the Persian Secretary to the Government as soon as it can be prepared.

2. You will observe that the Governor-General has replied specifically to every point of the Vizier's charge against you, and has confirmed and enforced the statement contained in your letters to his Excellency's address of the 2d and 8th January, of which translations accompanied your despatches of the 4th and 11th of that month. His Lordship has also called on the Vizier to revert in his epistolary intercourse with you to the forms of correspondence employed by his predecessors and by himself in the early part of his administration, in addressing the Resident at the Court of Lucknow.

3. The sentiments of the Governor-General in Council on the several points embraced in the enclosed document, have been communicated to you in my letter of the 22d, in such detail as to render unnecessary any further observations at present.

4. His Lordship in Council is not aware of any additional arguments or representations on the general subject of the Governor-General's letter which can be urged in confirmation of its contents. You will, however, accompany the delivery of it with such written or verbal communications on your own part, as you may judge to be best suited to the occasion.

5. It was his Lordship's wish to have taken this opportunity of renewing his representations to the Vizier on the subject of the reform of his Excellency's administration, and other points which have been lately agitated with his Excellency, and to reply to the Vizier's letters on those subjects: it has been found absolutely necessary, however, to suspend the further consideration of them until a season of greater leisure. You will observe that they are hinted at in the enclosed document, and you will of course avail yourself of any opportunity of improving the impression which the present letter may be expected to make on his Excellency's mind with reference to those matters.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 20th ultimo, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the further information of the Government, the enclosed copies of letters which I have received from the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad and the commanding officers of the troops at Sooltanpore and Pertaubghur, in reply to my communication and instructions to those officers respectively, of the date abovementioned.

2. The circumstances which are stated by Colonel Frith, in his letter of the 5th instant, to my address, though they be neither new nor surprising to me, and have been frequently submitted already to the notice of his Lordship in Council, as well as insisted on to the Vizier, in the course of my correspondence with his Excellency on the important subject of reform, seem nevertheless worthy to be recorded, as an additional and authentic proof of the manifest justice and necessity of the measures recommended to the Vizier in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter of the 28th of December 1810.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, covering a translation of the instructions of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to the Aumils in this part of the country, on the subject of the apprehension of certain banditti who have been in the practice of infesting the neighbouring districts of Elahabad, and also conveying your own instructions on the same subject, and beg leave to assure you that my best endeavours shall be exerted to accomplish the object in view, in a manner that may be satisfactory to his Excellency, and in conformity with the very liberal authority which has been entrusted to me.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that no intelligence, which could be at all depended upon, has lately been received, either by Lieutenant Ellison or myself, respecting any of the offenders whom the Magistrate at Elahabad wished to have apprehended. It hence appears, that the seizure of Bisna Sing lately, and the active search which has since been made after the others, has driven them out of this part of the country, and I entertain sanguine hopes that the instructions of his Excellency to the Aumils, and the ample authority which you have been pleased to vest me with, will effectually prevent their return, or the recurrence of the depredations in the Elahabad district.

I have the honour to enclose a copy of the last letter I received from Lieutenant Ellison. His other communications lately being of the same tenor, I did not deem it necessary to trouble you with them.

Since I had the pleasure of addressing you last, in continuation of the subject of those banditti, I have not been able to gain the least intelligence of them, although the Hircarrabs inform me that they went all through the district of Sooltanpore, Oude, and in different parts of that country, and through the different jungles, without giving the requisite information; and it now seems, from the intelligence communicated to me from time to time, that they are not in this part of the country or about Sooltanpore, Oude, that I think they must have retreated to some other province for protection.

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you, that in consequence of the Magistrate of Elahabad having signified that the detachment at Kulla Bhedowlee was no longer necessary with the view to the apprehension of certain offenders, Lieutenant Ellison, with the party under his command, has returned to cantonments, having first cautioned the Zemindars and others in that quarter against harbouring, in future, any fugitives from the neighbouring district of Elahabad. The Magistrate's people have also been instructed, whenever they may gain intelligence of any of the offenders, to give information thereof to me without loss of time, when measures will be immediately adopted for their apprehension. The Magistrate has also furnished me with a list and description of the several individuals he wishes to have seized. This, with the orders of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, and the authority with which you have been pleased to invest me, will, I hope, enable me to prevent any cause of complaint in future, in regard to fugitives from the Company's districts. In a conversation which I had with Lieutenant Ellison on his return, he mentioned some particulars regarding the state of the country where he had been posted for the last three months, which I think it proper to communicate to you, although perhaps it may be exceeding the precise line of my duty.

Lieutenant Ellison stated, that the inhabitants of the village of Kulla Bhedowlee, and of all the neighbouring villages, were in the most deplorable state of poverty and distress; that they were generally afflicted with sickness, which appeared to him to arise from the scarcity of food and the badness of the quality of that on which they subsisted, as none of the sepoys or followers of his detachment got ill while he remained there. He also stated, that on his arrival at Kulla Bhedowlee, the children of the village, to the number of about fifty, came out to his camp in a most famished and starving state; that the sepoys of his detachment, from motives of pure humanity, fed them, and continued to feed and employ them in little offices while they remained there, by which means many of their lives were certainly saved, and that when he marched away these children followed the detachment several coss. Lieutenant Ellison further mentioned, that the principal inhabitants of Kulla Bhedowlee and the neighbouring villages represented, that the extreme poverty, misery, and wretchedness which he observed, proceeded from there being no fixed or settled assessment of the revenue, and from the bad faith and oppression of the people employed in collecting it. That when an agreement was made, if the crops proved defective, from a failure of rain or other cause, no remission was made, but the utmost rupee of the agreement exacted, whereby sufficient grain was not left to feed the inhabitants until the next season came round. On the other hand, if the crops proved abundant and the season favourable, the full value was exacted, without any regard to the agreement. Thus, whether the seasons were good or bad, or the crops abundant or otherwise, it made no difference to the inhabitants, who were equally left without the means of subsistence. These exactions were enforced with such rigour, that it was not uncommon for Bramins of respectability bility to be reduced to such a state of desperation, as in despair to destroy themselves. One of these Bramins Lieutenant Ellison saw, who with a tulwar had made a deep gash in his belly; but his bowels fortunately escaped injury, and his friends saved his life.

Many of the young men belonging to cantonments, who occasionally go out into the country shooting and hunting, have reported that similar complaints have been made to them by the villagers. I am therefore apprehensive, that the above is but too just a picture of the miserable state of the inhabitants of this count ry.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

My Lord :

1. I have hitherto delayed to address your Lordship in Council in continuation of the subject of my despatches of the 4th and 11th ultimo, or in reply to the important communication of your Lordship's sentiments and commands, which I have recently had the honour of receiving through the medium of the Secretary to Government, in the expectation of receiving from the Vizier a recantation or renewal of his charges of intemperance and disrespect against myself, in the form of a reply to my letter under date the 8th ultimo, and also in the hope of being honoured with a further communication of your Lordship in Council's instructions on the various points of discussion depending with his Excellency the Vizier, accompanied by copies of the answers to his Excellency's letters to your Lordship, dated the 26th August, 8th of September, 1st of December, and 1st of January last.

2. The Vizier would seem determined to commit the issue of his complaint against me, in the decision of your Lordship in Council, to the documents already before you. I have no reason to believe that his Excellency meditates a reply to my letter of the 8th ultimo, though he be necessarily aware of its tendency to disprove his charge of intemperance, and to repel the accusation of disrespect in correspondence, by a well-founded and substantiated charge of offensive deviation, on his own part, from the established forms of address to the representative of the British Government.

3. The exercise of the duties of personal intercourse and official communication, on my part, with his Excellency the Vizier, has suffered no interruption whatever in consequence of his extraordinary complaint; nor has his Excellency been deficient in the observances of personal consideration for me, nor less attentive than usual to my suggestions on the subordinate points of discussion which I have had occasion to bring to his notice.

4. On the contrary, your Lordship in Council will have observed from my recent despatches to the Secretary, dated the 5th and 20th instant, that I have succeeded in effecting an arrangement for the regular supply of the British troops at Seetapore, and consequently at all the other stations in the Vizier's territory; and that I have further, though with much difficulty and after a great deal of vexatious discussion, obtained his Excellency's consent to the employment of our troops in his dominions, on the requisition of the Magistrates of contiguous districts, for the apprehension of offenders against our Government.

5. With the view of exhibiting to your Lordship the unhappy disposition of his Excellency's mind, the character and grounds of his resistance to every proposal, the most simple, unobjectionable, and salutary, which our Government may have occasion to suggest to him, and the extraordinary difficulties which oppose the successful conduct of the duties of your Lordship's representative at his court, I have the honour of submitting for your perusal translations of a letter and statements received from his Excellency, in answer to my communication of the orders of Government dated the 29th ultimo, and referred to in the concluding paragraph of my despatch of the 20th instant to the Secretary in the Political Department.

6. His Excellency sets out in his statement with an evasion of your Lordship's desire, that his unwarrantable suspicion and jealousy of the measures and counsels of our Government should be disavowed, or the grounds of them explained and substantiated, and he exhibits a view of the proposal for the employment of our troops in his dominions which is obviously erroneous and false; for if the British Government had ever wished or intended to take measures for the apprehension of delinquents in his Excellency's territory without his previous knowledge and consent, the proposal which was the subject of discussion could never obviously have been made to him; and thus the unhappy disposition of his Excellency's mind has perverted a friendly application on the part of our Government for his acquiescence in a just and necessary arrangement, into a premeditated design of carrying that arrangement into effect of its own authority, without his Excellency's knowledge or consent, to the prejudice of his rights as a sovereign.

7. It is, in fact, the right of the British Government to advise and to press its advice upon any point to his Excellency, (unquestionable as this right must be considered under the spirit and letter of the treaty) that has ever been irksome to his Excellency's mind, and to infringe or evade which is his constant aim and pursuit by every means in his power; because that advice must be generally hostile to the gratification of his favourite passions, and because every occasion of his acquiescence, whatever the subject may be, is misrepresented by his evil advisers, or misconstrued by the natural jealousy of his own temper, into a confirmation of the original right of interference in the concerns of his Government, which, according to his conception, has been already essentially impaired, and may be eventually lost by prescription.

8. The exercise of our right to advise is therefore uniformly resisted, as an encroachment on his Excellency's power and authority; and in every case like the present, where a plausible ground for resistance may be wanting, his Excellency does not hesitate to misrepresent the object of our suggestion or advice, as he has done on the present occasion, perverting an application for his consent to the march of a detachment of our troops to a short distance from a frontier station of his territory, for a just and necessary purpose, into a design of "employing our troops without his consent, to carry off any offender from any village or town in his country, nay even from the capital of his dominions."

9. The perverseness and absurdity of a misconstruction or misstatement like this is too apparent to have escaped his Excellency's notice, even at the time when he applied it as an argument; yet he maintained it at our conference on this subject on the 20th ultimo for a very considerable time, and though I frequently begged him to recollect, and ultimately read to him the terms of your Lordship in Council's proposition, which literally assumes for its basis a state of circumstances quite inconsistent with any that could be contemplated in Lucknow, namely, the influence of the misconduct of his Excellency's officers at a distance to defeat the views of our Government, and the purposes of his own orders, in the seizure of public offenders, he still persisted in pretending a belief that his acquiescence in the proposed arrangement would lead to our adoption of similar measures throughout his territory, and even in his capital, under his eye.

10. I asked his Excellency if he considered himself to be bound by the spirit of the subsisting alliance, and by the terms of the arrangement with Marquess Wellesley, to seize and deliver over offenders against our Government who might find refuge in any part of his dominions; and on his answering this question question in the affirmative, I inquired whether or not he himself, or any other person in his dominions, could doubt his ability to discharge this obligation, with reference to offenders who might at any time be concealed in Lucknow. To this inquiry his Excellency immediately replied, that neither his inclination nor ability could be doubted; and on my pointing to the natural inference from this avowal, namely, his compliance with every requisition for the seizure of delinquents in Lucknow, as superseding both the use and the object of your Lordship in Council's proposition, his Excellency reluctantly departed from the untenable argument which he had urged.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
26 Mar. 1813.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

11. The succeeding paragraphs of his Excellency's statement contain a departure from his original demand of the association of his officers with ours in the execution of the required service, and a requisition, equally injurious, of renewed and specific application, through the circuitous medium of the Resident, for the seizure of every offender, after the place of his concealment should be known.

12. The manifest tendency of this requisition to frustrate your Lordship's views in the arrangement proposed to his Excellency, could scarcely require to be explained. It was, in fact, a direct and unqualified rejection of the only new, and the most essential, part of the proposition contained in the Chief Secretary's despatch of the 21st of August 1812; for his Excellency had never objected to the employment of our troops on specific application being made to him for the seizure of any offender, and the general authority applied for under the recent orders of the Government was the only subject of discussion on which the smallest hesitation had been shewn; so that my consent to his Excellency's proposal, however artfully and plausibly desired, with a view to the preservation of his authority, would have been, in fact, a total dereliction of the arrangement which your Lordship in Council had prescribed. The manner in which this part of the question was ultimately adjusted between us, to the apparent satisfaction of both, has been explained in my despatch to the Secretary under date the 20th instant, and does not require to be repeated.

13. The remark in his Excellency's statement having reference to his rejection of the proposal which was made to him originally by Lord Wellesley and withdrawn by the late Lord Cornwallis, has an obvious tendency to confirm the observation submitted in a preceding paragraph of this despatch, namely, that the Vizier considers every instance of his acquiescence in the counsels of the British Government as a confirmation of, and every occasion of successful resistance to its advice as tending to weaken, our right of interference in his Excellency's concerns.

14. The concluding paragraph of his Excellency's letter is worthy of particular notice. It is the uniform practice of the Vizier to apply his territorial cession to the Honourable Company under the fictitious character of a gratuity, as a set-off against every proposal of our Government, however salutary in its nature and objects, beneficial to his Excellency's Government, and even sanctioned by the letter of the Treaty of Cession, that may operate in the smallest degree against his feelings, caprices, or self-interested and personal views.

15. I have always considered it to be my duty to remonstrate, in unqualified terms, against so strange and so wilful a misconception of the principles of the Treaty of Cession as the above, whenever the Vizier has adduced it; and, on the present occasion, I laboured with more than my usual earnestness, and I trust with considerable success, to convince his Excellency's mind of the weakness and unworthiness of the arguments which are adduced at the close of his statement.

16. Our subsidiary alliances with their Highnesses the Nizam and the Peishwa, I proved to his Excellency to be the same in every respect, in their principle, nature, and beneficial objects to both parties, with the treaty of 1801, concluded between his Excellency and Lord Wellesley. The nature and extent of his Excellency's territorial cession, as of districts originally acquired, with one or two trifling exceptions, by the power of the British arms, and transferred to his Excellency's ancestors, I described as exactly the same with the cessions of of the Nizam and the Peishwah ; proportioned, too, in a similar manner, to the amount of the pecuniary subsidy, and the other objects of the alliance, as regulated by former treaties : nay, that the benefits acquired by his Excellency, in exchange for the cession of which he boasted as a gratuity, were decidedly greater and more essential than had accrued to the other States ; and that the only circumstance which was wanting to perpetuate and improve in his possession, and in that of his descendants, the advantages of the treaty of 1801, was his Excellency's cordial concurrence in the necessary measures of reform recommended by your Lordship in Council ; his own performance, in fact, of the only important stipulation of that treaty which now remained to be fulfilled.

17. Of his Excellency's " other acts of friendship during the progress of the " Mahratta war," I observed that it was by no means my wish to detract from the merit of those services, which the Government had acknowledged in suitable terms as they occurred, and would always be disposed to compensate by similar demonstrations of friendship ; but that the question which we were then engaged in discussing was obviously not of a nature to admit of such arguments as those, since his Excellency's obligation by treaty to apprehend and deliver over marauders and other offenders against our Government finding refuge within his dominions, was not to be compromised or set aside by any gratuitous acts which he had the option of performing or not ; and, on the other hand, the protection of our subjects against those marauders, by requiring a fulfilment of his obligation, was a positive duty on our part, which no consideration of friendship for his Excellency could ever entitle us to neglect.

18. Having thus disposed of the whole of his Excellency's statement, in a manner that seemed to convince him of the inefficacy of the arguments which it contained, I animadverted on the nature of his comments on the substance of the several documents conveyed to me by the Secretary's despatch under date the 29th ultimo, and translated for his Excellency's perusal. The sole object and the obvious tendency of those documents, I observed, was to exhibit and to prove to his Excellency the ready and cheerful acquiescence of their Highnesses the Nizam and Dowlut Rao Scindia, in proposals, on the part of our Government, exactly similar to those which his Excellency had so often rejected ; while the grounds of our proposal to his Excellency were manifestly stronger than the others, since the injuries which the arrangement under discussion was intended and calculated to remove had been borne and submitted to patiently for a period of ten years, under every circumstance of aggravation, and without any hope of redress, save by the measures that we had ultimately suggested to his Excellency, and which had been proposed to the other States and acquiesced in, on the first occasion of a necessity for resorting to them. Could this observation, I asked, be refuted by his Excellency's comments ; and if not, to what purpose did they tend ? Could the united substance of his Excellency's letter to my address, and of the declaration and statement which it conveyed, be viewed by his Excellency, on reflection, in the light of a satisfactory reply to my letter conveying a translation of the orders of Government and of the documents referred to in those orders ; or as a just cause, or even plausible pretext for his Excellency's continued resistance to the arrangement, which those orders prescribed, which I had proved to be necessary and unexceptionable, and which other States less closely connected with our Government than his Excellency's had readily and cheerfully agreed to, on the first occasion of its being proposed to them ? The association and co-operation of the Nizam's officers and troops, or those of Scindia, with the officers of our Government, in the pursuit and suppression of marauders, had never been insisted on by his Highness the Nizam or by Dowlut Rao, as a condition of their acquiescence in our views ; nor had this co-operation on the part of the other States been even ascertained to be injurious, as established by repeated experience, with a reference to marauders in Oude. In the instance of the Nizam, indeed, it was doubted whether or not a requisition for the aid of his troops, and a communication with his Highness's officers, were expedient ; and, accordingly, it was left to the discretion of the British officers to make that that requisition or not, without any objection whatever on the part of his Highness's Government, exactly as suggested by me with a reference to his Excellency's officers, whom his Excellency had insisted on uniting in the execution of the service proposed, to the manifest prejudice of its object. In the instance of Scindia, again, the deputation of an officer of his Government to attend a detachment of our troops, proceeded on the Resident's application, and by no means on Scindia's desire; while the contrast between Scindia's conduct and his Excellency's, in regard to another, and a far more essential point, the admission of our troops into his territory, was deserving of particular remark. A jealousy on the part of Dowlut Rao Scindia, with a reference to a measure like this, might have deserved consideration and indulgence, on grounds which it was unnecessary to explain, and which his Excellency knew to be inconsistent with British principles or faith, as well as to be totally inapplicable to the terms of our alliance with him, whose territory, power, and authority, we were bound to protect and maintain, and whose true interests were all identified with our own. I intreated his Excellency to reconsider the nature and tendency of the remarks with which he had thus again attempted to oppose the just and necessary arrangement proposed by your Lordship for his acquiescence, and to hesitate ere he permitted me to record the ultimate grounds of his resistance, contained in the documents before me, to a measure entirely unexceptionable, and to which further resistance was unavailing, since his Excellency was fully aware of the necessity of my carrying it into effect, with or without his concurrence, in the course of that very day.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
26 Mar. 1813.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

19. His Excellency had scarcely interrupted me during the whole of the preceding discourse, and he now made a pitiful appeal to what he termed the paramount power and authority of your Lordship's Government, declaring that he had neither the wish nor ability to oppose it, and that your Lordship might do what you pleased; but that, foreseeing the total annihilation of his own power by the adoption of the measures proposed, he could never willingly consent to them. I replied that, if such were his genuine sentiments, after hearing all the arguments which I had adduced to convince him that his fears were imaginary, any further discussion must be vain, and that I should immediately, though with real reluctance, proceed, in the execution of my duty, to issue the orders which were prepared to the commanding officers of our troops at the several stations on the frontier.

20. I then made a signal to get up, but his Excellency seemed unwilling to leave me in the determination which I had thus finally announced to him, and he begged me again to consider whether or not it were possible to reconcile the execution of the orders of Government with the preservation of his consequence and authority, and to act as his friend on the occasion. I answered, that they were perfectly reconcilable, and indeed could never be at variance, since your Lordship's orders and views were uniformly directed to the maintenance of his Excellency's just authority over his subjects and dominions, as well as to the mutual and more essential advantages of his Excellency's Government and your own; and that his Excellency had only to reconsider dispassionately the tenor of the original proposal, and the grounds on which it was supported, to be satisfied of the truth of this remark; that his Excellency had frequently admitted his obligation to execute of his own authority the service which we had required of him, namely, the seizure and surrender of criminals; that he had as frequently avowed his inclination to perform this duty; and that the measures which we had proposed to him were, in fact, proposed with the view of supporting his Excellency's authority, of enabling him, by the aid of our troops, to discharge an avowed obligation which he had no other means of fulfilling.

21. He now took up the Persian copies of instructions to our officers and his Aumils, which I had prepared for his perusal, and I begged him to say if there were any thing in the terms of those instructions to which he could reasonably object. He answered, that the general nature of them was the principal cause of his objection; that they did not specify any particular offender to be seized, any time at which the troops were to move on this service, nor, in short, any particular purpose or place to which the operations of our troops in his dominions should be limited.

22. I replied, that there could be no motive whatever, on the part of our government, for withholding information on those points, under any circumstances, from his Excellency, nor even from the officers of his Government, save a well-grounded fear of the connivance of the latter with offenders, so as to frustrate the object in view. But that, in fact, the particular information which his Excellency seemed to require was not now in the possession of any one, and could only be gradually obtained by the Magistrates of contiguous districts, whose spies would be employed to discover the places of the offender's concealment, and who would issue their requisitions to commanding officers, and convey the necessary information to me, to be submitted to his Excellency at the very same instant of time; so that his Excellency might always be informed of the intended movement of the troops and its object, before the actual movement took place.

23. The Vizier took advantage of this suggestion on my part, to renew his original demand of a specific application from the Magistrate, through me, for his consent to the employment of our troops, on every occasion of the discovery of the place of an offender's concealment; observing, that as I had now agreed to inform him of the Magistrate's requisition and its object, and as I could have no doubt of his Excellency's fidelity on those occasions, the Magistrate's requisition might, without any injury, proceed through the usual channel of the Resident, after obtaining his Excellency's consent. To this proposal I objected in the calmest possible manner, although irritated by his Excellency's perverseness, submitting the manifest disadvantage and the total inutility of delay, as well as the probability of a disclosure of the circumstances to be communicated by the Magistrate, from their passing through so many offices and becoming known to a number of persons, before the execution of the service required or the movement of the troops for that purpose.

24. His Excellency sullenly replied that "he was helpless," or used words to that effect; and on a second signal from me we got up and proceeded to the door, where he commenced another pitiful complaint, and deplored in a manner unmanly and unbecoming, with tears in his eyes, the unhappy situation in which he was placed, unwilling, as well as unable, to contend with your Lordship on any point, and yet incapable of reconciling to his feelings the arrangement which your Lordship had proposed.

25. I now perceived, or thought that I perceived in his Excellency's countenance and manner, a serious apprehension of the consequences of any further resistance to our views; and I took advantage of this state of his feelings, by begging him to reflect on the extraordinary forbearance of the Government, not only on this question but also on a number of others, on which our advice had been offered to his Excellency in the genuine spirit of friendship, and with the purest possible motives, and had been treated with total disregard. The justice and necessity of the employment of our troops, in the only effectual manner, for the seizure of offenders against our Government finding refuge and protection in this country, had been apparent for a series of years, had been frequently urged and demonstrated to his Excellency in the most amicable manner and by irrefragable proofs, and we were ultimately now reduced to the alternative of conniving at the pillage of our subjects in every district of our territory contiguous to his Excellency's dominions, or adopting measures for their redress in direct opposition to his will. Was this a state of things to have been contemplated between the British Government and that of Oude? could such a state of circumstances exist between them for any protracted period of time? and if the unhappy result of the present discussion with his Excellency should extend to but a few of the other questions that were still depending and unsettled, did his Excellency contemplate the consequences? and to whom were those consequences to be ascribed? I stated my extreme reluctance, on obvious grounds, to notice any part of the letter which his Excellency had recently addressed to your Lordship, till an answer to that letter should be received; but the extraordinary contrast and inconsistency of the expressions at the close close of that letter, with his Excellency's uniform conduct of late years, and more particularly on the present occasion, were by far too striking to be overlooked. He had entreated your Lordship not to view him as on a footing with any other of the princes of India, but as entirely obedient to you in all things; and he had now afforded an example of the manner of his obedience to your will, by resisting to the last a most salutary and unexceptionable arrangement, no sooner proposed than acquiesced in by two other princes of India less closely allied to us than himself.

26. The Vizier seemed greatly affected by the tendency of the foregoing remark. He led me again to the table, and begged me to decide for him as a friend what was proper to be done on this occasion. He wanted nothing but information of the measures proposed before they should be carried into execution: even the names of the offenders to be seized, and the places of their supposed concealment, would suffice; and he would pledge himself never to make them known under any circumstances whatever. I answered, that I saw no objection whatever to his being furnished with a general list of all the offenders and fugitives from each of the districts in our dominions contiguous to his Excellency's territory, before any requisition should be issued by the Magistrate of the district in question to our commanding officer at the frontier post; but that a specification of the place of concealment of any particular offender, or an application, through a circuitous channel, for the seizure of that offender after the place of his concealment should be known, was totally out of the question, and must prove in practice a dereliction of the object of our original proposal to his Excellency.

27. At length, with apparent cordiality, his Excellency was pleased to accept of the degree of information which I offered, and desired me to give him, in writing, a statement of what I proposed. I accordingly committed to writing, in the Persian language, and delivered to his Excellency, an agreement in the following terms: "It is now finally settled, that the Resident's instructions to commanding officers, and the Vizier's orders to his Aumils, agreeably to the copies prepared, shall be issued this day or to-morrow; that the Resident shall require from the Magistrates, and present to his Excellency the Vizier, general lists of the names of all fugitives and offenders, whose apprehension may be required, and until the list of offenders in each district be delivered to his Excellency, the movement of the troops shall not take place. His Excellency, on the other hand, voluntarily offers and promises, never to impart to any of the officers of his Government the names of the offenders in question; and the above rules shall be observed on every future occasion, in the case of new offenders arising, whom it may be the wish of the Magistrates to seize. A list of their names shall be forwarded, before requisitions for their seizure be issued."

28. In this manner, your Lordship in Council will observe, by my concession of a puerile and unmeaning request on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, which his Excellency might have offered with equal success at the commencement, a most vexatious discussion has been terminated, and the object of your Lordship in Council's instructions fulfilled.

29. On a review of this voluminous detail of my conference of the 20th instant with the Vizier, I feel some degree of hesitation in trespassing on your Lordship's time by transmitting it for your perusal; yet, under an idea that as descriptive of the uniform character of the Vizier's vexatious proceedings during a period of several years, and of the unhappy perverseness of his disposition in every discussion with our Government, it may not be destitute of use, I discharge a duty in submitting it.

30. My proceedings with reference to this arrangement, both before and after the conference, have been already reported to your Lordship, through the medium of the Secretary to Government.

31. I have now the honour to acknowledge my receipt of the Secretary's despatch under date the 22d ultimo, containing a communication of your Lordship in Council's sentiments and commands on the subject of the Vizier's complaint.

plaint, and the several questions connected with it ; to express my cheerful and grateful concurrence in the justice of all the remarks which your Lordship has made on my conduct ; and to offer a solemn assurance, that those remarks shall form the guide of my future proceedings.

32. My despatch to the Secretary to Government, under date the 16th ultimo, will have served to explain to your Lordship, the delicate and embarrassing predicament in which I was necessarily placed, with a reference to the case of Hyder Bukhsh, and will have constituted an additional apology for the unintentional error of my conduct regarding that person's departure from Lucknow. In ascribing those errors to their true motive, your Lordship in Council has been pleased to do me all the justice that I could desire.

33. I await with considerable anxiety the receipt of your Lordship's answers to the several letters from the Vizier which are noticed in the commencement of this despatch, and a communication of your Lordship in Council's sentiments and commands on the various subjects of those letters. The deplorable case of her Highness the younger Begum at Elahabad in particular, which forms the principal subject of two of those letters, seems to merit your early consideration, and to require the adoption of more efficient measures than have hitherto been tried, with a view to the satisfaction of her Highness's just claims by her unkind and illiberal brother.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 19th February 1813.)

No. 1.

The translation of the orders of Government to your address, and of its enclosures, with the draft of instructions to Aumils, has been perused by the Presence, and therefore a paper, in the form of a declaration, and another containing the sentiments and wishes of the Presence, with a correct draft of the instructions to Aumils, are now sent for your perusal, enclosed in this shookha. After having attentively and deliberately perused the above documents, you will clearly submit to the Presence whether my requests can be acceded to or not.

No. 2.

In the translation of the orders of Government, regarding the apprehension of delinquents, it is stated that the nature and grounds of my unwarrantable suspicion and jealousy should be distinctly avowed, and substantiated by some satisfactory proof. The case is this : The only point in dispute, with a reference to this subject, is the following. The British Government wishes to adopt measures for the apprehension of delinquents, marauders, and offenders against that Government in my country, without my previous knowledge, and the Presence wishes that the above measures should be carried into effect with its previous knowledge and consent, and thus that the accomplishment of the wish of your Government, which will prove highly gratifying to the Presence, be effected in such a manner as to preserve the power and authority of the Presence as heretofore, with the assistance of the Honourable Company. Now, if the British troops stationed in my dominions shall, without the knowledge or consent of the Presence, seize and carry away any person whom they wish, from any village or town belonging to my country, nay even from Lucknow itself, and the Presence, like every other inhabitant of the country, from the want of previous information be ignorant of the object of those proceedings, it is obvious that my power and authority are at an end, and that dominion, under such circumstances, can have no charms for me whatever. A detailed statement of the nature and grounds of this remark, or of proofs to substantiate it, is evidently unnecessary.

With regard, again, to what is written, that " the commanding officers of the British troops be authorized, on their receipt of intelligence from you or from the Magistrates, accompanied by certain information of the hiding places “ places of public offenders, to detach the troops under their command for the apprehension of such offenders, without any communication with my officers.” If it be the wish of your Government to preclude my officers and Aumils from any knowledge or participation in your measures, this may be accomplished in the following manner, without any hindrance to the object in view, namely: on every occasion, when the Magistrate of a contiguous district may write to you, to inform you that the seizure of a particular offender is required, and request you to issue your orders to a commanding officer to comply with the Magistrate’s requisition for the apprehension of such an offender, on his being pointed out by the Magistrate, you submit the application of the Magistrate, in the first instance, to the Presence, when permission will be granted by the Presence for your issuing your orders to the commanding officer, agreeably to the Magistrate’s request, and thus the desire of the Company’s Government will be fulfilled, and similar orders may be issued for the seizure of fugitives from my Government. If you consent to this arrangement, let me know; and it will certainly accomplish the desire of your Government, as well as preserve the power and authority of the Presence.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from the Vizier.

When the Most Noble Marquess Wellesley proposed that the British troops should enter the dominions of the Presence in pursuit of fugitives from the British territory, and that, in like manner, the troops of the Presence might enter the British territories in pursuit of defaulters against this Government, this proposal was rejected by the Presence, although perfectly equal on both sides.

From the translations of the letters enclosed and referred to in the orders of Government, nothing satisfactory can be decided, because the previous circumstances connected with them are unknown, nor can these documents form any precedents for the Presence. What concern has the Presence in the affairs of others, and what comparison or resemblance can exist between the affairs of the Presence and those of others? Through friendship and unity alone I acceded to the wishes of your Government, and proved my obedience to its will, by ceding a portion of my country and disbanding the whole of my troops, besides other acts of friendship which took place during the operations against the fortress of Bhurtpore, &c.

No. 3.

In the translation of Mr. Russell’s letter to Mr. Tod, the Magistrate of Masulipatam, dated the 8th January 1813, it is stated that, “ there is no objection on the part of the Nizam’s Government to the employment of our troops to seize the persons of the freebooters mentioned in your letter,” &c. to the end of the paragraph. From the above sentence it is evident that a particular list of the names of the marauders must have been inserted in Mr. Tod’s letter, and that the seizure of Ashwa Rao was desired by the Nizam himself.

From the next paragraph of Mr. Russell’s letter to Mr. Tod, enclosing orders from the minister to Meer Hedayet Alee, the Talookadar of Khummumet, directing him “ to obey any orders which he might receive from the officer commanding the troops,” &c. (recapitulate), it is to be inferred that a particular communication was made to, and permission obtained from the Nizam, before the orders in question were issued.

With a reference to the last paragraph of the above letter, in which the Resident states that “ he has thought it better not to ask for the assistance of the Nizam’s horse nor to make any communication,” &c. to the end. Mr. Russell in this paragraph has merely expressed his own thoughts and suspicions regarding the people in question.

In the translation of Mr. Tod’s Letter to the Secretary in the judicial department, Fort St. George, dated the 22d December 1812, it is written, that “ it is notoriously known that they are countenanced and protected by a Zemindar called Ashwa Rao,” &c. It is also stated, that “ if it should not be deemed expedient to proceed against Ashwa Rao, a party of horse should be employed,” &c. The first sentence is merely expressive of Mr. Tod’s opinion, and the second suggests the co-operation to the Nizam’s cavalry in the apprehension of the marauders.

Letter
from the Vizier.

In the translation of the letter from the Resident with Dowlut Rao Scindia to his Lordship's address, dated the 12th September 1812, it is written, that his "Highness deputed a huzooreah," &c. It is further stated, that "it was settled that our (the British) troops should have liberty to cross into the Maharajah's territory, for the apprehension of such violaters of the peace," &c. and further, that "the Subadar of Gwalior was directed to afford every aid in his power," &c.

Now the Presence, in like manner, has no objection whatever to appoint a person, for the purpose of co-operating in such measures as may be adopted for the ease of the British subjects and tranquillity of the country, nor to issue any orders which are required to the several Aumils. But with regard to the British troops entering my dominions in pursuit of robbers, &c. as there were no British troops in the Maharajah's country, if he did not accede to their coming, what else could he do? Whereas, in my country, British troops are already stationed, and these are sufficient for the punishment or seizure of all the offenders in question.

In the translation of Mr. Strachey's letter to Mr. Adam it is stated, that "in the uncertainty whether my communications," &c. (recapitulate). In this letter, the co-operation of Dowlut Rao Scindia and his officers is apparent and manifest.

In the translation of Mr. Strachey's letter to Mr. Hallied, Assistant to the Magistrate of zillah Agrah and Etawah, dated the 27th October 1812, it is written, "I requested that his Highness would send a party of horse to co-operate with them, in which his Highness immediately acquiesced," &c. Co-operation is also evident from this sentence.

Again, in the translation of the orders issued by Maharajah Dowlut Rao Scindia to Bhugwunt Rao, the Naib of the Subadar of Gwalior, dated the 27th of October 1812, the place of the rebel Lollgie's residence, and the names of the villages whose Zemindars concealed and protected him are specified, and from the tenor of the above order it is clear that his Highness's permission must have been previously asked and obtained.

From the translation of Mr. Strachey's letter to Mr. Hallied, dated the 30th of October 1812, it appears that an application was made by him to the Maharajah for a letter to his Highness's Aumil of Omree.

From ditto to ditto, dated the 1st of November 1812, previous application and co-operation are apparent.

From Mohoroba Hurry's letter to Lalla Lokeman, dated the 1st November 1812, aid and co-operation are very clear and apparent.

In the translation of Mr. Strachey's letter to Mr. Hallied, dated 3d November 1812, previous application, co-operation, and great degree of consideration for Scindia are obvious.

From the translation of Mr. Strachey's letter to Captain Popham, dated the 20th November 1812, the orders issued by Dowlut Rao Scindia for the aid, assistance, and co-operation of his officers in the punishment of offenders are evident.

From the translation of orders issued by Dowlut Rao Scindia to Khundoo Huzooreah, dated the 20th November 1812, the aid and co-operation, &c. of his officers are also very clear.

The orders issued to Ramchund, Koomasdar of Omree, are in similar terms to the orders issued to Khundoo Huzooreah.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council,
&c. &c. &c.

My Lord :

1. Your Lordship's letter to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, under date the 5th of March last, in reply to his Excellency's letter of the 1st January, was received from the Persian Department on the 27th ultimo. My desire of being furnished with a copy of the Persian Secretary's report on the forms of correspondence with the Vizier, to be submitted to his Excellency in explanation of a portion of your Lordship's letter, having reference to that subject, induced me to postpone the delivery of the letter to the Vizier until the morning of the 13th instant, when I announced my intention of breakfasting with his Excellency for this purpose.

2. The Vizier was prevented by a slight indisposition from receiving my visit on the morning of the 13th instant, and his Excellency did me the honour to breakfast with me on the morning of the following day.

3. I prefaced the delivery of the letter by referring to my usual practice of reading in his Excellency's presence all letters on subjects of importance, with the delivery of which I might be charged under the orders of the Governor-General, and I explained the cause of my departure from that practice on the present occasion to be the delicate nature of the principal subject of the letter, as it related to my own character and conduct. I begged his Excellency to reconsider the grounds of his complaint against me, and your Lordship's sentiments regarding them, in a calm and dispassionate manner; and I expressed my reliance on his Excellency's justice and impartiality, for his ultimate acquiescence in the judgment which your Lordship in Council had pronounced. I begged him to be assured of my disposition to take no other advantage of your Lordship's decision in my favour, than that of renewing my ardent endeavour to cultivate his Excellency's good-will and to promote the honour of his Government; and I ventured with confidence to predict to him, that the result of his late misconception of my expressions and motives would prove the means of a more cordial friendship between us, and of our more ready concurrence than heretofore in the measures and views of each other. I adverted to his Excellency's indisposition of the preceding day, as a cause for my limiting the business of that interview to the delivery of your Lordship's letter, and for refraining from any discussion on the merits of the questions at issue, as they were treated or referred to in your Lordship's instructions to me.

4. There was one question, however, which I stated to his Excellency to require my immediate notice, with a view to the proper regulation of the forms of correspondence between us, in order that no interruption of our official correspondence might take place, and that his Excellency might at once be apprised of the terms on which alone I was authorized to receive his letters in future. His Excellency could not require to be informed, that a striking alteration had been made in the manner of his written communications with the British Resident at his durbar, shortly after his accession to the musnud; nor could it be necessary for me to repeat the observations which his Excellency would find in your Lordship's reply to his letter, on the manifest impropriety of that change which I was disposed to ascribe to the ignorance or negligence of his Moonshees, rather than to a want of consideration on his own part for the station of Representative of the British Government at his Court. I stated to him, that a similar departure from the established forms of correspondence with the Resident had been noticed on the part of the Bhow Begum, and that I was prepared, under the spirit of your Lordship in Council's instructions, to make an application to her Highness on this subject, exactly similar to that which it was now my duty to urge for his Excellency's immediate acquiescence. As explanatory at greater length, and in explicit detail, of the remarks and requisition contained in your Lordship's letter to his Excellency, I presented and referred to a translation of the Persian Secretary's report, which I begged his Excellency to peruse with attention, and by adopting the suitable style which it suggested, to save me the unpleasant and delicate task of reciting in his Excellency's presence, those exceptionable terms and expressions which could no longer be admitted in our correspondence.

5. His Excellency now took his leave, carrying with him the letter and report, and I announced my intention to wait on him in the course of a few days, proposing Saturday the 17th instant at breakfast, for the purpose of learning the result of his deliberation on the subjects of the letter.

6. I attended his Excellency on Saturday, and had a conference with him of considerable length. The object of my attendance I described to be partly that of learning from his Excellency the result of his attentive perusal of your Lordship's reply to his letter, and partly to communicate to his Excellency the substance of your Lordship's instructions, which accompanied the transmission of it to me. Yet the tenor of the letter itself, I observed, was so explicit and comprehensive on every question, as to supersede illustration on my part, and to preclude the necessity or use of my submitting additional arguments, in confirmation of any point which it urged. In as far as I was personally concerned, it seemed totally unnecessary to say any thing. Your Lordship, aware of the delicacy of my entering into a personal discussion with his Excellency of the grounds of his complaint against myself, had relieved me from that painful necessity.

necessity, by conveying a specific and satisfactory reply to every one of his Excellency's charges of intemperance, anger or disrespect, and of unwarrantable encroachment on his authority. You had further found it necessary, after mature consideration and investigation of his Excellency's charge of disrespect in the forms of correspondence on my part, to require from his Excellency's justice, in vindication of the dignity of your Government, an immediate and entire change in the style of his letters to your Representative, which I was instructed to urge and persist in demanding from his Excellency, till the object of the requisition should be fulfilled. On this point it was therefore my duty to announce to his Excellency at once, in the plainest and most decided manner, that my instructions were final and express, and that I was no longer at liberty to receive any written communications from his Excellency, which might contain an exceptionable term, or an expression unauthorized by the ancient forms of correspondence established between his Excellency's predecessors, and the former Residents at Lucknow.

7. With a reference to all the other points in dispute, I observed that his Excellency's letter to your Lordship, dated the 26th of August last, in answer to your Lordship's letter of the 8th of May, in which those questions were particularly discussed, would have been replied to directly, long ere now, if the attention of the Government had not been constantly occupied by other matters of equal importance, and requiring greater deliberation than those; since the deliberate judgment of the Government, on every question depending with his Excellency, had already been formed and conveyed to him, and what remained with a reference to him, could be no more than a final endeavour to operate a conviction in his mind of the necessity of his early compliance with our just and reasonable requisitions, his acquiescence in our salutary advice.

8. For this purpose, it seemed sufficient, on my part, to request his particular attention to a few of the impressive remarks contained in your Lordship's letter. In that letter his Excellency was explicitly told, that your Lordship could never desist from urging to a satisfactory conclusion every one of the questions that were pending. He was further entreated to reflect on the consequences of his continued opposition to your Lordship's most reasonable demands, his persevering disregard of your counsels; and in the conclusion of the letter he was apprized that your Lordship's instructions to me comprehended every point in discussion, were conclusive on every question in dispute, and therefore that my representations should be considered as proceeding directly from your Lordship, and equally demanding his regard.

9. Proceeding on the natural belief, that the impression of remarks such as those, must be productive of his ready acquiescence in the suggestions that I should now have to offer, I commenced with a recapitulation of the grounds on which his Excellency's consent to the arrangement in behalf of the younger Begum was so strongly recommended, and so earnestly desired by your Lordship. The orders of the Government on this subject, under date the 26th of February, had been submitted for his Excellency's perusal. Your Lordship in Council's sentiments on the nature of his Excellency's opposition to the only satisfactory adjustment of the Begum's claims that could be devised, had been explicitly conveyed to him by me, and the inevitable consequence of his persisting in that opposition was all that remained to be stated to him. The condition of the Begum's consent to the transfer of her jagier to his Excellency, even at its fullest value, was the commutation, at a reasonable rate, of the supplies of her kitchen for money. The sum of one hundred rupees per diem was the lowest rate that could be fixed, without a sacrifice of her Highness's comfort as well as a compromise of her just right, and it remained for his Excellency to decide whether he would accept of the immediate transfer of the jagier at a valuation of its produce, to be made as originally suggested by me, on the condition annexed to it by the Begum, or acquiesce in her Highness's desire to commit the management of her jagier to the charge of the British Government, granting still an allowance to her Highness in lieu of the supply of provisions, to such extent as might be proved to be the actual value of that supply.

10. His Excellency interrupted me here, and referred to a short correspondence which had recently passed between us on the subject of her Highness's claims.

claims. The result of this recent correspondence, as now explained by his Excellency, was a solemn promise, on his part, to refer the amount of the allowance in lieu of the Begum's provisions to my decision entirely, and to receive the verbal declarations of the revenue officers of the jagier to be summoned to his Presence for that purpose, in confirmation of the written statements of its produce, and of the actual charges of collection, which should regulate the amount of the stipend to be fixed in lieu of the jagier. I have, therefore, the satisfaction of announcing to your Lordship in Council, that two of the most vexatious questions depending between the Vizier and the younger Begum may be considered as finally adjusted, unless his Excellency may be suspected of a design to depart from his solemn assurance, which at present I do not apprehend.

11. With a reference to the elder Begum, I now remarked to his Excellency, that your Lordship's reply to his letter left me little to add on the subject of the adjustment of her Highness's claims. His Excellency was explicitly told, that the British Government not only possesses the right, but is under a positive obligation, to investigate and determine all disputes between him and her Highness the Begum; and, in pursuance of this declaration, it was now my duty to require from his Excellency's justice and good faith, his concurrence with her Highness the Begum in referring their respective claims for disputed villages in Bhinga, and all other matters in dispute, to my investigation and decision, or to the judgment of your Lordship in Council, on receiving a report of my proceedings.

12. The Vizier referred me, on this occasion, to a letter which he had recently written on the subject of the Begum's demands, and which I had not hitherto had leisure to peruse, in which his Excellency had assured me of his readiness to abide by my decision on all the questions in dispute. This assurance has since been repeated, and I have every reason to consider the most important and most troublesome of the questions depending between the Vizier and the Begum as in a train of satisfactory adjustment.

13. Regarding the case of Mal Tewaree and other sepoys and dependants of the Honourable Company's Government in Oude, a discussion of considerable length took place between his Excellency and me at the conference which is now reported. I pointed out to his Excellency, and proved, the manifest injustice and oppression of the means which were uniformly resorted to by the Aumils of this Government for evading the claims of the sepoys, and the redress of the wrongs which they sustain. "A person is thrown into confinement, the whole of his property seized, nay his house is plundered and burnt by the order of a rapacious Aumil without any just cause or pretext, or at all events without legal trial, and he lingers in a prison in irons till his case be reported to the Presence. If a dependant of the Company's Government, I remonstrate with your Excellency in his behalf, the prisoner is necessarily released, and the Aumil is summoned to the Presence. He denies his rapacity of course, and your Excellency calls on me for evidence, not only of the act of oppression, which is self-evident in the appearance of the oppressed, but also for proof by witnesses of his original possession, and actual robbery by the Aumil, of every article of property in his house, to found a claim for the restitution of that property, or even for a compensation of the loss. Is such evidence in the nature of things to be procured? and who, but the wife and children of the aggrieved, could be witnesses of the loss which he suffered, could identify any article of his property, could substantiate any portion of his claim? But your Excellency or your lawyers will tell me, that the wives or children of the plaintiff are not to be witnesses in his cause, and thus the unfortunate Mal Tewaree, after suffering a grievous imprisonment, being robbed of every article that he possessed, and awaiting at your Excellency's gate for a period of more than a year the redress of his manifold wrongs, is to be dismissed without any redress; and why? for the want of evidence to substantiate injuries and losses which the Aumil has partially acknowledged, and which are known to all the people of the district; because no one will give evidence against the Aumil; and because the particular articles plundered

14. His Excellency listened with attention to the above and to many other arguments which I adduced in behalf of our sepoy; and at length an arrangement was concluded, under which there seems every probability of effectual redress of the grievances, not only of Mal Tewaree, Naik, but of every other dependant of our Government who may complain of such injuries in future. It was settled, that on every future occasion of such oppressive proceedings as those on the part of his Excellency's Aumils, or of the seizure of any part of the property of a sepoy, on whatever pretext, the declaration of the plaintiff on oath to the extent or value of his property seized, without any specification of the articles or testimony of witnesses in his behalf, shall be received as proof against the Aumil, who shall be immediately compelled to repay the amount of the sepoy's loss to the full extent of his declaration.

15. I now called his Excellency's attention to the only remaining questions which are hinted at in your Lordship's letter: the reform of the system of his administration, including that of the police of his capital, and the cases of Hoossein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckie. On these questions I observed to his Excellency, that there was every reason to expect another strong and direct remonstrance from your Lordship in the course of a very short time, unless the necessity for it should be happily superseded by his Excellency's acquiescence in the suggestion which I was instructed to offer under your Lordship's authority, and in your name. The arguments on both sides of each of the questions referred to, had long ago been exhausted, and his Excellency, seemingly aware of the weakness of those maintained by himself, had found it necessary to commit the decision to your Lordship's ultimate judgment, by which he had promised to abide. Of your Lordship in Council's deliberate judgment on each and all of the questions at issue, I did not hesitate to assure the Vizier that he was already in ample possession, and that no argument in his Excellency's letter of the 26th of August, nor any other to be hereafter adduced, could alter your Lordship's opinion, nor induce you to discontinue your efforts for the accomplishment of the objects in view. It remained for his Excellency to determine whether he should await another and a stronger declaration to this effect from your Lordship, or anticipate what might prove unpleasant to his feelings, by receiving this assurance from me, and acting on it by my friendly suggestion.

16. On the concluding paragraph of your Lordship's letter to his Excellency, having reference to his disposition to travel, I thought it useless to offer any remarks, unless the subject of it should be revived by himself, and his Excellency seemed unwilling to notice it. He had listened to me with the greatest attention during the whole time of our conference, and had interrupted me but on three occasions, to declare his acquiescence in my proposals with regard to their Highnesses the Begums and to the question of Mal Tewaree. He now remarked, with a reference to the style and manner of correspondence, that he considered your Lordship's requisition as precluding objection on his part, though it was evident that your Lordship's opinion on this, as on every other point of his letter, was in perfect coincidence with mine; that, for himself, he had only to acquiesce in the manner of writing prescribed to him, but that the style of our correspondence with the Marhattas seemed more liable to objection than his, and it seemed odd that he should first be corrected. I replied, that I could with accuracy advert to the letters of such Marhatta chieftains only as had corresponded with me in Bundelcund, and that those were respectful in the extreme; that I had heard of inconsiderate and exceptionable forms of address (termed Alkâb in oriental correspondence) on the part of his Highness the Peishwa, but that the general style of his letters was entirely free from objection in every other respect; that the antient forms of address from his Excellency and his father and brother to the Governor-General of India, and to the representative of the British Government at Lucknow, whether originally suitable or otherwise, and whether applicable or inapplicable to the actual circumstances of the times, had never in any instance been objected to, and would remain as originally fixed, without any cavil on my part; and all that your Lordship required, or that I was instructed to urge on the present occasion to his Excellency, was his own recurrence and adherence adherence to those common observances of respect which were uniformly practised by his predecessors, and which he had been pleased to set aside, while the former Residents at his Excellency's Court, and particularly myself, had been gradually increasing the demonstrations of our highest respect for his Excellency in the language and manner of our letters.

17. With this observation on my part, and an assurance on the part of the Vizier that he would deliberate fully and maturely on every subject of my discourse, and inform me speedily of the result on such questions as remained to be settled, our conference of the 17th instant broke up, and I have not seen his Excellency since.

18. I have, however, the satisfaction of transmitting for your Lordship in Council's perusal a copy and translation of a letter which his Excellency sent to me yesterday, and the language of which, in the original, will be reported to your Lordship to be free from every one of those offensive expressions which the Vizier has been accustomed to use, and which are noticed in the Persian Secretary's report, while the substance of the letter will, I doubt not, appear to your Lordship in Council to be more satisfactory on the whole than could have been expected at this stage of my proceedings, under the recent instructions of the Government.

19. I shall have the honour of submitting my sentiments on the subjects of his Excellency's letter in detail, and of reporting my further proceedings regarding them, in a future address to your Lordship, or through the medium of the Secretary to Government, at an early period of time.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 25th of April 1813.)

I purpose in this letter to give an answer to each of the questions that were discussed at our conference of Saturday last; and first, regarding her Highness the elder Begum. The disorders and irregularities which prevail in all the frontier villages of my dominions, and the murders and other outrages committed against my subjects, inhabitants of those villages, by the Zemindars of her Highness's jagier, have been repeatedly complained of by me to her Highness, and I have written to you on the subject. You, too, have written to her frequently, but hitherto in vain. Nevertheless, in consideration of your urgent requisitions for the settlement of her Highness's claims, my letter of the 4th instant gives you full powers to decide in whatever manner you think proper, and whatever you say shall be agreed to.

With a reference to the khassa (provisions) and jagier of her Highness the younger Begum, I agree to your proposal, as detailed in your letter of the 13th instant.

With regard to the claims of Moonshee Aleo Nuckee, and Hoosein Aleo Khan, after conveying a true statement of both cases in my letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, I expressed my readiness to comply with his Lordship's wishes on those points. To this letter I have not hitherto had a reply; but still if his Lordship will be pleased to point out any mode of investigation into the merits of those cases, in reply to my letter above noticed, or will merely write to me, "do so and so, in compliance with my request," I am ready to comply with his wishes; indeed your own application to this effect would satisfy me equally well; but as the matter has been referred to his Lordship, it behoves me to await his reply.

- With regard to the case of Mal Tewaree, whenever that person shall again present himself to me, and shall swear by the faith which he professes to the amount of the loss which he sustained, I shall perform my promise in his favour. I have, moreover, issued positive orders to my Aumils to beware of seizing or distraining, on any pretext whatever, the property of a sepoy or servant of the Honourable Company's Government.

With

With a reference to the terms and expressions that have been hitherto used in correspondence, the matter of fact is this; that those words have been used all along with the consent and approbation of former Residents, not otherwise, or they would certainly have remonstrated on the subject, which none of them has hitherto done. But as it appears, from the tenor of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, that the use of the expressions in question is now disapproved by his Lordship, and has long been unpleasant to you, and the discontinuance of all those expressions is considered as essential to the honour and dignity of the officers of the British Government; under these circumstances, if I were to hesitate or object to lay aside those obnoxious expressions, his Lordship might infer, what God forbid! that I wished to derogate or detract from the honour and dignity of British officers, and therefore every expression which could be considered in that light by his Lordship has been laid aside and discontinued in correspondence; for, if the discontinuance of those words can promote the honour and dignity of the British officers and be satisfactory to his Lordship's mind, what better inducement can I wish for?

It is stated in the translation of the Persian Secretary's report to Government that "in the time of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah the forms of correspondence were not invariably the same, but that trifling differences occasionally occurred, either through the ignorance or mistake of the Moonshee," &c. &c. (to the end). And also, that "the present forms of correspondence seem to have commenced in 1801, but whether this essential change attracted the notice of Colonel Scott," &c. &c. (to the end).

All this matter seems to me to be irrelevant and unnecessary; for it has ever been and is now my chief wish to give pleasure and satisfaction to the Governor-General, in as far as lies in my power, and besides the forms of correspondence were certainly not invariably the same during the Government of my brother the late Asuf-ood-Dowlah: but were I to enter into a discussion of those forms, it might give rise to another dispute which I am cordially disposed to avoid.

With regard to the insertion of the date of my letters at the conclusion, I mentioned, and wished to continue it, merely to aid my recollection; and afterwards suggested, that it should be written on the corner or the back of the letter, or on any other place, as you thought proper. You determined that it should be written on the back of my letters, and with this suggestion I have complied.

With regard to your letters to my address, you suggest that they be dated in Persian or English on the back, as I may think proper. In answer to which I repeat, that whatever you proposed to me with a view to respect for your own Government, I have agreed to, and you may either date your letters or not at all and in the way which is most agreeable to yourself, as I have no right to prescribe any rule for your guidance.

Lucknow, to make oath to the extent of his loss, and I have required his attendance accordingly. The purport of the Vizier's circular order to his Aumils, as intended and calculated to preclude the oppression of our sepoys in future, and vexatious discussions on that subject, will, I doubt not, be satisfactory to the Government.

3. Of the redress of the grievances of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, and a renewal of the former allowance to the indigent family of Hyder Beg, in the person of his son Hoossein Alee Khan, though I have deemed it to be my duty to urge both those points in strong terms to the Vizier, I can scarcely entertain an expectation, till his Excellency shall receive a reply to his letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General under date the 26th of August.

4. The more important question of reform is obviously in a similar predicament; and I have great doubts of the expediency of my pressing this question again on the attention or consideration of the Vizier till he be apprized of the sentiments of the Government in a direct address from his Lordship, whose commands I shall therefore await regarding the revival of the question of reform.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 28th of April 1813.)

It is my intention to reply to the several remarks which are contained in your Excellency's letter of the 25th instant by a series of letters to your address, in each of which one of the remaining questions at issue shall be separately treated and discussed, as I hope, to your Excellency's satisfaction. And first, regarding the case of Mal Tewaree, Naick in the Honourable Company's service, your Excellency has been pleased to assure me, that "whenever that person shall again appear in the Presence, and shall swear by the faith which he professes to the amount of the loss which he has sustained, your promise in his behalf shall be fulfilled."

The arrangement which your Excellency has recently made for the redress of all future injuries to be sustained by the Honourable Company's sepoys and dependants, is, in my opinion, highly satisfactory, and will, I doubt not, have the desired effect: but, with regard to the particular case of Mal Tewaree, who has been already in constant attendance for a period of more than a year, and after suffering unprecedented loss as well as disappointment, was at length compelled to join his corps at Benares, (leaving his son behind him as his agent, with full powers to act in his behalf), the extreme old age and infirm state of health of this unfortunate person, rendering him an object of the invalid establishment, induce me to suggest to your Excellency that his personal attendance be dispensed with, and that the deposition of his son be received, to establish the extent of his loss and his claim against your Excellency's Aumil.

A copy of an arzee from his son, with a statement of the property of which he was plundered, is submitted for your Excellency's perusal; and if your Excellency will be graciously pleased, in compassion for the sufferings and weak state of the father, to comply with my suggestion in his behalf, you will confer a favour on the British Government, as well as perform an act of humanity to the invalid.

I beg to be favoured with a copy of the circular order to Aumils which is referred to in your Excellency's letter, that a translation of it may be sent to the Presidency for his Lordship in Council's satisfaction.

To

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 29th of April 1815.)

In your Excellency's letter of the 25th instant it is stated, with a reference to the claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, that after conveying a true statement of the case in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, you expressed a readiness to comply with his Lordship's wishes on this point, and that if his Lordship will be pleased to point out any mode of investigation into the merits of the case, in reply to the letter above noticed, or will merely write to you, "do so and so," you are ready to comply with his wishes.

Now, as your Excellency may be perfectly assured that I would never presume to suggest any measure for your Excellency's adoption, far less to urge and importune you regarding it, without the express sanction and command of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and as, in fact, I am fully acquainted not only with his Lordship in Council's decision on the merits of this case, after a careful perusal of the sunnuds and of the arguments on both sides of the question, but also with his Lordship's particular wish and desire in behalf of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, and with his gracious resolution, if necessary, to address your Excellency again in the strongest terms on this subject, under these circumstances I submit for your Excellency's serious consideration, under his Lordship's authority and in his name, the following fact and propositions, which have appeared to his Lordship in Council to be established in favour of the Moonshee, and which I have no hesitation in promising to produce and exhibit to your Excellency in a short time, if it be necessary, under his Lordship's signature and seal.

First. Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan has an unquestionable right, by inheritance, to a certain share of the Chowdhur, canoongoey, and zemindary of the town and district of Sandee, in your Excellency's hereditary dominions, and in virtue of this right, as his own individual share, specifically allotted to him by a deed of distribution and acknowledgment under the seals of the other sharers, confirmed to him by the perwannahs of former possessors of Sandee, by the grants of your Excellency's brother, the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and by the letters of Hyder Beg Khan, Mr. Middleton, and of the Aumils of that pergunnah, as well as by your Excellency's mandate obtained through the mediation of Colonel Scott, the Moonshee is known to have maintained the uniform and undisturbed possession, till the year 1216 fusly, of three gardens, one chuck, two villages as Nankar, namely Muhwa Colee and Acknowra, and a bazar, called after him Moonshee Gunge. A particular and authenticated statement of all those possessions, under the seal of the deputy Aumil of Sandee, Naib of the late Almas Alee Khan, has been frequently submitted to your Excellency, and demonstrates the Moonshee's possession of the premises beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Second. Of all those hereditary possessions the Moonshee was unjustly deprived about the middle of the year 1216 fusly, by the then Aumil of Sandee, who now prevents him from farming any one of the villages in his zemindary.

Third. Rushek Loll, a Brahmin, and others, have forcibly possessed themselves of ground in the bazar of Moonshee Gunge, and have erected houses on that ground without the Moonshee's permission.

Fourth. A person named Imteaz Alee, under the pretext of being a son of Sulam Oolla, the late Chowdree of Sandee, has taken possession of the house of the deceased, thus depriving and forcibly dispossessing the children and grandchildren of Sulam Oolla, including the sons of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, of their just and lawful inheritance.

These facts being admitted or proved, it is expected from your Excellency's justice, and will be received as a favour and a mark of your Excellency's friendship by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that your Excellency issue your orders to the Aumil of the district of Sandee for the release and restoration to the Moonshee of his possessions above described, with the amount of the rents which have been collected from them, and for his being permitted to farm the villages in his zemindary at a fair and moderate assessment, and to the several persons who have built houses on the Moonshee's ground.

Notice is hereby given to the present and future Mootusuddees in the pergunnah of Sandee, Sircar Khyrabad, that in consequence of a shookha issued from the Presence to Mohummud Almass Alee Khan, I have received a perwannah from Raja Buhwannee Pershaud to the following effect. " Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan is going to Calcutta, and you must not suffer any person to interfere with any of his villages, houses, or other rights and perquisites of zemindary. Should any one attempt to molest him, information must be conveyed to the Presence." You are therefore desired to consider this as a positive order against the molestation of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, in his possession of the houses, villages, or other rights and perquisites which are now held by the Moonshee, as established by ancient custom, to wit :

Exemptions, under the head of Nankar.

Letter
from Resident at

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 1st of May 1813.)

Your Excellency has been pleased to remark, in your letter of the 25th instant, with a reference to the claims of Hoosein Alee Khan, that after conveying a true statement of the case in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, you had expressed a readiness to comply with his Lordship's wishes on this point, and if his Lordship will be pleased to point out any mode of investigation into the merits of the case, in reply to your letter above-noticed, or will merely write to you, " do so and so," you are ready to comply with his wishes.

The representation which I have recently had occasion to make to your Excellency on the subject of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan's claims, must appear to you to be equally applicable to this case. The Right Honourable the Governor-General has explicitly informed your Excellency, that I have received his Lordship's instructions on every point under discussion, and has requested your Excellency to consider my representations as proceeding directly from his Lordship, and equally demanding your regard. Were it otherwise, I should not have presumed to solicit your Excellency's attention to, far less to urge your acquiescence in any of the questions or objects which were formerly agitated between us, and had long ago been referred by your Excellency, as well as by me, for his Lordship's ultimate decision.

It is, in fact, therefore, the deliberate decision of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, after a minute and attentive consideration of all the papers and arguments on the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, that I now submit to your Excellency, under his Lordship's authority, and in his name, and I have no hesitation in promising to procure and exhibit to your Excellency, if your Excellency be pleased to require it, a similar statement verbatim under his Lordship's signature and seal. It is as follows ;

The grant of a yearly stipend of one lac of rupees in money, with several villages and other possessions in jagier, to the two legitimate sons and other surviving relations of the late Hyder Beg Khan, through the mediation of the late Marquis Cornwallis, and their uniform enjoyment of this allowance till your Excellency's

Excellency's accession to the musnad, have been proved beyond the possibility of a doubt, by the concurring testimony of many of the most respectable inhabitants of Lucknow, who are still in existence and ready to make oath to this effect, as well as by the records of this Residency; and your Excellency's ignorance of the fact, which is the only argument adduced, cannot obviously be received in refutation of the grant of an allowance by the late Nawaub Assufood-Dowlah long before your Excellency's time, consequently your Excellency must be bound by the express terms of your letter to the address of the Honourable Mr. Wellesley dated the 17th of Jemadee-oos-sanee, A.H. 1216, a copy of which is transmitted for your perusal, not only to restore the allowance which has hitherto been withheld since your accession, but also in strict justice to refund the arrears of that allowance to the indigent posterity of Hyder Beg Khan.

Bengal Political

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

Akbur Alee Khan, the eldest son of Hyder Beg, who originally received the amount, and directed the distribution of this allowance among the several relations of the deceased, having incurred the displeasure of your Excellency as well as of the British Government, and being now under personal restraint, there is certainly a valid pretext for the resumption or detention of that part of the stipend which was originally allotted to him, and I do not consider myself as authorized to insist on your Excellency's payment of that portion of the allowance; but as Hoosein Alee Khan, the second son of Hyder Beg, has an equal right with his brother, and is under none of the disqualifications which are described in your Excellency's letter to Mr. Wellesley, there can be no just cause, I conceive, for his deprivation of his own share of the stipend, nor of the right of receiving and distributing the shares of the other relations, which has been forfeited by his elder brother in consequence of his disobedience of the law.

A consideration of justice, therefore, as well as of due regard to the important services which were rendered to your Excellency's Government by the late Hyder Beg Khan, most urgently demands, and I have been instructed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, on these grounds, and in the most earnest manner to request, that your Excellency will be pleased to restore the whole amount of the stipend of a lac of rupees per annum, deducting the share of Akbur Alee Khan, to the family of the late Hyder Beg, in the name of his second son, Hoosein Alee Khan, who will reserve and appropriate to himself his personal share of the allowance, and distribute the remainder among his brothers and other relations, the needy dependants of his father.

I shall have the honour of submitting to your Excellency a correct list of their names, with a statement of the monthly allowances which each of them formerly received, as soon as your Excellency shall inform me of your acquiescence in this necessary arrangement.

Your letter, dated the 26th of Rubbee-oos-sanee (28th April), requesting that the personal attendance of Mal Tewaree be dispensed with, on account of his extreme old age and the infirm state of his health, and that the deposition of his son, who is in attendance, be received to establish his claim, with an arzee from the son of Mal Tewaree and a list of his property, has been received. The case is this: Considering Mal Tewaree to be the principal, and in fact the only person concerned in this affair, I formerly wrote to you to desire his attendance for the purpose of taking his oath; therefore, when he attends and makes oath to his losses, his property or the value of it shall be restored.

A copy of the orders issued to my Aumils is enclosed, agreeably to your request.

On the 29th of Rujeeb last (8th August 1812), an order was issued from the Presence, directing the fair and equitable settlement of all matters of dispute with the Honourable Company's servants, and forbidding their being confined or ill treated. You are now enjoined by the Presence to pay strict attention to the former shookha on this subject, and hereafter on no pretext to seize or molest the property or dwelling-house of any servant of the Honourable Company's Government, taking notice that if you act in opposition to this order, all property in ready-money or goods which may hereafter be distrained or confiscated, or the full value of that property, to the extent which the owner may declare on his oath to be true, shall be taken from you and given to the complainant. Being apprized of this resolution beforehand, you have yourself to blame for the consequences if you act contrary to orders.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, dated the 26th ultimo, to the address of the Governor-General in Council, reporting your proceedings in execution of the instructions conveyed to you in my letter of the 5th of March. Your letter of the 6th instant to my address, in continuation of the subject of the despatch above acknowledged, has also been received and submitted to the Governor-General in Council.

2. I am directed to convey to you the expression of his Lordship in Council's entire approbation of the manner in which you have executed the instructions above referred to, and of the tenor of your discourse to his Excellency the Vizier at the two conferences with his Excellency, which you have described in your despatch. His Lordship in Council considers your share of those conferences to have been conducted with judgment, spirit, firmness, and address, and the success which has attended your exertions to improve and confirm the effect produced on the mind of the Vizier by the Governor-General's letter, has afforded his Lordship in Council a high degree of satisfaction.

3. The tone and manner in which his Excellency's acquiescence in the propositions to which he has acceded, was conveyed both in his verbal communications and in his letter to your address, of which a translation accompanied your despatch, although not free from the appearance of reluctance and ungraciousness, are yet, on the whole, sufficiently satisfactory, and his acquiescence on those points is in substance so explicit and unqualified, as to leave no room for evasion or equivocation. The Governor-General in Council relies on your firmness and perseverance, from which so much advantage has already been derived for giving full and complete effect to the consent of the Vizier to the arbitration of his differences with the Bhow Begum, the adjustment of the affairs of Shums-oon Nissa Begum, and the redress of grievances sustained by the Honourable Company's sepoys at the hands of the Vizier's Aumils.

4. His Lordship in Council is happy to observe that his Excellency has already afforded a practical instance of his compliance with the remonstrances of the Governor-General on the improper style and form of his correspondence with you, by addressing to you a letter entirely free from objection in those respects.

5. With respect to his Excellency's refusal to acquiesce in your suggestion, that the deposition of the son of Mal Tewaree, naick, should be received instead of that of Mal Tewaree himself, his Lordship in Council does not consider his Excellency's expectation in this instance to be unreasonable, especially adverting to the extremely favourable nature of the test by which the truth and extent of the alleged grievances of our sepoys are to be decided, and his Lordship in Council entirely approves of your having desisted from urging his Excellency on this point.

6. The tenor of your letters to his Excellency's address, relative to the case of Alee Nuckee Khan and Hoosein Alee Khan, is entirely approved. Those two cases and the important question of reform, are the only points adverted to in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of the 8th May 1812 which remain to be adjusted. A reply to the Vizier's answers to that letter will be prepared with the least practicable delay. In the meanwhile you will avail yourself of any favourable opportunity of urging his Excellency on these questions, assuring him that you are authorised to declare that the sentiments expressed in the letter of the 8th of May have undergone no change whatever, but have, on the contrary, been strengthened and confirmed by further reflection, and that no circumstances can ever induce the British Government to relax in its exertions to introduce into his Excellency's administration those salutary reforms, of which the expediency and necessity can admit of no dispute, and which both Governments are bound to use every effort to accomplish, or to refrain from urging the necessity of rendering justice to Hoosein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee Khan.

To J. Adam, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. A daring robbery having been recently committed in the British cantonments, and another in the neighbourhood of the Residency, by persons actually in the service of his Excellency the Vizier or leagued with the officers of his police, I deemed it to be my positive duty to take advantage of this extraordinary occurrence, for the purpose of recalling and entreating the most serious attention of the Vizier to the establishment of the police of his metropolis, and to the conduct of the officers of his Adawlut.

2. I have accordingly addressed a letter on this subject to his Excellency, a copy and translation of which are enclosed, and in which a particular reference is made, as the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will be pleased to observe, to my long letter on the same subject under date the 7th of October 1811, already before the Government, and hitherto unanswered by the Vizier.

3. His Excellency has repeatedly assured me, that the subject of both those letters shall be taken into his early consideration, and that every practicable measure shall be adopted to give effect to the suggestions which I have offered; yet the frequency of robbery and of every other atrocious crime, in this profligate and unfortunate city, has of late apparently increased, and I see little prospect of its diminution, under the present system of the Government and unhappy disposition of its ruler.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 12th May 1813.)

A statement of every circumstance connected with the seizure of the thieves who broke into Lieutenant Munro's bungalow in the cantonments, and carried off the whole of that officer's property, and of the discovery of the greater part of the property in the houses of those offenders, has already, I have reason to believe, been submitted to your Excellency by the Cutwaul.

The peculiar circumstances attending this robbery must have excited your Excellency's indignation, as well as my surprise and concern. They afford a most salutary example of the state of the police of Lucknow, and demonstrate in an extraordinary manner the justice and accuracy of the remark which I had occasion to offer to your Excellency, in the commencement of my letter on police, dated the 18th of Rumzaun 1226 (7th October 1811), namely, the connivance at least, if not the association of your Excellency's officers and servants with the perpetrators of those crimes. Indeed, the audacity with which these offenders have constantly committed their depredations in the British cantonments and in the city, and the total absence of fear evinced by their retaining the stolen property in their houses, under the walls of your Excellency's palace, can be ascribed to no other cause than their being in fact your Excellency's servants, or leagued with the Cutwaul and his establishment, as well as with the Adawlut of Lucknow; and consequently the only effectual remedy for this evil must be a complete reform in the Adawlut, and in the present system of the police, in the manner so often suggested by your Excellency's well wisher and friend, both in writing and in earnest discourse.

I take this opportunity of transmitting to your Excellency a copy of the third or fourth petition which has been presented to me by Major Dalton's native woman, who was plundered of all her property and reduced to absolute beggary by the atrocious banditti of Lucknow; and I entreat that your Excellency will be pleased to adopt such measures as may lead to a speedy recovery of her property, and also

also of the remainder of Lieutenant Munro's, in order that it be restored to the owners.

Intelligence from the Chubootera.

Two Chobdars, accompanied by Rumzanee Passee, in the service of his Excellency the Vizier, delivered a shookha to the Cutwaul, directing him to send his Peadas immediately with the Passee.

Dhoomun Beg accordingly despatched Khajeh Mohummud and fifty Peadehs with the Passee, who, attended by Buldee Sing, sepoy, and Londuree bearer in Lieutenant Munro's service, conducted them to the neighbourhood of Gunga Sookool's tank, where they seized Bukhsh Oolla Khan and five other Meiwattees, servants of the Vizier, and brought them, with two boxes containing the greater part of the property of which Lieutenant Munro had been robbed, before the Cutwaul, who confined them all night in the Chubootera, and sent them to the Presence the next day.

To N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government.

Sir :

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. I have already had the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your despatch under date the 8th of May last, containing an English copy of a letter of the same date, addressed to his Excellency the Vizier by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, for the purpose of aiding my representations to his Excellency on a number of points of negotiation depending between the two States. The original letter in Persian was received on the 22d of June last, and was presented and read to the Vizier, after a suitable exordium on my part, on the morning of the 4th ultimo.

2. I have hitherto delayed to report to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, the details of my discussions with the Vizier on the principal points which are noticed in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, in the daily expectation of receiving a definitive answer to that letter, which his Excellency was occupied in preparing, and transmitted to me for despatch to the Presidency on the evening of the 26th instant.

3. The apparently happy result, though not the detail, of my arguments at a long conference with the Vizier on the morning of the 18th June last, has already been reported to you for his Lordship in Council's information.

4. On that occasion I recalled to his Excellency's mind the subjects of the many unpleasant and vexatious discussions which had occupied his time and my own, during the greatest part of the period of Lord Minto's absence from the Presidency; a period marked in its commencement by his Excellency's departure from his solemn and written engagements with a reference to the reform of his administration, and subsequently by a series of manifest opposition and disregard to every measure and suggestion recommended and submitted by me, on grounds of the most obvious justice and expedience, with a view to check the illegal and irregular proceedings of his Excellency's officers and subjects against the subjects and dependants of our Government, and to obtain redress of the manifold injuries and wrongs sustained by the latter from the former.

5. I asked his Excellency if it were possible for such a state of things to exist for any protracted period of time, between Governments so closely connected with each other as the Honourable Company's and that of Oude. Could his Excellency for a moment suppose, that all or any one of the various measures and suggestions which had been recommended and urged to him by me, and systematically opposed or disregarded during the period to which I had referred, was the offspring of my own judgment, uninstructed by the Government, was an object of merely personal interest to myself, and unlikely to obtain the sanction or support of the high authority which I represented? Was the silence of the Right Honourable the Governor-General on those points since his Lordship's return to the Government, his delay to remonstrate against proceedings which had an obvious tendency to subvert the principles of the alliance, and to dissolve the relations of amity subsisting between the two States, to be misconstrued into a sanction of such proceedings?

6. I stated my having reason to believe that it was a favourite topic of discourse among a few of his confidential servants, that the measures of reform in his Government, the suggestion of a provision for Hoossein Alee Khan, the reinstatement of Tubseep Alee Khan in the management of the Khoord Muhl, the redress of the grievances of Moonshce Alee Nuckee Khan, and a number of subordinate claims which had been urged to his Excellency by me, were matters of importance and interest chiefly to myself, and had received in some instances the sanction and support of the Government merely at my suggestion, but that this support would be carried only to a limited extent, in the language of friendly remonstrance, and that his Excellency had nothing to do but to persist in his opposition to the measures for a time, when the Government would certainly depart from them, since it had never been in the contemplation of Government to urge those demands to extremity, as was evident by its silence on the important question of reform, and on several others of importance, for so long a period of time.

7. That such was the pernicious doctrine held forth in his Excellency's Durbar, and that it had influenced his Excellency's proceedings, was apparent from these proceedings themselves, as well as confirmed in my belief by the various reports which had reached me; and that the unprecedented circumstance of a lapse of nearly two months without his having once visited the Residency, connected with his systematic disregard of every suggestion which I had conveyed to him, afforded sufficient proof of the unhappy and baneful effects of the pernicious doctrine described.

8. I now entreated his Excellency to banish for ever from his mind such baneful conclusions as those, and to remove from his confidence and favour the inspirers and encouragers of such sentiments. I assured him, on my honour and truth, that with a reference to every question of importance which had been agitated between his Excellency and me, the Government was fully and regularly apprized of my proceedings, nay, was in possession of every written document that had passed between us on those questions, and that I was further prepared to take official notice to the Government of his personal neglect and disregard for the high station which I occupied, when the necessity for this measure was happily superseded by his friendly visit to the Residency, which I had now come to acknowledge, with the cordial wish and the anxious expectation of its leading to a salutary and permanent change in his Excellency's disposition and conduct.

9. The Nawaub interrupted me here to make some apology for his remissness in visiting the Residency as usual, and conveyed some equivocal expressions of regret for our frequent difference of opinion on the subjects of discussion between us. He declared his having passed many restless nights in reflecting on the nature of those discussions, and in endeavouring to reconcile his opinions to mine. He avowed his conviction of the necessity, as well as a due sense of the obligations, by which he was bound to conform to the advice of our Government, and to comply with the suggestions of its representative, and professed a sincere desire to do so in every practicable case. He hinted, to my surprise, at his knowledge of measures in train at the Presidency for the support of my representations, and appealed, in earnest and pathetic terms, to my long and established friendship, friendship, for the moderate exercise of that support which he knew I must receive from the Government, declaring that the power was in my hands, that he was determined no longer to oppose my wishes or views, and using a number of conciliatory epithets and expressions which it is unnecessary here to repeat.

10. Taking advantage of the apparently happy frame of mind which induced those acknowledgments and expressions, I proceeded to discuss with his Excellency a few of the principal questions which required an immediate adjustment: and first, with a reference to Budjha Sing, I applied with complete and immediate success the reasoning adopted in your despatch under date the 8th of May last. His Excellency seemed peculiarly impressed by the conviction, which this reasoning afforded, of the inadequacy, or rather the injurious tendency, of the measures and proceedings adopted heretofore by himself, and of the right of the British Government to adopt more efficient measures with regard to the marauder Budjha Sing, and acquiesced with readiness and seeming cordiality in every suggestion which I offered. The ultimate result of my negotiation on this point, and on the similar question of marauders finding refuge in the province of Baraitch, is already in detail before the Government.

11. The second topic of our discussion was the extraordinary and aggravated nature and extent of the illegal exactions of duty which had been recently levied, under peculiar circumstances of violence and oppression, by his Excellency's Aumils and landholders on the banks of the Ganges and Gagra, from the merchants and traders of Futhaghur and Cawnpore, proceeding with their merchandize by water under the protection of the Honourable Company's passports, and without any intention of landing or disposing of it in this country. A sum of several thousand rupees had been levied by violence from those traders, whose boats had been detained for several weeks together at the gauths in his Excellency's dominions, and the restitution of this money, with the penalty, was now claimed in terms of the commercial treaty, as well as the adoption of effectual measures for precluding such irregularities in future. On this subject a written discussion of considerable length had taken place between his Excellency and me, and ample satisfaction on the question was now for the first time promised by his Excellency.

12. The next questions of discussion were the complaints of Gungapershaud, havildar, and Joorawun Sing, sepoy, in the Honourable Company's service, for outrages committed against their persons and property by an Aumil and Cutwaul in the service of the Vizier. The detail of my written remonstrances on those subjects, and the sentiments of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council regarding them, are already recorded on the proceedings of the Government. The measure of justice and redress originally demanded by me, and for a time so pertinaciously refused by the Vizier, who persisted in avowing and vindicating the outrageous conduct of his officers, was on this occasion promised by his Excellency, and has since been reluctantly granted.

13. I then proceeded to the question of the superintendence of the Khoord Muhl, and entreated his Excellency to review in a cool and dispassionate manner the arrangement which he had recently made, in direct violation of treaty, and in manifest opposition to the just rights and declared will of her Highness the Bhow Begum, as well as in disregard of my repeated and earnest advice. I begged him to consider the utter impossibility of the British Government's acquiescence in, far less its support of, an arrangement, in breach of a solemn obligation to which that Government was a guarantee. I admitted, for the sake of argument, that the ladies of the Khoord Muhl bore a nearer relation to his Excellency than to her Highness the Begum; that his Excellency had originally confirmed Tuhseen Alee Khan in the superintendence of the Muhl, in opposition to her Highness's will, or with merely her tacit consent; that the distribution of the stipends of the Muhl, received in the first instance from the Begum, had been made for a period of fourteen years by Tuhseen, under his Excellency's exclusive control; that the accounts of those stipends had been uniformly rendered to his Excellency, and that the balance or surplus of the distribution had been paid into his Excellency's treasury. The utmost extent of the plea which those circumstances, if admitted, could authorize, was that the Begum had wilfully delayed for a time the assertion of her just rights, and had acquiesced in in his Excellency's encroachments; not, surely, that her Highness's positive and unquestionable right under the treaty had been abrogated or lost by this delay. During all the period referred to, that is, from the confirmation of Tuhseen Alee Khan's appointment after his Excellency's accession to the Musnud, whether with or against the declared or tacit consent of her Highness the Begum, no innovation had hitherto taken place. Her Highness became reconciled to Tuhseen, or acquiesced in his Excellency's views with a reference to the appointment of that person. An innovation had now taken place, a direct infraction of the treaty had occurred, inasmuch as an utter stranger had been appointed to supersede Tuhseen, without reference to the Begum on the subject, and in opposition to her declared will. Against this innovation and infraction her Highness had thought proper to appeal to the Government which guaranteed the engagement. Could this appeal be declined? Could the British Government, without a positive breach of its own faith, refuse to listen to her Highness's remonstrance? and could his Excellency, under these circumstances, expect to maintain the arrangement which he had made, in defiance of my repeated and earnest caution against the consequences of so unprecedented a measure? Was it not better, more advisable, more conducive to his Excellency's reputation, to anticipate the consequences described, to supersede the necessity for a positive demand by our Government of his observance of the obligation which it guaranteed, by restoring Tuhseen to the office of Superintendent of the muhl, as a voluntary act of justice on his own part, which I was still prepared to acquiesce in, and thus to put an end to a discussion which had caused so much uneasiness to both? Would the comfort of the ladies of the muhl, for whom his Excellency had now professed so much regard, after appropriating for a series of years to himself a considerable portion of their subsistence, which the Begum declined to claim, be in any degree infringed by this measure? Would her Highness the Begum, under whose protection, in whose city, at whose door, those ladies had resided for a period of forty years, who had regularly paid their full allowance without deduction, and to whom in fact their reputation, honour, and good conduct, as the females of her husband's household, formed an object naturally of more importance and of greater interest than to his Excellency, or to any other person in the world, be so unmindful of her own dignity and reputation, as to treat those ladies with severity, and impel them to disorderly conduct? Would Tuhseen Alee Khan, the faithful servant of the State, to whose superintendence and control those ladies had been habituated for a period of equal duration, and with whose conduct they had constantly expressed their satisfaction in the strongest and most animated terms, when now in the last stages of his existence, while suffering under the displeasure of his sovereign unjustly, and surrounded by enemies and spies, be less mindful of his character and credit, less kind or attentive to the ancient objects of his attachment and regard, now aged and infirm like himself, than in the days of his more ample authority and power? Was there, in reality, any solid or even plausible objection to the measure, which justice and a due sense of my public duty induced me to recommend to his Excellency, and which the spirit and letter of an express obligation on his own part, guaranteed by the British Government, required? Again, I entreated his Excellency to consider in a dispassionate manner the tendency of all these remarks, and to hesitate ere he resolved to maintain an arrangement which could not be supported on any principle of justice or good faith, and consequently could never receive the sanction of the British Government.

14. His Excellency, after a little consideration, declared his acquiescence in my proposal, agreed to reinstate Tuhseen without delay, to announce his re-appointment as an act of impartial justice to the ladies of the muhl, and to confer a khelat on Tuhseen Alee Khan as a proof of his restoration to favour.

15. These measures have since been carried into effect; though, I must add, with extraordinary reluctance and in a most ungracious manner, through every stage of the proceeding. The ladies of the muhl have been taught to believe by Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan, and others, in the confidence and service of the Vizier, that the re-appointment of Tuhseen Alee Khan is a measure by no means of inclination on his part, and that their opposition to the authority of Tuhseen, and even of the Begum, will be considered as a proof of their attachment to his Excellency, lency, and may probably lead in the end to the subversion of the late appointment and the gratification of his Excellency's views. Opposition has accordingly been shewn on the part of a number of those ladies to the person appointed by Tuhseen, with the concurrence and approbation of the Begum, to receive and distribute at Fyzabad the stipends of the ladies of the khoord muhl; and that this opposition is secretly supported by intrigues carried on with his Excellency's sanction or by his desire, is not only my firm and decided opinion, but is publicly avowed and declared by the Begum, and by every other person acquainted in any degree with the circumstances of the recent transaction. His Excellency disavows it, of course; but his refusal to comply with my suggestions and those of the Begum, for putting a stop to the disorderly conduct of the ladies of the muhl, affords a proof beyond question or doubt of the inference which I have submitted. A number of those ladies have recently quitted Fyzabad in a most disgraceful manner, and are now on their way to Lucknow.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

16. The observations here made, and the facts on which they are founded, seem particularly worthy of notice, and are introduced in this despatch with the view of guarding against the impression which might otherwise be made, by the plausible but uncanlid statement contained in his Excellency's letter, with a reference to the superintendence of the khoord muhl. Translations of two letters from the Begum are transmitted with the same view.

17. Having disposed of, and finally concluded in a satisfactory manner, as I believed, the discussion of the question of the khoord muhl, I proceeded to represent the condition of her highness the younger Begum, and the apparently fixed resolution of this most respectable, unfortunate, and deeply injured personage, to depart from the city of Lucknow, and to seek that protection and comfort in the Honourable Company's territory, which she had reason to despair of enjoying in the capital or dominions of the Vizier, her brother and natural protector. His Excellency, as has been his uniform practice, disavowed in the strongest terms his intention of injuring the feelings or infringing the rights of the Begum, and retorted her complaints and accusations. My sentiments regarding the matter and manner of the unhappy disputes which have so long subsisted between his Excellency and the Begum, and which were always believed by my predecessors in office, and have recently been proved beyond a doubt, to be totally unsusceptible of adjustment or reconciliation, are already on the records of the Government, detailed in a number of my despatches, and especially in my letter to your address under date the 8th of October last.

18. His Excellency the Vizier, on the occasion now referred to, after listening with attention to an earnest appeal on my part in behalf of her Highness the Begum, made a proposal plausible in itself, but highly disingenuous, as it has since proved, on his part, and which he must have known to be totally futile at the time, namely, that her Highness, in the present justly irritated state of her mind, should pay him a friendly visit, or receive a visit from him; should consent to the renewal of a friendly intercourse between them, which was originally suspended by himself and by his own ungenerous conduct; that a reconciliation should take place, through the medium of my intercession, with her Highness; and that his Excellency's future proceedings towards her should be regulated by my advice.

19. Although I doubted the success of my mediation, the Vizier's proposal seemed so plausible, and the frame of mind and disposition under which it was made seemed so candid and sincere, that I resolved to undertake the task which he committed to me, and concluded the discussion of this question with a promise to make the attempt.

20. The last subject of discussion at my conference with his Excellency the Vizier, on the morning of the 18th of June, was the claim of Hoosein Alee Khan; and on this subject alone, of all the points which were agitated, his Excellency seemed totally inflexible. He disavowed his knowledge or belief of any provision having been ever made for the family of Hyder Beg Khan by the late Nawaab, Asuf-ood-Dowlah; denied the right of this family to any provision from himself; asserted his having made a declaration at the date of the Treaty of Cession, and subsequently to Lord Wellesley in person, of his inability to continue the pensions which had been granted by his predecessor, and the acquiescence of Lord Wellesley in this declaration, by reason of the division of his country. I replied to those arguments and assertions, by referring to the public records of his brother's Government, and to such of the public officers of that time as were still in existence, nay, to the testimony on oath, if required, of every old and respectable inhabitant of Lucknow, for proof, the most clear and satisfactory, of the original grant of the pension, and its regular payment until his Excellency's accession to the musnud. I submitted copies and extracts of the public records of this Government during the administration of Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan, authenticated by the seal of Mirza Jafer, who held the office of Bukhshee, or paymaster of the troops and household, during the whole of that administration, and containing detailed statements of the distribution of the sum of Rupees 8,535 5½ annas per mensem, as a pension to Akbur Alee Khan, Hoosein Alee Khan, and the other dependents of Hyder Beg. I assured his Excellency, that I had examined my own records in vain, with a view to trace the declaration to which he referred, at the date of the Treaty of Cession or at any subsequent period. I described the utter impossibility of the British Government, or its representatives, being induced, by any selfish or personal views, to sacrifice or compromise the rights of its ancient and faithful dependants. I stated the example of the stipends of a branch of the Royal Family of Delhi residing at Benares, from which the British Government had relieved his Excellency, by taking on itself the future payment of those stipends; and I referred it to his Excellency's candour to determine, whether or not the same Government could be capable of acquiescing in a declaration of the nature above described, without engaging at the same time, or resolving, to pay all the pensions in question. With a reference to his Excellency's ability or obligation to provide for the faithful servants and dependants of his brother's Government and his own, I maintained, that these could not have been affected in the smallest degree by the terms of the Treaty of Cession, which provided merely for His Excellency's relief from established military charges to be incurred by the Honourable Company, for the future defence of his dominions and support of his just authority; and I referred to the actual state of his treasury, to his own candour and sincerity, for his conviction of the truth of my persuasion, that his finances had yearly increased since the date of the Treaty of Cession, and that the clear revenue which he derived from his present possessions was greater, far greater, than he derived, or could have ever expected to derive, from his dominions, under the influence of the subsidiary alliance concluded with Lord Teignmouth by himself. To all the arguments which I adduced on this subject, and to every appeal which I offered to his justice, benevolence, and humanity, in behalf of Hoosein Alee Khan, his Excellency listened in silence, but continued immovable on the question; and ultimately yielded with reluctance his sanction merely to the sale of some old mansions, the property of the late Hyder Beg Khan, (which his Excellency had formerly attempted to appropriate to his own use), with the view of protracting the wretched existence of Hoosein Alee Khan and his numerous family for a time.

21. I took my leave of his Excellency at mid-day on the 18th June, after a conference of more than three hours, the general result of which will appear to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to have been satisfactory to a greater extent than was reported for his Lordship's information in my despatch of the 20th of June last; though I am sorry to have occasion to add, that his Excellency's subsequent proceedings have by no means been uniformly consistent with his professions and assurances on that day.

22. The Vizier did me the honour to breakfast with me on the morning of the 27th of June, and a conference took place on that occasion, when I remonstrated in mild and conciliatory terms against the delay which had occurred in the reinstatement of Tuhseen Alee Khan in his office of Superintendent of the khoord muhl, and which his Excellency disingenuously ascribed to his apprehension of disorders in the muhl, when this measure should be announced to the ladies. Being now in possession of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, I should have deemed it to be my duty to take this opportunity of presenting the letter to his Excellency, if I had not expected to to derive considerable advantage in the discussion of the more important question of reform, and of the right of investigation of the claims and demands of this Government to be enforced by our military power, which I was particularly instructed to assert, by the previous satisfactory adjustment of every subordinate question that had been agitated between his Excellency and me.

Consultations,

23. To those subordinate questions, accordingly, I restricted my discourse on this occasion; and, in the first place, with a reference to the khoord muhl, I declared to his Excellency my conviction, that the possibility of disorder among the ladies depended entirely and exclusively on their belief of its affording gratification to his mind. That the original and sole cause of the complaint of those ladies was the alleged misapplication or detention of a portion of the stipends of the muhl, uniformly received from the Begum, and paid as regularly by Tuhseen Alee Khan into his Excellency's treasury, by his orders. The allowance for the intercalary month, and the batta on Rukabee Rupees, if granted out of the surplus of those stipends, occasioned by casualties in the muhl, would put an end to every fear of disorder, and would be sufficient to reconcile the ladies to any arrangement which might be made for the future superintendence of the muhl, far more so to the restoration of Tuhseen, to whom they had uniformly professed the most sincere personal attachment, while remonstrating against the deductions from their allowance, and urging him to support this remonstrance. I entreated his Excellency to banish all such imaginary fears as this from his mind, to reconsider the purport of his obligation to her Highness the Begum under the guarantee of the British Government, and by complying with her just and moderate desire of the reinstatement of Tuhseen Alee Khan in his office, to anticipate and preclude her Highness's probable demand of the satisfaction of all her rights under the obligation in question, nay, of the repayment of the sums of money hitherto received by his Excellency as the surplus of the stipends of the khoord muhl, to be distributed among the survivors at her discretion. The Vizier seemed greatly impressed by this last observation on my part, and promised to summon Tuhseen Alee Khan to his presence on that or the following day, for the purpose of reinstating him in his office.

24. I now reminded his Excellency that his promises at our former conference, with a reference to the exaction of duties from the merchants or traders of Cawnpore, were still remaining to be fulfilled; and I informed him that more recent complaints of the violence and extortion of his officers and subjects, in the districts of Sandee and Belgram, had been received from the merchants and traders. Repeated assurances of the most ample satisfaction on this point, and of the redress of the grievances of Gungapershaud and Joorawun Sing, sepoys, were conveyed to me on this occasion by his Excellency; and on a retrospect of all the subordinate points which are noticed in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, one question only occurred to my recollection at this time, which had not already and recently been discussed, and in a manner adjusted between us.

25. The question alluded to was that of the redress of the grievances of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, the restoration of his hereditary rights possessions and privileges in the district of Sandee, of all which he had been most unjustly and violently deprived by the Aumil and others in that district, with his Excellency's sanction, or by his orders.

26. With a reference to this question I observed, that it might be considered, with justice, as a matter of more immediate and personal interest to myself, than any other subject of discussion that had arisen between his Excellency and me during the period of my residence at his Court. Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan had been my servant for more than fifteen years, and had uniformly during that period conducted himself so as to merit my approbation and regard. In former times, like every other landholder under the Government of Oude, he had been subjected occasionally to violence and oppression for a time, but had uniformly obtained either total or partial redress, through the intercession of former Residents, particularly of Mr. Middleton, during the Government of the late Nawab Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and of Mr. Lumsden, Colonel Scott, and Colonel Collins, since his Excellency's accession to the musnud. To those latter gentlemen lemen he had been known but through the medium of my recommendation ; yet their intercession, as in a just cause, had usually prevailed, and had uniformly served to maintain him in the possession of at least a considerable portion of those allowances privileges and rights, of which he was now entirely dispossessed, while in the confidential employment of the Government as being my principal Moonshee, and having charge of all the Persian records of my office. That it was true, I had long been restrained, by motives of personal delicacy, from urging the redress of the Moonshee's grievances to his Excellency, in such terms as a sense of public duty would have led me to use, and have enabled me to apply with success, in behalf of any other subject or dependant of the British Government, whose complaints might have come before me ; but that a knowledge of this circumstance, and a conviction of the justice of the Moonshee's claims and complaints in his Excellency's mind, should have naturally tended to the redress of the grievances stated, as soon as they were known to his Excellency ; and that, at all events, when the deficiency in my representations was so fully and so ably supplied by a direct communication from the Government, in the name of the Vice-President in Council, containing or accompanied by a detail of the obvious grounds of justice on which the redress of those grievances was claimed, it was difficult to account for any further delay in the satisfaction of the Moonshee's rights, unless indeed it were supposed that the situation of the claimant, as a servant of the British Government confidentially employed by me, had rendered him obnoxious to his Excellency's displeasure.

27. The Vizier most solemnly disavowed any ground of displeasure with the Moonshee ; professed his uniform readiness to consider and admit of his claims against the Government, in-as far as they were supported by sunnuds ; nay, without reference to the justice of his claims, to grant him a yearly allowance for nankar, as a mark of personal friendship for me, which had been frequently offered and rejected ; and with regard to his disputes with other subjects of the Government, to refer them for investigation to the Adawlut, which was the only tribunal that could decide on the merits of such questions or disputes.

28. I replied, that I had uniformly restricted my views in the Moonshee's behalf to such possessions in the district of Sandee as were clearly established to belong to him by proofs and sunnuds the most satisfactory and authentic that could be conceived. That for proof of his zemindary rights, and of his title to a share of the allowances and privileges of Chowdree and Canoongoe in the district of Sandee, in common with numerous other branches of his family, who were actually now in possession of their respective shares of those rights, the uninterrupted possession of his ancestors for a period of nearly two-hundred years, proceeding on a firmaun under the seal of the Emperor Shah Jehan, was surely more than sufficient. That the distribution of those rights, allowances, and privileges, among the various branches of the Moonshee's family at two successive periods, one of them antecedent to the authority of his Excellency's ancestors over Oude, and the particular shares allotted to the ancestors of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan and to himself, were authenticated and determined by original documents, the written acknowledgments of the parties to the distribution, against which no grounds of cavil could be stated. That for the particular share of the Moonshee's ancestor in a direct line, Seyyed Chiragh Alee, namely, the village of Tutha Nuggur rent free (subsequently exchanged for Muhwa Colie), and a yearly allowance in money of one thousand two hundred rupees (for which the village of Mohummud Nuggur Tiloween was afterwards substituted), he possessed original sunnuds, under the seals of the Nawabs Abdoola Khan and Azeez Khan, jagierdars of Sandee, before that district, with the province of Oude, came into the possession of Boorhan-ool-Moolk, his Excellency's ancestor ; and under those sunnuds, without renewal or objection, the possession of the Moonshee's ancestors proceeded till about the period of the demise of the late Nawaub Shuja-ood-Dowlah, when the whole race of the Seyyeds of Sandee were dispossessed of their rights for a time, through the influence of a Hindoo, who claimed those rights as a descendant of the ancient Zemindars in possession before the edict of Shah Jehan. That the rights of the Seyyeds had been restored to them shortly after the accession of Asuf-ood-Dowlah to the musnud ; and that immediately after this restoration, the title of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan had been recognized and confirmed in his own person, through the influence of Mr. Middleton, then Resident at this Court, as appeared by an authenticated copy of an order issued by Hyder Beg Khan to the Aumil of Sandee, by an original letter under the seal and signature of Mr. Middleton, addressed to the same Aumil, and by an original order from the Aumil of Sandee to his Naib. That subsequent confirmations, the most ample, of the title of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan to every right, possession, and privilege, which had been claimed by me in his behalf, were exhibited in three original mandates under the seal of the Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, addressed to the Aumils of Sandee, and in corresponding orders to those officers under the seal of the minister, Hyder Beg Khan, and of the British Resident at this Court, who was authorized and accustomed in those days to issue orders to the officers of this Government on every question of importance which came before him. That under those sunnuds the Moonshee's possession of all his rights was uniformly acknowledged, nay, supported and maintained by this Government and its officers, though occasionally and partially disturbed by his associates and opponents in Sandee, till the death of Almass Alee Khan, whose authority had been always exerted in support of the Moonshee's rights. That on occasions of partial usurpation or molestation by the Moonshee's associates in the zemindary, and in the rights of Chowdree and Canoongoe, the mediation of the Residents at this Court had been constantly offered, and admitted in his behalf, as was established by the records of my office, more especially in the time of Colonel Scott, when a mandate under his Excellency's seal, to the address of Almass Alee Khan, was obtained, directing that Aumil's support of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan in the maintenance of all his possessions.

29. For a further and more accurate detail of all the arguments which I had now stated to his Excellency, and for authenticated copies of all the sunnuds and other documents described, I referred his Excellency to my letters in his possession; and for the deliberate and impartial judgment of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, on the whole of the merits of the case, as explained in those letters, and his Excellency's answers to them, I referred to the Vice-President's letter under date the 29th of March 1811.

30. His Excellency disavowed his being in possession of any authenticated sunnuds to establish the Moonshee's rights, expressed the necessity of his receiving and taking time to examine and investigate the sunnuds for each particular claim before he should be required to admit it, renewed his offer of a yearly allowance to the Moonshee as nankar, with a view to my satisfaction, or as a proof of his friendship for me, and for the purpose of saving trouble. This offer I rejected of course, and entreated his Excellency to revise our correspondence on the subject of the Moonshee's claims, to peruse the copies of the sunnuds which were conveyed and referred to in that correspondence, and if a doubt existed in his mind regarding the authenticity of any one of the sunnuds, to require the original from me, and compare it with the copy in my presence, or with the view of saving him trouble, to depute a confidential servant, or appoint his minister to confer on the question with me, to examine the original sunnuds and collate them with the copies in his possession, or with new copies, which I engaged to prepare. His Excellency now seemed unwilling to continue the discussion of this question, complained of a violent head-ache, promised to take an early opportunity of revising the correspondence and sunnuds, and to communicate the result to me at our next conference, which was fixed for that day se'nnight, the 4th ultimo.

31. During the interval between this and my next conference with the Vizier, his Excellency seemed unnecessarily dilatory in the fulfilment of many of the promises which were made to me at our interview of the 18th of June; and my daily messages to his Excellency, having reference to the reinstatement of Tuhseen Alee Khan, to the redress of the grievances of Gungapershaud havildar, and Joorawun Sing sepoy, to the continued exaction of duties from the merchants and traders of Cawnpore, and a few other subordinate points, were answered by frivolous excuses, which indicated a disposition to evade the satisfactory adjustment of points that no longer admitted of discussion.

from Resident at
Lucknow.

32. To a message on the 29th of June, soliciting in earnest terms the immediate and final adjustment of those points, with a view to my reporting it to Government, in confirmation of the favourable report which I had made on the 20th of that month, by his Excellency's particular desire, I received an answer from his Excellency, importing that he was actually occupied in writing and issuing his orders to give effect to the assurances which he had made to me on all those subordinate points, and would convince me of the truth of this assertion at our next meeting, when he intended to make a particular and earnest request on his own part, to which he would entreat my most favourable attention.

33. Considering the import of this message to be nothing else than a subterfuge on the part of his Excellency, I determined to present the Governor-General's letter to him without any further delay, and to render the substance of that letter the ground-work of all my future discussions and arguments on the points to which it referred.

34. His Excellency listened with great attention to the contents of his Lordship's letter, which I read to him from a copy carried with me for that purpose, being aware of his inclination to evade the perusal of such letters in my presence. He interrupted me several times to comment on some passages of the letter, particularly that in which his supersession of Tuhseen Alee Khan in the superintendence of the khoord muhl is described as his appointment of a person of his own selection, to collect, as his Excellency professed to understand it in the Persian, or to receive, as in the English copy, the revenue of the jaidad, and to distribute it to the ladies of the muhl. He disavowed his ever having made such an appointment, declared that the Governor-General was misinformed; and boasting, as it were, of the advantage which the application of this particular word in his Lordship's letter afforded him, he added, that he could give a satisfactory reply to that and every other part of the letter.

35. I treated this absurdity, of course, as it deserved, and explained the meaning of the words in his Lordship's letter to be merely the supersession of Tuhseen Alee Khan by the appointment of another person to execute those duties, which he had performed with the consent and approbation of the Begum, namely, to receive the stipends from her Highness (not of course to collect them from the jaidad, which had never been the duty of the Nazir) and to distribute them to the ladies of the muhl; in short, the appointment of a Nazir or superintendent of the khoord muhl, contrary to the will of her Highness the Begum, whose exclusive control and authority over the muhl was expressly provided for by treaty, under the Honourable Company's guarantee.

36. His Excellency made no reply to the above explanation on my part, and waving any further discourse on the subject of the Governor-General's letter, he proceeded to convey to me his particular and earnest request, which to my astonishment, after solemnly disavowing its connection in any degree with the contents of the letter just read, he announced to be that of my assistance in obtaining the permission of the Government for his departure without delay on a pilgrimage. He declared that, on this condition, he would immediately do all that was required of him in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, and every thing which I might propose, but that otherwise he would do nothing till his answer to the letter should be prepared.

37. I had very considerable difficulty in commanding my countenance into no more than a smile on the occasion of a proposition so extremely puerile and absurd, though at the same time so characteristic of his Excellency. During the whole time of breakfast, in the highest possible spirits, and in a manner the most gracious towards me, he had been talking of his proposed amusements for the ensuing cold season, of horse-racing, and of his horses expected from England, exhibiting designs for new palaces and decorations of rooms, the execution of which had commenced, and the completion of which, if intended, must occupy and serve to amuse him for a period of several years; and thus did his Excellency, without a blush or the smallest hesitation in his expression, declare to me in a serious manner, calling God to witness his truth, that an immediate or early departure on a pilgrimage, a release from the cares and troubles of sovereignty, had had been for a considerable period of time the leading object of his desire, the principal purpose of his heart.

*Letter
Lucknow.*

38. My answer to the above declaration, in as far as it seems worthy of being recorded, was merely to the following effect. That his Excellency could not expect me to suppose him serious in harbouring or expressing such a design. That he had made use of similar expressions to me on one occasion before, shortly after my arrival at his Court, and that in consequence, as I believed, of my remonstrances against the measures of violence which were then meditated against Tuhseen Alee Khan, the unhappy object of his aversion, I should have added of his relentless and unmerited persecution, which he now seems resolved to continue till the death of this aged and faithful servant of his house. That I had ample reason to consider the proposal of a pilgrimage, or of his Excellency's quitting his Government, if it had ever been seriously made, as entirely abandoned by his Excellency; and that the renewal of it on this occasion could, in my judgment, have no other view than the evasion of a satisfactory answer to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter of the 28th of December 1810, and of the further purposes and objects of the letter which I had now read in his presence; but I added, that if his Excellency were really serious in this proposal, and should repeat his request to me at our next interview in a grave and dispassionate manner, I should be prepared with a satisfactory reply. I now took my leave of the Vizier; and the purport of his particular and earnest request on the morning of the 4th ultimo, though once slightly hinted at in a message through the channel of my Moonshee, has never been repeated in my presence.

39. My next conference with the Vizier was on the morning of the 18th ultimo, when his Excellency did me the honour to breakfast with me. During the interval between this and our former interview, Tuhseen Alee Khan had been twice admitted into the Presence, had nominated his deputy to proceed to Fyzabad for the purpose of taking charge of the khoord muhl, a letter had been prepared to announce his re-appointment, and the name of his deputy, to the ladies, and ultimately, after repeated remonstrances on my part, a khelat had been sent to the deputy, but in such a manner as to convince the Nazir, the ladies of the muhl, and every respectable inhabitant of Lucknow, as well as myself, that the measure of Tuhseen's reinstatement was by no means spontaneous on the part of his Excellency, and that its failure would be gratifying to his mind.

40. I submitted all these circumstances, and explained their obvious tendency, to the Vizier at our conference on the 18th ultimo. I predicted disorders in the muhl, and did not hesitate to pronounce that his Excellency was the only person responsible for those disorders. I submitted to him the reports of my news-writer in Fyzabad, from which it was clear and unquestionable that intrigues had already commenced, for the purpose of defeating an arrangement prescribed by the British Government, in strict observance of its own public faith, and which its power might be justly applied to enforce; and after entreating his Excellency to reflect on the nature of those observations, I remarked, that as he must now be much occupied in preparing his answer to the Governor-General's letter, I would not detain him any longer.

41. As his Excellency was taking leave of me, I reminded him, in a few words, of his promise to revise our correspondence on the subject of my Moonshee's claims, and he declared, to my astonishment, that on inquiring for those papers, he discovered that the death of a servant, to whom they were committed, had occasioned their being lost or mislaid. I instantly assured him in reply, though aware of the nature of this subterfuge from repeated experience on former occasions, with a reference to more important and original documents, that duplicates of all my letters, with authenticated copies of his own copies, and of the Moonshee's sunnuds, should be prepared and submitted without any delay. His Excellency reverted to his unreasonable and frivolous demand of all the original sunnuds to be inspected and examined at his leisure, and I repeated my former proposal on this subject without success.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

42. On the morning of the 28th ultimo I waited on his Excellency, with the view of endeavouring to gather from his conversation on the leading topics of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, the general tenor of the answer which he was occupied in framing to that letter, and taking advantage of any opportunity which might arise of enlarging on the arguments which it contained.

43. His Excellency, as usual on such occasions, was extremely guarded in his remarks with a reference to the Governor-General's letter. He acknowledged, generally, his conviction of the absolute necessity of a compliance with his Lordship's suggestions and advice, that he had no other friend nor protector in the world than his Lordship, no resource but in obedience to his will. He would offer a candid statement of all the circumstances and transactions referred to in his Lordship's letter, and submit the decision to his judgment. There were some points discussed in the letter which had been already satisfactorily adjusted in compliance with my desire; there were others which he would concede as far as possible; and with regard to some, in which his acquiescence was impossible without diminishing his consequence and power, he would state the grounds of that impossibility to his Lordship, and leave the questions to his Lordship to decide.

44. I requested his Excellency to inform me whether the grounds and arguments to which he now alluded had been already under discussion with me, or were suggested by more recent consideration. I submitted, that the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in framing his last letter to his Excellency, could not be supposed to have overlooked any part of the former discussions on the important question of reform, or on any of the subordinate questions and claims which had been agitated between his Excellency and me, and referred by me to the Government, in consequence of our difference in opinion. That the grounds of this difference in opinion, in his Excellency's language as well as mine, had been fully detailed in my despatches containing copies of the correspondence between us, and that, under such circumstances as these, it would obviously argue on the part of his Excellency a want of consideration for the dignity of the British Government, as well as of just deference to its counsels, if those counsels should again be evaded or opposed, by the same arguments and objections which had already been offered and repelled. That the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, to use the impressive language with which his Lordship's letter concluded, had "solicited nothing" from his Excellency but what justice, his own reputation, the prosperity of "his country, and the spirit of the subsisting alliance demanded," and that it behoved his Excellency to hesitate and reflect maturely, while framing his answer to that letter, on the nature of such requests and suggestions as those, and the probability at least, if not the certainty, of their being hereafter converted into demands, in the case of protracted refusal to comply with them, or of evasion, upon slight and frivolous grounds, that had already obtained ample consideration.

45. His Excellency listened with great attention, but made no reply to those remarks; and despairing of gaining an accurate knowledge of his intentions with a reference to any particular question by further general discourse, I renewed the discussion of a few of the subordinate points which still remained to be adjusted.

46. The measures suggested for the restitution of the sums of money exacted by his Excellency's officers and landholders from the merchants of Cawnpore and Futhaghur, though repeatedly and almost daily promised by his Excellency, had not yet been carried into effect, the redress of the grievances of Gungapershaud and Joorawun Sing remained to be accomplished, and the leave of absence of those persons had expired.

47. I now exhibited and read to his Excellency in Persian, from the original English in my hands, the substance of your despatch of the 25th of June last, having reference to a number of questions, and particularly to the two last above described, observing to his Excellency, that though furnished with the sentiments of the Government on the cases of those men, and with its positive instructions to insist on the most ample redress of their grievances, I was still disposed to acquiesce in the moderate degree of redress which was originally suggested by myself, and to receive that measure of compensation for the wrongs sustained by our sepoys, as a proof of his Excellency's disposition to comply with my own friendly advice, unconnected with the support which it had obtained from the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

48. The Vizier became visibly impressed with a conviction of the impropriety of his conduct and correspondence in regard to Gungapershaud and Joorawun Sing. He replied to me in these remarkable words: "I have acted unwisely, and I have suffered for it: forgive me, and what you desire shall be done." He has since performed his promise, though I am sorry to repeat, with reluctance, as is stated in a former paragraph of this despatch. A public officer of his Government has also proceeded, at my desire, attended by an armed force, and accompanied by an accredited agent on the part of the merchants and traders of Cawnpore, for the purpose of enforcing the restitution of the illegal exactions from those persons, and taking penal bonds from all the landholders on the banks of the Ganges and Gagra, to preclude future complaints.

49. I now submitted to his Excellency a letter received the day before from her Highness the younger Begum, in answer to a message which I had sent to her, announcing my intention of a visit. A translation of this letter is enclosed for the Right Honourable the Governor-General's perusal, and the contents of it clearly indicate what has since been more fully established, that her Highness's just resentment of the Vizier's unnatural conduct towards her had risen at length to a degree, which left little or no prospect of a cordial reconciliation between them. I suggested to his Excellency on this occasion, the propriety of some direct and unequivocal manifestation of his good will and liberality towards the Begum, such as the commutation of the supply of her kitchen for an allowance in ready money, with the view of assisting my endeavours to appease her.

50. This proposal his Excellency declined, on the ground of our former agreement, that an attempt at least to reconcile them to each other should precede his concession of her claims; and being determined to wait on her Highness at all events, in conformity with my promise to the Vizier, I waved the further discussion of this question till the result of my visit should be known.

I then reminded his Excellency, that a month had nearly elapsed since his receipt of the letter from the Governor-General, and that the delay of more than a year in replying to former letters should be atoned for, on the present occasion, by a speedy and satisfactory reply.

51. From the 28th ultimo until the 25th instant, I had no conference with the Vizier. His Excellency visited me on the 11th instant, but complained of a severe head-ache, and declined entering into conversation on business, assuring me, however, on this occasion, as he had regularly assured me in answer to my daily messages since our last conference, that his letter to the Governor-General was very nearly finished and should be sent to me in a few days. He further announced his intention, with the view of making some arrangement in behalf of Hoosein Alee Khan, to summon first that person, and afterwards Akbur Alee Khan into his presence, and to inform me of the result of his proceedings and further deliberation on this subject, which was, he added, the only point of his letter on which his mind was not entirely made up.

52. I have since understood from Hoosein Alee Khan, that his Excellency addressed him on the 12th instant in nearly the following words: "Your father was a zealous and faithful servant of this Government, and on a memorable occasion of disagreement between my brother and the English Government he proceeded in person to Calcutta, for the purpose of adjusting all the matters in dispute. An unpleasant discussion has now arisen between me and the English Government, and you are the sole cause of it. Is this becoming your condition, and the character and services of your father? What do you require from me? Can I settle your dispute with your brother? I shall send for and admonish him to-morrow. What more do you desire?"

53. Hoosein Alee Khan informs me that he submitted to his Excellency, in reply, the wretched condition to which he was reduced, partly by the obstinacy

Consultations,

from Resident at

of his brother, and partly by his Excellency's unkindness. That the claims of his father's posterity upon this Government were independent of their disputes with each other, and that the pension and jagier which they enjoyed for many years, indeed uniformly from the death of their father till his Excellency's accession to the musnud, were known to all ranks and descriptions of people at Lucknow.

54. His Excellency dismissed Hoosein Alee Khan immediately after hearing the above statement, and has not sent for him again. Akbur Alee Khan, who is still confined in the dowlut khana, and with other prisoners of this Government under charge of the Honourable Company's sepoy, though under his Excellency's exclusive authority and control, has been twice summoned into the Presence, but the result of his attendance is unknown to me.

55. On the morning of Tuesday the 25th instant I waited on his Excellency the Vizier, and had a long conference with his Excellency. Concluding, from his message of the preceding day, that his letter to the Governor-General must be prepared, I suggested the propriety of my being permitted to revise the draft of it with his Excellency before it should be copied for transmission, with the view of saving unnecessary trouble to both of us, by now offering such remarks for his consideration as the tenor of the draft might suggest to me, instead of submitting them eventually hereafter, in the form of a written remonstrance, when the letter should be finally prepared.

56. His Excellency declined producing the draft, on the grounds that it was not customary to do so, and that it would be time enough to submit my remarks when I found any thing in his letter to require them, and that, of course, it should be sent open for my perusal.

57. Being thus disappointed in my hope of ascertaining his Excellency's intention with regard to the question of reform and the other unadjusted points of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, I still considered it to be my duty, and as I termed it, an act of friendship for his Excellency, to take a final summary review of the discussions which had recently occurred on the subjects which remained to be adjusted. I used every argument that I could devise to induce his cordial acquiescence in the general system of reform, recommended by the Government for his adoption. I pointed out to him the fallacy of his apprehensions with regard to the complete success of the reform, if entered into with a sincere disposition, on his part, to promote the objects in view. I argued, with a reference not only to this question but to the establishment of courts of justice and police throughout Oude, the re-establishment of Tuhseen Alee Khan's authority over the Khoord Muhl, and universally to the successful execution and accomplishment of every just measure and view which could form an object of mutual interest to the two States, that two things only were required to give perfect efficiency to such measures; namely, a sincere and cordial disposition to promote them on the part of his Excellency, and the exertion of the British influence and power in aid of his Excellency's authority, justly applied and directed. That it was in vain, nay, absurd, to express or contemplate material difficulty or opposition in the progress of just measures to be thus undertaken and supported; and that the apprehended diminution of his Excellency's consequence or authority, by his acquiescence in the friendly advice of the British Government, or his application of the effectual support of its power, was equally imaginary and groundless: but that, whatever might be his Excellency's resolution on the important question of reform, his immediate admission of the alternative so frequently submitted by me and enforced by the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, was obviously as indispensable as it was just; and I considered it to be my duty to apprise his Excellency, once for all, that the unquestionable right of the British Government, which his Lordship had thus defined and established in his letter, could never, on any principle, nor by any evasion, be set aside.

58. I then recapitulated the grounds and arguments on which the claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan had been so strongly recommended to his Excellency's favourable consideration by the Honourable the Vice-President, the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and by myself, in several impressive letters, and at two recent conferences with his Excellency. I stated some additional arguments in behalf of Hoosein Alee Khan, arising out of information more recently obtained of his Excellency's promise to Lord Wellesley, during his Lordship's visit to Lucknow, regarding the future regular payment of all the pensions of this Government, and the liquidation of the arrears which were due; and, finally, I reminded his Excellency of the strong and remarkable words in the Governor-General's letter, with a reference to Hoosein Alee Khan: "It is impossible for me to cease from troubling your Excellency on this subject until," &c. It behoved his Excellency to deliberate on the tendency of those expressions while forming his resolution on this question.
and

59. With a reference to the superintendence of the Khoord Muhl, I submitted some letters from her Highness the Begum and papers of intelligence from my news-writer at Fyzabad; from which it was clearly established that the disgraceful and disorderly conduct of the ladies of the Muhl, if not expressly sanctioned by his Excellency, had at the least his gratification for its object; and I warned his Excellency that those statements would, of necessity, be forwarded to the Presidency, as a comment on any remarks which he might offer, of a tendency to subvert the arrangement that had been made in compliance with my advice.

60. With regard to the younger Begum, I expressed my sincere concern at her seemingly fixed and unalterable resolution of quitting his Excellency's country and avoiding a reconciliation with him. I apprized him of the day (the following Thursday) which had been fixed for my conference on this subject with her Highness, and promised to let him know the result; and after receiving an assurance from his Excellency, who had listened to me with attention for an hour, that he would meditate on all that I had said to him, and again refer to all his papers, more particularly to the record of his discussions with Lord Wellesley at Lucknow, before he finally transmitted his answer to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, I took my leave, with a well-grounded hope that the answer would be highly satisfactory on every question of importance to be treated in it.

61. On the evening of the following day (the 26th instant), I received his Excellency's letter to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which should have been forwarded without any delay, and would have superseded the necessity for this voluminous detail of my proceedings, if it had not fallen far short of my reasonable hopes and expectations on every important point of its contents.

62. I should have failed in the discharge of my duty, and should have ill repaid the confidence and support which his Lordship in Council has uniformly, and now more especially, been pleased to afford to me, if I had suffered such a letter as this to proceed to his Lordship's address without previously remonstrating on the contents of it. Although humble and submissive in its language and manner throughout, and expressive of an ultimate resolution to abide by his Lordship's decision on all the questions at issue, it is so full of the Vizier's characteristic deceit and evasion, so replete with erroneous statements of every fact and argument that it contains, as to exceed in all those characteristic qualities every former production of his Excellency's that has fallen under my observation.

63. I have written and transmitted a strong remonstrance to his Excellency, the effect of which remains to be seen, and I have requested an early communication of his wishes regarding the despatch or detention of his letter.

64. Before concluding this despatch, I must report, as I do with concern, for his Lordship in Council's information, the total failure of my endeavours to bring about a cordial, or indeed any degree of reconciliation between the Vizier and her Highness the younger Begum. I waited on her Highness by her appointment on the morning of the 27th instant, and remained in attendance and conversation with her for upwards of two hours. The detail of her manifold grievances, of the indignities, inhumanity, degradation, and contempt, which she had suffered at the hands of her brother, and seemed determined to suffer no longer, would require a volume to be stated. I perceived immediately, as indeed I had foreseen for several weeks, that the time for conciliation was past, that the irritation of her Highness's mind was too great to be appeased any longer by promises, or indeed by acts of kindness from the Vizier; that the miserable preparations for her journey from Lucknow, inadequate as they must prove to her comfort, were already actually made, and that her departure on that very day had been prevented exclusively by my visit. Every argument, every entreaty on my part, every assurance of future kindness and generous treatment on the part of her brother, were offered and repeated in vain. She exclaimed, that "she had been treated like a child, like a slave, by a person whom she was born to command; that death was sweet and desirable compared with such an existence; and what could I suppose her, under such circumstances, to apprehend from the fatigues or even dangers of a journey, more especially such a journey as this, from an enemy's country to a friend's. The British territory was the only friendly country left to her, the Governor-General her only friend and protector. To that country, to his Lordship, she would fly for an asylum; and unless I sought her immediate death, I could neither wish to prevent nor detain her." At length, with the greatest reluctance, and in a state of mind which I cannot attempt to describe, her Highness was induced by my repeated and earnest entreaty to limit her journey for the present to the principal town in her jagier, at the distance of twelve cosses from this city, and there she has promised to await the result of my communication to Government of her fixed and unalterable resolution to quit the capital and country of Oude, and to reside in the Honourable Company's dominions, at any station, and under any circumstances, which may be prescribed to her.

65. My subsequent proceedings and correspondence with her Highness and with the Vizier, regarding her, shall form the subject of a future despatch.

From Her Highness the Bhow Begum. (Received 10th Shabaun 1227, 19th August 1812.)

I have conformed to your advice regarding the Khoord Muhl, and on the representation of Mohummud Nughut I have issued the necessary instructions to my people, who are posted on all sides round the Khoord Muhl, and by guarding the avenues of ingress and egress have prevented the ladies from quitting it. The adoption of this measure greatly confounded them, and they were on the point of dropping further opposition, and submitting to authority, when letters from Mirza Shujat Alee Khan Behadur, brother of my son Saadut Alee Khan Behadur, and from other persons at Lucknow, of a nature tending to encourage them in their views, were received and excited a fresh disposition to commotion. Mirza Seraj-ud-deen Hyder Khan Behadur, Mirza Kumalood-deen Hyder Khan Behadur, and Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan Behadur, have likewise been instrumental in deceiving those ladies, and may be considered as principal agents in fomenting their discontents. To stop their allowance is therefore the only effectual remedy left, for until they experience the extremity of privation and distress, they will not relinquish their evil intentions. If my son, Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan Behadur, were to address a letter to the following effect to his brothers, Mirza Seraj-ud-deen Hyder Khan Behadur, Mirza Kumal-ud-Deen Hyder Khan Behadur, and Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan Behadur, there is no doubt that it would be completely successful; "Her Highness the Begum being equally your parent as she is mine, you must deport yourselves according to her will, and persuade the ladies of the Khoord Muhl to submit themselves to her authority and to return to their respective habitations, to receive their stipends month after month, and enjoy all the ease and comforts of their situation, and any opposition to the orders of her Highness will be not only ruinous to themselves, but will also draw down upon all of them my greatest displeasure, as well as that of her Highness." Let my son likewise address an arzdasht to me to this effect; that I am the sole sole controller of the Khoord Muhl, that I should use my own discretion in pacifying the members of it and inducing them to return to their houses, that if they oppose my authority it will be necessary for me to take effectual measures for obliging them to repair to their houses, and that he will assist me in those measures. When an arzdasht and letter of the foregoing purport shall be received from my son, and the ladies of the Khoord Muhl shall be made acquainted with the contents of them, they will immediately desist from all further noise and resistance, and will betake themselves to their respective apartments, without offering the smallest objection whatever.

Letter from
the Bhow Begum.

I have repeatedly written to you on the subject of the Khoord Muhl, that the ladies of it had lost all sense of shame, and would not, without punishment, be brought to submit to control. At your desire my people were employed, under my instructions, in carefully guarding the Khoord Muhl, when yesterday, two messengers reached them from Lucknow, with letters from their daughters to this effect: "That they must break through all restraints, and advance to Lucknow." Accordingly, this morning the ladies of the Khoord Muhl assembled in a tumultuous manner, aided by Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan and others, who drew their swords on the occasion, threatening violence to my people who guarded them, quitted the Muhl, and took the road to Rekabgunge. I formerly wrote, and desired you to obtain and despatch to me an arzdasht from my son, the Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan Behadur, to my address, with the view of putting a stop to these disorderly proceedings, and inducing those women to return quickly to their homes. As no arzdasht has been transmitted to me, it has no doubt impressed them with an opinion that their object could not be accomplished here, and, in consequence, they have to-day moved out to Rekabgunge, which is in the direct road to Lucknow.

I have heard that my son, Saadut Alee Khan Behadur, has assured those ladies, through his brother, Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan Behadur, that as long as they lived he was the sole controller of their affairs, and that no other person whatever could interfere with them. This, of course, has excited them to quit the Muhl and proceed to Lucknow.

Letter

My Vakeel, Nuringen Doss Pundit, has represented to me, that it was your intention to pay me a visit, and that you requested me to fix a day for the purpose. This pleasing intelligence has afforded me the greatest happiness and joy. Praise be to God, that what I most ardently desired and was long anxiously hoping for, namely, that the Almighty would bring about some cause to induce you to pay me a visit, is now about to come to pass, and that, too, by your own request. Come to me without hesitation and make me happy, that I may have an opportunity of describing to you some little portion of the manifold distresses which I suffer from the harshness and oppression of my brother, whose conduct has reduced me to a state in which death must be preferable to existence. When my brother ascended the musnud, I received a letter from the Governor-General, Sir John Shore, which gave me every reason to hope and expect that the remainder of my life would be free from trouble or distress of any kind; and, under this expectation, although I might have easily obtained from the Governor-General's friendship the most ample establishments for myself, distinct from those of my brother, yet considering our rights and interests to be the same, I did not consent to a separation, but on the contrary endeavoured to strengthen and increase the original ties of propinquity and friendship between us, by entering into new alliances. (The Begum's nephew is married to a daughter of the Vizier's, and his Excellency's third son to her niece.) Notwithstanding all which, my brother has uniformly treated me with the greatest contempt and disregard; so much so, that when his mother was indisposed, and I went to pay her a visit of friendly inquiry, forgetting all his former unkindness and harshness to myself, he happened to be there at the time, and on my arrival took no notice of me whatever, as if he could be ignorant of my arrival. I leave it to you to determine whether this was proper conduct or not. For myself, I was so much irritated and vexed at the time, that I made a vow of never meeting him in my life.

Every branch of my establishment has been done away: the property and possessions of my ancestors in Delhi have been usurped by him, and the lowest of his servants and minions have been taught to oppose and despise me.

During the residency of the late Colonel Scott, a favourite servant of mine was unjustly confined in the Chubootra by the Cutwaul, and his sontah, or badge, was hung up on the public road by way of contempt; and although I repeatedly remonstrated against this violence, no notice was taken of my complaint, till at length he was released by the Resident.

A piece of cultivated land on the bank of the River Goomtie, which belonged to my bazar, and half of the bazar itself, have been taken from me by my brother, and his officer of customs has recently ruined and driven away from my bazar every trader and shopkeeper who was attached to it. I have again and again stated all these circumstances to you, and you have exerted your utmost endeavours in my behalf, but no good effects have resulted from them.

You are well acquainted with the purchase of ground on the bank of the River Goomtie, which I made for the purpose of building on it, and the manner in which that purchase was frustrated. The whole of my jagier is going to ruin. The dispute between Sheikh Mocz-ood-Deen and Musaood remains unsettled.

But how long, and to what purpose, shall I trouble your patience with a detail of my sufferings and distresses, which have already filled hundreds of letters to your address. In short, the conduct of my brother has been such as to induce me to pray to God that I may never again see his face in this world, nor even at the resurrection; and, for the few days of my life which remain, I trust entirely to the friendship of the British Government for my protection from further degradation and disgrace, and for the reparation of all that I have suffered.

Enclosure in a letter from the Resident at Lucknow to the Persian Secretary to Government, dated the 5th, and received the 18th of September 1812.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, dated the 26th August 1812.

Enclosure in
Resident's Letter.

After expressing my desire for the pleasure of a personal meeting with your Lordship, which is the chief object of my wishes, I proceed to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter of the 8th of May last, replete with sentiments of friendship and regard, and stating that you had expected to receive answers to your letter of the 28th of December 1810, and to two letters from the Vice-President of the 29th of March and 12th of July 1811, the former on the subject of the claims of Moonshree Alee Nuckee Khan, and the latter in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan, son of the late Hyder Beg Khan. I have fully understood the contents of your Lordship's letter. The suspension and delay which has occurred in the transmission of an answer have been occasioned by the discussions which have taken place between me and Major Baillie. The objections which occurred to my mind during those discussions I stated to the Resident in writing. As those objections have not yet been removed by Major Baillie, and as the execution of the several matters of business which formed the subjects of discussion has consequently remained suspended, from motives of respect and consideration for your Lordship, which I am ever disposed and attentive to observe, I suspended the transmission of my reply to your Lordship's letter. An answer to the letters of the Vice-President was not written, for reasons which are contained in the present letter to your Lordship's address. Now that your Lordship has kindly called me to your recollection, and favoured me with your letter above acknowledged, I consider it to be an indispensable duty to transmit a reply to your Lordship, and I proceed accordingly to state what is necessary to be represented. Under every circumstance, my expectation from the chief of the British Government, and more especially from so kind a friend as your Lordship is, that, in the affairs of my Government, and in the dominions subject to me, as well as in all my concerns, my power and authority may daily be strengthened and increased, and that, in the spirit of the friendship and amity established of old between the two States, and which is conspicuous to all the world, no manner of loss, injury, detriment, or diminution may take place, and that counsel and advice, such as may be productive of salutary effects, may be afforded to me by the chiefs of the British Government, and more especially by your Lordship.

In your letter of the 28th of December 1810, your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that by the terms of the sixth article of the treaty of November 1801, I engaged to establish in my reserved dominions such a system of administration to be carried into effect by my own officers, as should be conducive to the prosperity of my subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants; and further, that with reference to this particular stipulation, the late Governor-General, Marquis Wellesley, in a paper which he delivered to me, under his seal and signature, in the year 1802, observed that I had engaged to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its Counsels in the establishment of an improved system of administration tration within the reserved dominions, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of those dominions, and with the usual exercise of my established authority, and so forth. What your Lordship has written, as above, is right and true, nor is there any denial on my part. The case is this: At a former period I was desirous of sending my son with a detachment of British troops for the settlement of my reserved dominions, and that, with the approbation of Major Baillie, the Resident, he might establish a system of administration in those dominions. When I consulted the Resident on this point, that gentleman clearly and explicitly signified his prohibition, saying that, in an affair of this kind, the nomination and deputation of the Sahibzadah (that is to say, my son) were not necessary: the establishment of a system of administration was therefore not carried into execution. Your Lordship will decide with justice, that in the introduction and establishment of a system of administration in my dominions, and in advising with the British Government on that subject, according to my engagements, I have not failed; and with respect to the system proposed by your Lordship in your letter above quoted, it was not carried into effect, in consequence of some doubts and objections which occurred to my mind. Those objections were repeatedly stated by me in writing to the Resident, and personally discussed between us. Conformably to the dictates of the friendship which I entertain for your Lordship, I now feel it to be an incumbent duty that I should of necessity state some of those objections for your consideration: they are as follows. Your Lordship, in your letter above quoted, has written, that "if the assessment of the lands throughout the country should be regulated by the real assets of the several districts, to be ascertained by actual investigation, and be fixed for a certain time, and if that assessment should be increased only in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the several districts which might be expected to arise from an approved system of administration," and so forth. The case is this: That without the actual measurement of the lands of the several mouzahs and villages of the country; and without ascertaining the particular quantity of cultivated lands and lands capable of cultivation, village by village, and the boundaries accurately defined; and unless the Canoongoes, Chowdries and Putwarries, give a detailed statement of all these particulars, and conceal nothing, and the Zemindars make no objection to the measurement of their lands, it appears to me that it will be difficult to ascertain the real assets of the several districts. With respect to the deputation of Ameens to ascertain all those particulars, apprehensions occur to me with regard to misconduct on their part, and to emigration and disgust on the part of the cultivators and renters, and to disorder and interruption in the receipt of the revenues, and to failure in the payment of balances in consequence of the introduction of a new system. All these objections will have been made known to your Lordship by the perusal of the letters which I addressed on this subject to the Resident.

With respect to Major Baillie's representation on the subject of establishing courts of Adawlut and police in the several districts of my dominions, under the management of officers of my Government, I am willing to appoint officers to those situations, conformably with the Resident's advice; but the accomplishment of these two objects cannot be contemplated, until every rebel and disaffected person in my territory shall have at once been effectually punished and rooted out of the country; until they find that if they seek an asylum in the British territories they will not be able to maintain themselves there; until they be utterly extirpated and the troops never desist from pursuing them; and, finally, until they be convinced that there is no place where they can establish themselves, secure from the troops of the Government. Thus, in the Honourable Company's dominions, whatever turbulent or disaffected person is proceeded against, until he is effectually punished he does not cease from his evil courses; moreover, in the police establishment of each individual place, where the people of the establishment, according to the system, can only be few in number, how will they be able to maintain order, when the turbulent and disaffected shall excite disturbance in large bodies?

With reference to your Lordship's observations regarding the right of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands on my part, and on the part of

of my Aumils, as the British troops may be required to support, and so forth : Whatever plan your Lordship may be pleased to adopt for the purpose of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands, so that my independent power and authority, as established by treaty, may not thereby be impaired, and my dignity and consequence be not diminished, in the slightest degree, in the eyes of my subjects, have the goodness to communicate it to me, and I am at your command. As I consider your Lordship to be my sincere and affectionate friend ; as all my prosperity, welfare, comfort, and happiness depend on your kindness and favour ; and as, excepting the members of the British Government, and your Lordship in particular, I know no protector and succourer ; if your Lordship, which God forbid, shall be dilatory and forgetful in affording me aid and assistance, and in taking a warm and active interest in the arrangement and settlement of my affairs, know for a certainty, that then, in such an event, the settlement and reform of my Government will be difficult to be accomplished by me.

Enclosure
in Resident's Letter.

Your Lordship has been pleased to observe, that "it may not have occurred to me that your Lordship's temporary absence from the Presidency produced no change in the authority of the Government, and so forth." My Lord, I, who am your well-wisher and firmly attached to you, entertain the same sentiments of regard and attachment towards you in all circumstances, and at all times, equally in your presence and absence, when you are near and when you are far distant. Such a thought my imagination is not capable of conceiving. You will be pleased to consider such a representation, by whomsoever it may have been made, to be entirely erroneous. On mature reflection, your Lordship will be satisfied that a charge of the nature alluded to cannot with justice be attached to me.

Your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that "I should no longer delay to exert my authority for the redress of the wrongs of which Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan has so much reason to complain." I never did, nor ever can entertain the idea of sacrificing the rights of any individual. The state of the case is this : The claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan are of two kinds ; one against my Government, and the other against his partners and associates. With respect to the first, let the Moonshee produce the original sunnuds, in succession, under the seal of my father, the late Nawaub Shuja-ood-Dowlah, and the seal of my brother, the late Nawaub Asoph-ood Dowlah, for the purpose of substantiating his claim and for my examination. In the event of his proving that the sources of provision stated in those sunnuds have been withheld during my Government, I will order them to be restored to him. With respect to the claims which he has against his partners, let him refer them to the court of Adawlut, where they will be decided according to the holy law. On this subject I have stated to your Lordship what appears fit to me ; but if it be not deemed so by your Lordship, be pleased to signify your wishes on this affair, that I may carry them into effect.

With reference to what your Lordship has written on the subject of the engagements concluded between her Highness the lady mother (Bhow Begum) and me, in the month of February 1798, according to my promise, I have never been guilty of any remission or neglect in shewing her every degree of respect and attention, and in doing every thing to promote her convenience and comfort ; but, on the part of the Begum, her Highness has observed a course of conduct the reverse of what is contained in the engagement, viz. that whenever requisite, she will afford me every degree of friendship and assistance in my affairs ; for on the occasion of Marquis Wellesley's coming to Lucknow, it having become necessary for me to pay a sum of money into the Company's Treasury, her Highness did not afford me any assistance whatever. As, by the engagement above mentioned, the British Government is the guarantee in all the affairs of the Begum, it becomes incumbent on it to devise means that the Begum may pay to me such a sum of money as may afford me assistance, and in future, whenever it may be requisite, she may befriend and assist me.

With reference to what your Lordship has written, "whether the appointment of a person of my own selection to collect the revenues of the jaidad.

Bengal Political
Communications,
2 July 1813.

Enclosure
in Resident's Letter.

" and distribute it to the ladies of the muhl," and so forth, I have to inform your Lordship, that I never appointed a person to collect the revenues of the jaidad, and I have not removed the person who is appointed on the part of the Begum to receive the revenues of the jaidad. The fact is this: the Begum received the revenues of the jaidad by the hands of an officer (Aumil) of her own nomination, and sent the amount of the stipends through Tusheen Alee Khan, who on my part held the office of Nazir of the Deorhees (muhls), when the distribution of the stipends was made, and every matter of business, great or small, relating to the Deorhees, which arose, was submitted by the Khan to me, and executed by him according to my orders. Your Lordship will be kindly pleased to ascertain that her Highness had no right of interference in the distribution of the stipends of the muhls, or in their reduction or augmentation, or in any other matters connected with the Deorhees, and that she never exercised any superintendence over the affairs of the Khoord Muhl. The receipts of the ladies of the muhl were always brought to me; and if any of the persons in the muhls died, the charge of the funeral ceremonies devolved upon me. Had the ladies of the muhl understood that the Begum was vested with the superintendence of the affairs of the muhl, when would they ever have agreed to it? This is evident from the clamour and disturbance, and other proceedings, which have now taken place. With respect to what is contained in the engagement, that the stipends of the muhls shall be paid by the hands of the Begum, it does not appear to me by that stipulation that the ladies of the muhl should be subject to the authority of the Begum. As the ladies of the muhl had some time ago excited clamour and disturbance beyond all bounds, and as Tusheen, after repeated requisitions on my part, failed to propose any scheme for composing the disturbances (and my sole object in making such requisitions was to prevent the disgrace and dishonour which have occurred and which continue to take place), I was compelled, for the sake of restoring order and tranquillity in the muhl, to remove Tusheen Alee Khan from his office of Nazir; for unless I had removed him, the ladies would not have been satisfied, and no means could have been conceived for settling the disturbance. Your Lordship will be pleased to judge, whether or not I am the master (Wauris) of the ladies of the muhl; whether or not the management of the muhl is part of my household concerns; whether or not the honour of the ladies of the muhl is identified with my honour; whether or not, by treaty, I ought to have a control over my household concerns; and whether it is proper and becoming in me to acquiesce in the dishonour and disgrace of those ladies. With respect to what your Lordship has written, that I do not admit the right of the British Government to interfere in questions of this nature, the case is this: In all questions in which the guarantee and interference of the British Government are stipulated in the treaty, how can I but admit such right? I never oppose or deny it; but my expectation from your Lordship's kindness and favour is, that in my household concerns, &c. as stipulated in the treaty, no interruption or diminution of my power and authority may be suffered to take place. At no period of time have I ever disturbed the peace and comfort of her Highness; whereas, on the other hand, her Highness frequently manifests a disregard of my interests. If I propose to her Highness to adopt measures for putting a stop to the acts of tyranny and oppression which are practised in her jagier, my representations are ineffectual, and not well received; nay, to many of them, however necessary, she does not deign to return an answer, or if she does, it is only to say that they are false, and she causes my people to be beaten, and she has established herself in the possession of many places exclusive of her jagier. Such being the case, your Lordship will judge whether her Highness or I be in fault.

With regard to what your Lordship has written respecting the severe distress and vexation experienced by her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and that you have received copies of the letter which the Resident addressed to me on the subject, under date the 8th of April, and of the letter from her Highness to the Resident, to which it refers, and that your Lordship concurs entirely in the sentiments expressed in the Resident's letter, and that your Lordship has directed the Resident to make an application to me on this subject, and to request I would redress the grievances of which the Begum has reason to complain, complain; the case is this: I am ready to redress any grievances of which the Begum can justly complain, and at no time have I ever concurred in, or permitted, any molestation or cause of grievance to her Highness, nor has ever such a thought entered, nor can it enter into my mind. On the other hand, however, several petty acts on the part of the Begum have occurred, which are a cause of grievance and distress to some poor people and a source of vexation to me: such, for example, as taking the property of another and not paying the price of it, or occupying a piece of ground without the consent of the owner. Nay, she even detained in her muhl the daughter of an injured Syyed, and when the father complained, she said that she had purchased the girl, nor would she attend to the representation of the Resident in his behalf. Your Lordship will be pleased to determine whether the sale of a mussulman is permitted by the Mahomedan law. Her Highness has also possessed herself of several places belonging to me. Be pleased to weigh this well; whether any one takes possession of the property of another without the consent of the proprietor. This also I have overlooked. Her Highness, moreover, has entirely given up the observance of those appearances and external forms which are suitable to the relation in which we stand to each other, of brother and sister; and when she is expostulated with on such points, she prepares to leave the city, and she frequently remarks, how can she remain a subject in a place where she possessed the rule; and with respect to settling the affairs of her jagier, on which she speaks to me, if any difficulty is made about sending my people there, she makes it a subject of complaint, and if my people are sent she accuses them of plunder. At the time when the Resident spoke to me on the subject of settling the business of the bazar attached to her deorhee, and of making an allowance in money in place of the khassa (victuals) which are furnished to her Highness from my household, I replied, "let her Highness observe the forms of respect which are due to my rank as sovereign, and the obligations of fraternal affection, and, on my part, to the extent of my ability, there shall be no failure in the manifestation of my duty towards her as one of the heads of the family, or in the cultivation of her good-will." Major Baillie asked me, if what he should submit to my consideration in this affair would be agreeable to me? I replied, certainly. At length it was settled, that Major Baillie should repair in person to her Highness's deorhee and reason and expostulate. In the end, however, the Resident did not repair in person to the Begum. Your Lordship will be pleased to deliberate maturely, whether any or what improper request has been made by me, and what cause of grievance to her Highness has arisen on my part. Her Highness will not consent to a reconciliation; nay, she declares that she has made a solemn vow to heaven never to see such a one's face, meaning me. Your Lordship will be pleased to judge whether it is her Highness who does not listen to the representation of the Resident, or whether it is I. It is my wish that her Highness should, in all matters, pay regard to what is due to me as the sovereign and as a brother, and that I, on my part, should promote her satisfaction and render her service. Further than this, whatever your Lordship shall desire, have the goodness to signify your pleasure to me, that I, who seek your satisfaction, may conform to it accordingly.

With reference to what your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that "you have to regret the uniform disposition on my part to mark with my displeasure all those who are entitled to the protection and favour of the British Government, and to exhibit the inefficacy of its counsels on points affecting the honour and interests of my Government," I have to observe, that as I consider my prosperity and welfare to depend on the augmentation of the ties of friendship and union, and on the consolidation of the foundations of unanimity and concord with the British Government, and on the favour and kindness of your Lordship, which hitherto have happily increased from day to day; and as I deem attention to the interests, and consideration for those who have a title to the protection of the British Government to be conducive to the increase of my own reputation, how is it possible that I should mark such persons with my displeasure? If your Lordship had been kindly pleased to apprise me of the names and conditions of the persons alluded to, I should have entered into the particulars. How is it possible that I should turn away from the counsel and suggestions of the British

British Government after discussion and explanation, or that I should act contrary thereto? At every time and every moment, I have acted, and continue to act, in conformity to the counsel and advice of the British Government and the Resident; but, with respect to a matter of business, the accomplishment of which does not appear to me to be practicable, and on which for my proper understanding of it discussions take place, your Lordship will yourself be pleased to judge how my judgment can be satisfied with respect to it, or the accomplishment of it can be contemplated.

With respect to what your Lordship has written on the subject of my exerting my authority to restrain or punish my officers and Zemindars, who afford protection and assistance to robbers and marauders, and to withhold them from the exaction of duties on merchandize in boats passing up and down, in violation of treaty, I assure your Lordship, that conformably to your wishes I have always been, and continue to be, ready and disposed to adopt measures for that purpose; nor have I ever been neglectful or remiss in that respect. Accordingly, the seizure of the marauder, Budjha Sing, has always been, and is an object of my attention. If a copy of the letter from Major Baillie to my address, dated the 14th of Rubbee-oos-sanee 1227 (27th April 1812, A.D.), in reply to my letter of the preceding day, in which Major Baillie expresses his approbation of the measures pursued by me in this affair and his intention of transmitting it to your Lordship, that you might be apprized of the care and pains which I had taken to effect the seizure of the marauder in question, had been received by your Lordship before the despatch of your Lordship's letter, I am satisfied that you would not have had to express your regret and concern with respect to this point. The most positive orders and injunctions are at all times issued by me to the Aumils on this subject; and what power have my Aumils and Zemindars to act contrary to my orders, and to aid and assist robbers and marauders? As it is not the practice of robbers and marauders, with reference to their own evil deeds, to fix their residence permanently in any one place, their detection and seizure must be attended with extreme trouble and difficulty. Thus, on the 6th of April last, Captain Macpherson proceeded with a detachment of British troops, with the utmost secrecy and caution, to the village of Jheona, in my dominions, and surrounded it; but after great and diligent search after Budjha Sing, was unable to find him. On the 4th of Jemadec-oos-sanee (14th June 1812, A.D.), several English officers stationed at Bheclaghaut set out with a body of horse and telingas (infantry) to surprise a band of robbers at Mulpoor, near Unree, a dependency of Pertaubghur, when after long and diligent search they succeeded in apprehending only one person, named Sheo Dut: none of the other robbers and marauders could be found. Adverting, therefore, to the nature and habits of those who lead a predatory life, I am persuaded that your Lordship will not impute the want of success in apprehending and punishing them to any deficiency of exertion or zeal on the part of the Aumils. Your Lordship will also be pleased to reflect, that disaffected persons and others, who have left my territories and taken up their residence within the Company's dominions, from whence, when opportunity offers, they make incursions into my country for the purpose of plunder, escape being apprehended and punished, notwithstanding the orders of the Resident, and the most active exertions of the Magistrates of the districts. With regard to the exaction of duties on merchandize, I have at all times prohibited, and continue to prohibit such practices; and your Lordship will be apprized, by the Resident's communication, of the measures which I have lately adopted for that purpose.

On the subject of the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, son of Hyder Beg Khan, your Lordship has written that you have little to add to the just and forcible observations contained in the Vice-President's letter to my address of the 12th July 1811. The state of the case is this: His Excellency the Vice-President wrote to me on the subject of compelling Akbur Alee Khan to make over to his brother, Hoosein Alee Khan, his just share of their family property, and of restoring a certain allowance for the support of the latter. I have no knowledge whatever of the grant of the allowance alluded to, or of the correspondence of that period. At a former time, when Hoosein Alee Khan rented from my Government the lands of Sundeela and Mulleehabad, on his being turned out of those lands he paid the balances due to my Government, partly by borrowing money money from the late Almas Alee Khan, and partly by raising it in whatever manner he could; but he never stated any claim of right to an allowance, nor did his elder brother, Akbur Alee Khan, make any claim. When the late Colonel Scott was Resident at my Court, no mention was ever made of the allowance alluded to; and at the time of Lord Teignmouth's visit to Lucknow, when the treaty was concluded between the two Governments, on which occasion the stipends of many persons were confirmed, and of some augmented, and all points of business were settled and adjusted, I heard nothing of the allowance in question. In like manner, not a word was said about it in Lord Wellesley's time, and no mention was made of it during the negotiation of the treaty. On various occasions I have accommodated Hoosein Alee Khan with loans of money on his application for that purpose; sometimes of my own accord, at other times at the instance of the Resident; but if the Khan had had any knowledge of the provision in question, he would have made an application to me for its restoration. I must be excused, therefore, in not having granted that allowance. With respect to giving Hoosein Alee Khan his share of the family property, his brother, Akbur Alee Khan, is still confined under a guard of British Troops, and Hoosein Alee Khan may take it from his brother in whatever manner he can; or let him point out where his father's property is, that it may be given to him. The Resident having some time since repeatedly requested my permission for Hoosein Alee Khan's taking possession of some gardens and houses belonging to his late father, Hyder Beg Khan, I signified my consent, and the Khan is accordingly bent on digging and selling them, without fixing or specifying what his share is. As I am ready and willing to adopt any measures by which Hoosein Alee Khan may obtain his just share of the property, whatever your Lordship shall be pleased to dictate with respect to causing Akbur Alee Khan to give up his brother's share, I will act accordingly. As I swerve not from the path of compliance with your Lordship's wishes, if besides this there be any thing else which your Lordship is desirous of being done for Hoosein Alee Khan, I am ready to do it to the extent of my ability.

Enclosure
in Resident's Letter.

As my ease, comfort, security, tranquillity, my power and authority in the regulation and administration of the affairs of my country, and the welfare and prosperity of my Government all depend on the favour and kindness of your Lordship, I entertain a confident persuasion, that by your kind care and attention the foundations of my Government will daily be more and more strengthened and consolidated. The execution and accomplishment of all matters connected with my Government, the interests of which are identified with those of the British Government, entirely depend on the favour and regard with which your Lordship may be pleased to consider them. If your Lordship will be graciously pleased to consider me to be entirely at your disposal, and, abstaining from all discussions, will kindly devote your time and attention to the promotion of my dignity and authority, all points will be happily arranged and accomplished. The sole wish of my heart is, that being enabled by your Lordship's kindness and favour to pass the few days which may remain to me of this precarious existence in the possession of honour, dignity, authority, and affluence, I may employ myself in expressing my sense of gratitude and obligation to your Lordship; for in this transitory world I have no kind friend or protector to succour and assist me, save yourself. But should any question be agitated, God forbid that I should think it proper to dispute a single point of what your Lordship may propose; nor will I ever do so. My hope and expectations are, that your Lordship, in the spirit of sincere and cordial friendship and affection, will watch over my interests at all times, and never for a moment be neglectful of them.

May the days of your Lordship's prosperity and happiness be perpetual.

Letter from
the Bhow Begum.

From Her Highness the Bhow Begum. (Received the 18th September 1812.)

The charge of the khoord muhl of the late Nawaub, Shuja-ood-Dowlah, has long been attached to my household, in conformity to the treaty under the signature of the late Governor-General, Sir John Shore, and the office of Nazir to that muhl was held on my part by Tuhseen Alee Khan. The persons composing the muhl, having lately become hostile to Tuhseen Alee Khan and having suspended his duty, made an application to his Excellency the Vizier for another Nazir. His Excellency accordingly sent an eunuch, called Nusseem, to undertake that duty; but as I did not approve of his nomination, I requested that he might be removed. With this request his Excellency ostensibly complied, while in his heart he was meditating a design of a different nature. Nusseem having been removed, Mohummud Nukhut, an eunuch, was appointed by me to act as deputy on the part of Mohummud Tuhseen, to superintend the muhl and to distribute the stipends. The ladies of the muhl, instigated by the sons of the late Nawaub, Shuja-ood-Dowlah, who are the children of these women (many of them residing with their mothers in the muhl, and several of them at Lucknow), and acting with the secret concurrence and by the suggestion of his Excellency, refused to accept their stipends from Tuhseen Alee Khan, or to acknowledge him as Nazir, without any fault on his part or that of his deputy, and for several days excited clamour and disturbance. On that occasion I addressed a letter to the Resident, and requested that he would procure letters to be written by his Excellency, one to the ladies of the muhl for the purpose of composing the disturbances, and of inducing them to submit to the authority of my people in the management of the affairs of the muhl, and one to my address on the same subject. The Resident communicated my letter to his Excellency, but every argument was ineffectual, and his Excellency openly disregarded what I had written: and according to what he had in view, all the persons composing the muhl, male and female, raising a great clamour and disturbance, suddenly came out of the muhl and proceeded to Lucknow. This occurrence has given me much pain. As the English gentlemen, and more especially your Lordship, are at all times cordially disposed to promote the interest and welfare of this Government, I now request that your Lordship will be pleased to issue instructions on the subject to Major Baillie, directing him to remonstrate with his Excellency, and, procuring the removal of all the evil advisers and instigators of these disturbances, to restore order in a suitable manner in the affairs of the muhl, and to continue Tuhseen Alee Khan in the office of Nazir, as he is an ancient servant of our house, and is fully acquainted with all the duties attached to that situation; for much danger to the interests of the muhl is to be apprehended, should a Nazir be nominated at the will of the Begums.

I trust that your Lordship will issue positive instructions on this point to Major Baillie, so that these disturbances may be settled and tranquillity be restored.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of those portions of my despatch of the 31st ultimo, which have reference to the disorderly conduct of the ladies of the khoord muhl of Fyzabad, instigated and encouraged unquestionably by the proceedings of his Excellency the Vizier, it is now my duty to report to you, for the further information of the Government, that a considerable number of those ladies have actually arrived at Lucknow in a most disreputable and disorderly manner, and have taken up their residence in the Emambara.

2. I have, however, the best reason to believe, that many of those misguided women have already repented of their proceedings, and are disposed to open a negotiation with their ancient and faithful Nazir, Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan, for the purpose of submitting to his authority and returning peaceably to Fyzabad.

3. I

3. I have instructed Tuhseen Alee Khan to take every possible advantage of the disposition which has thus been evinced on the part of these ladies ; and though the result of their negotiation with Tuhseen, on their future conduct, in any respect, be of no other importance in my mind, than as it may reflect additional dishonour on themselves and their advisers, or tend to the recovery in some degree, of the character which they have lost, I deem it to be highly probable that I shall soon have the satisfaction of reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, their peaceable return to Fyzabad, and submission to the authority of the Nazir.

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 1st instant, having reference to the departure of her Highness the younger Begum from Lucknow, I transmit to you, for the notice of the Government, the enclosed translations of letters which have since passed between her Highness and me. A translation of the Vizier's letter to her Highness, which is frequently referred to in these documents, is also transmitted by this despatch.

2. It has occurred to me to suggest for consideration, the possibility of the success of a negotiation with his Excellency the Vizier and with the Begum, for her Highness's permanent residence in her jagier, under arrangements for her security and comfort, to be made at the charge of this Government ; and if the measure of her Highness's future residence in any part of the Vizier's dominions be deemed preferable to her receiving an asylum within the Honourable Company's territory, it might be advisable that this measure be proposed to the Begum by the Right Honourable the Governor-General directly, in his Lordship's answer to the letter which her Highness is now framing to his address.

Letter

Lucknow.

The manner and contents of the Vizier's letter to your Highness, which I transmitted by a confidential messenger last night, were such, notwithstanding his Excellency's delay in thus addressing your Highness, as when combined with the unequivocal assurances of friendship and support which were conveyed to you by me, seemed to my own judgment to constitute a solid ground for the request which my messenger was instructed to submit to you, namely, that of your suspending your departure for a few days at the least, and maturely deliberating on the contents of his Excellency the Vizier's letter.

Your Highness was accordingly pleased to express your compliance with my request, and to promise remaining until Thursday ; and having never hitherto had the smallest reason to doubt your Highness's good faith or sincerity, I relied with confidence on your promise, and was preparing to address you in writing on the subject of your brother's assurances in his letter of last night, when, to my infinite concern and surprise, your Vakeel announced your departure this morning to Pertaubgunge, in disregard or forgetfulness of your promise.

If your Highness were not fully convinced of the sincerity of my uniform professions of attachment and regard ; if you had not constantly expressed your implicit reliance on my friendship ; if your Highness had not had reason to be convinced that my object was less to detain you in Lucknow than to provide for your happiness and comfort, wherever your future residence might be fixed, I might have conjectured some reasonable pretext for this hasty and injudicious proceeding.

But

But I will not presume to insinuate a reproach, in the present justly irritated state of your Highness's mind, which I deplore with every sentiment and feeling that the most cordial friendship can excite.

That your brother, his Excellency the Vizier, sincerely repents of his former conduct towards you, that he laments your departure from his capital and is firmly resolved to promote your comfort in future, seems to me to be a reasonable inference from the tenor of his letter to your address. I have already, in person, conveyed to you the nature of his assurances to me, and I have, in a manner, become bound to your Highness for his Excellency's fulfilment of those assurances.

If your Highness will be graciously pleased to consider these assurances for the future as some degree of atonement for the past, to bury the past in oblivion, and to return to your palace in Lucknow, it will afford me the most genuine satisfaction to attend on your Highness at Pertaubgunge, to renew and confirm those assurances in person, and to conduct you, with every mark of respect for your high rank, to Lucknow, where your Highness may with confidence expect every possible degree of comfort and happiness during the remainder of your valuable life, which I pray to Almighty God to prolong.

But if my earnest and repeated entreaty on this point be unavailing, and no circumstances will induce your highness to resume your residence in Lucknow, I must, in this case, remind you of your solemn and positive promise to remain for a time in your jagier, till I receive and communicate to your Highness the answer to my reference to the Government; and further, I must caution your Highness against the inevitably disagreeable consequences of any future injudicious haste. A precipitate retreat from the jagier, like your Highness's departure of this morning, would unquestionably be highly displeasing to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, who, like me, has your Highness's prosperity and happiness at heart.

To the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa. (Written the 2d September 1812.)

I cannot express to your Highness the extent of the uneasiness and concern which I feel, by reason of your departure from this city to encounter all the inconveniences of a journey, under circumstances of inadequate preparation, while your quitting your country and home, under any circumstances whatever, would necessarily fill me with apprehension. I am naturally still more alarmed, on learning the inadequate number of the party who have accompanied your Highness on this journey for the protection of your person and property. As a consideration for your Highness's dignity, and the security of your person and property, have ever been matters of interest to the British Government, and particularly to me, I have deemed it proper to appoint a company of Sepoys, under the command of a British officer, to attend your Highness as an honorary guard, during the period of your absence from the capital.

Your Highness will be pleased to give directions to some of the servants of your household to choose a proper place for the officer and company to encamp on, and to conduct them to it on the officer's approach.

In pursuance of the intentions which I expressed to you in person, I yesterday communicated to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in such terms as your Highness must approve, the intelligence of your departure from this city with a design to take up your residence within the territory of the Honourable Company; and I entertain hopes that, in the course of twenty or thirty days, I shall receive a decisive answer on the subject. Until the expiration of that period, I trust, whatever may happen, that your Highness will continue to reside in your jagier, in expectation of an answer from the Government. This advice is dictated, you may be sure, by a cordial desire for your advantage, and I beg that your Highness will conform to it. I shall await with anxiety the receipt of your reply to this, as well as to my former letter, in order that the officer and company may march from hence to Pertaubgunge.
I beg

From her Highness the younger Begum. (Received the 28th Shabaun 1227, 4th September 1812.)

Letter
from the Begum.

I have received your two letters of the 23d instant, one brought to me by a Chobdar, the other by a Shooter Suwar, and understood all the particulars which they convey.

I acknowledge the justness of your observation, in taxing me with a breach of my word and expressing your surprise on the occasion. The sorrow which I myself feel in consequence of this breach of my promise (a thing which never happened to me before) is not to be eradicated from my breast. But, under the influence of vexation and despair, what could I do? Immediately on receiving the letter from my brother, the fear of his approach and conversation set fire to the fuel of patience; and however sincerely desirous I was, and am, to evince my compliance with any suggestion of yours, which in no instance whatever I have hitherto disregarded, yet, by his tyranny and oppression, being reduced to the last extremity of forbearance, when human nature could endure no more, and it became impossible, under the disgrace I suffered, to prolong existence in this seat of tyranny, I lost all command of myself; and when, with the view to save appearances, by attending to the message which you communicated to me through Moonshee Ameer Hyder, I proposed putting off for a day or two (until Thursday) my departure, the agitation of my heart, like the convulsions attending the separation of soul and body, was incapable of control; and it is my firm persuasion, that if I had not then left Lucknow, the bird of immortality would have escaped from the cage of existence. Under these circumstances, I trust, my conduct will stand excused. If you reflect on the many atrocious and undisguised acts of tyranny and oppression committed against me by my brother himself, and by his unworthy servants under the sanction of his authority, as they have been repeatedly represented to you and to your predecessors in office, and applying them to yourself, consider the case with impartiality, you will confess that I have borne them with every possible degree of patience, and that if you had yourself felt but a portion of my sufferings, you would have at once broken the bonds of restraint, and have obeyed the first impulse of your feelings. In this state of mind, you will admit that the tendency of my brother's remark to me, that he is ignorant of the cause of my distress, is to renew my pain by throwing salt on the old wound. The inferior rank of others is no concern of mine, neither do I wish to impose notions of my own consequence on any one, but the sharp pointed steel of his pen has inflicted a still deeper wound in his remark, that his grief at my departure is occasioned chiefly by the distress to which it will expose my person, and the scandal it may create among those who are ignorant of the true state of circumstances; for which reason he advises me to drop my intention, and to accept of his future services. The degree of my brother's discernment is perhaps exalted beyond the capacity of ordinary minds, and he thus found out the true cause of my vexation and desire to depart, to be no more than the melancholy and morbid state of my mind, or perhaps something much worse and more disgraceful to my reputation. To inform the ignorant of the real state of circumstances, has therefore become incumbent on me; and with regard to his promises of future service, their nature is clearly proved by the experience of past events, which are known to all. During his residence at Benares, the arzees he addressed to me, containing offers and promises of services, are still in my possession. The fulfilment of those offers and promises has already satiated me with life; what more can remain to be done by him? But even this insincere offer, you may be assured, has been made only at your desire; for, of himself, he could never be disposed to drop the former domineering tone of authority. Although the pains inflicted by the oppressions of my brother have long been insupportable, yet God is my witness, that I have never mentioned them to you without pain, lest the knowledge of them should give you uneasiness; it being the necessary effect of reciprocal friendship to create participation in the sufferings of a friend; and my repeated experience of your zealous representations in my behalf, founded on the consideration due to my rank, and to the friendship subsisting between the late Vizier and the British Government, left me no room to doubt of your friendship. But it was evident that you had no power to accomplish any thing in my behalf, and that sympathy and the dictates of a feeling heart were all that you could oppose to the cruel tyranny of my brother. Yet your sympathy is, perhaps, the only cause under God which has preserved me from the guilt of suicide; and my obligations to you, on this account alone, are such as I can never repay. The proper return to you, on my part, for all your kind concern about me, was certainly that you should derive pleasure from my communications, instead of my proving always the source of trouble to you by the relations of my distress. I feel, on this account, the deepest regret. It was never certainly my wish to cause the least uneasiness to you, who have shewn such respect for my rank and my feelings; but my conduct has been influenced exclusively by the tyranny which I have experienced from my brother, and on this ground I claim your forgiveness. One other request and I have done. The compassion which you feel for me demands that you desist from urging a dying person, as I am, on the subject of a return to Lucknow, and that you consider the bare mention of my return, like the relapse of a mortal disease, to be the signal of immediate destruction. I purpose shortly, please God, after recovering a little from the pressure of the afflictions by which I am attacked, to write an account of my condition to the Right Honourable the Governor-General; firmly hoping that as his Lordship is informed of the real state of circumstances, both from your communication and my own former letters, he will consider the oppressions I suffer with all the favour due to the former friendship of the late Vizier, and to the exalted rank of the blessed martyr, my father, the Nawaub Vizier Eatomad-ood-Dowlah Kummer-ood-Deen Khan, and rescue me from further disgrace. From the wisdom and justice of the English, by which they are distinguished by heaven, and from his Lordship, renowned for every human excellence as well as for exalted rank and station, I shall expect with confidence a favourable answer to my letter, and that his Lordship, well aware that to express a wish for my return to the city must be the same as his pronouncing my death, will abstain from any mention of it in his letter. I accede, however, to your desire of my remaining where I am for twenty or thirty days, and beg you will not entertain the least doubt of my adhering to my word. If, agreeably to my hopes, within the period here mentioned I should experience the kind protection of your Government, it will be consonant to its wisdom and justice, otherwise, "When the soul, unconscious of guilt, is prepared for eternity, it is of no consequence whether it meet death on a throne or on the ground."

I have had the pleasure of receiving your friendly letter, expressing the concern which you felt at my departure, and informing me that you had appointed a company of Sepoys, under the command of an English officer, as a guard for my protection. This communication imparted vigour to both my body and mind. The anxiety and regret which you tell me you felt in consequence of my departure from the city prove the excess of your friendship. It is natural that the sentiments of friendship in the minds of the worthy and benevolent, should at first sight, and until the circumstances be maturely considered, create the anxiety which you describe; and as Almighty God has distinguished the English nation above all others by an abundant share of the qualities of virtue and benevolence, such feelings must be expected from them in a still more particular degree. The fatigues and distresses of the journey may be as great great as you suppose; but when compared with the distresses I have suffered, from the oppression and the tyranny of my brother, they are no more than a grain of mustard-seed compared with the mountain of Alburz. From this, in fact, you may conceive what I have suffered, that I quit my native country and my home without any preparations for my comfort, and consider this banishment but light, when compared with the evils which I quit. But now, in a particular degree, when your kind assistance has provided me with the means of protection, as well as other proofs of your respect, my cares and apprehensions with regard to the journey are banished, nor can any thing further occur to distress or to irritate my mind. Be assured that wherever I go, my mind and my tongue will be employed in contemplating and declaring your virtues, and the obligations which your friendship has imposed on me.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have recently heard, with extreme grief and concern, that your Highness entertains the design of quitting this city. As your Highness is one of the heads of our family, and none of the heads of our family has ever hitherto formed such a design, I lament that your Highness should have formed such a resolution, and should expose yourself to the hardships of a journey.

It is obvious that, wherever you go, the governor and princes only of that country, to whom your elevated rank may be known, can treat you with the proper attention: whereas, in this country you are known to all, and every description of the people must respect you.

Your quitting this city is altogether improper and unbecoming. Such an occurrence has never happened before. Your Highness's residence here is an honour and an ornament to the city, as well as a source of pleasure and happiness to me. I am totally ignorant of the cause of your displeasure; and, at all events, your departure can tend to no other purpose than my grief and concern, from a contemplation of the distresses to which it must expose you, and the discredit which must be attached to it by those who are unacquainted with the circumstances of the case.

On all these grounds, I request your Highness to desist from this design, and to relinquish your hasty resolution. I am ready to serve you in every possible way; and if you agree to this proposal of mine, I shall attend you, and repeat those assurances in person. What can I say more?

1. His Excellency the Vizier has this instant transmitted to me a letter to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the subject of which is limited to the question of the superintendence of the Khoord Muhl, and the departure of her Highness, the younger Begum, from Lucknow. A separate reply to the other points of the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency, under date the 8th of May last, is promised, after a further discussion of those points between his Excellency and me.

2. The

Bengal Political
Consultations,
2 July 1813.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

2. The tenor of my letter to your address, under date the 31st ultimo, appears to my own judgment to supersede the necessity for any remarks on the statements or documents which are conveyed by the Vizier in his letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

3. With a reference to the recent clamour and disorderly conduct of the ladies of the Khoord Muhl, his Excellency's statements and the letters of those ladies, containing complaints against Tuhseen Alee Khan, are so entirely and so satisfactorily refuted by the nature of the clamour itself, and the character of Tuhseen, in the first place, by his Excellency's former letter to the ladies in answer to their complaints against the Nazir, and by the uniform conduct and written declarations of those ladies themselves, with regard to Tuhseen Alee Khan, (until instigated to their present proceedings by his Excellency's secret advice,) as well as further by the daily reports of my news-writer at Fyzabad, and by the remonstrances of her Highness the Bhow Begum, that it seems to me to be a waste of time to enlarge on the manifest inaccuracy and perverseness of the facts and arguments, by which his Excellency would still attempt to evade the provisions of his obligation to the Begum, under the Honourable Company's guarantee.

4. I transmit copies and translations of three letters from the principal ladies of the muhi, and bearing the seals of a still greater number of them, which were written to Tuhseen Alee Khan a few months before his supersession, and have been submitted by me to the Vizier, in the hope of convincing his Excellency of the absurdity of any attempt to represent the present clamours of these ladies as the dictates of their own free will. In addition to those documents, I shall transmit to the Persian Department a number of reports from my news-writer at Fyzabad, and other original documents in Persian, which it is impossible now to translate with the view of their forming numbers of this despatch.

5. It is worthy of particular remark, that the character and conduct of those women of the khoord muhi, who are the chief instigators of the others in their present disorderly proceedings, have ever been disreputable in the extreme; that they have frequently, on former occasions, during the government of the late Nawaub, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and since his Excellency the present Vizier's accession to the musnud, been known to quit their habitations without any adequate cause; and that their disgraceful conduct on this occasion is different from their former practices, merely in as far as it has been produced and encouraged by the Vizier's advice and support, which are now no longer a secret, the whole of their letters and complaints being known to be drafted in his presence, or by persons appointed by his Excellency for the purpose of guiding their proceedings. A number of the most respectable women of the muhi, who are still residing at Fyzabad in submission to the will of the Begum, are perfectly satisfied with the reinstatement of their ancient and faithful Nazir.

6. With regard to the remaining complaints which are stated in his Excellency's letter against her Highness the Bhow Begum (a number of those in his former letter have been withdrawn), the only one which seems worthy of notice is that of her Highness's declining to come forward with pecuniary aid to his Excellency, at the time of Lord Wellesley's visit to Lucknow. It does not appear from my records, nor from any information before me, that a request of pecuniary aid from her Highness was ever made by the Vizier; but, at all events, it seems a singular instance of her Highness's breach of the obligation referred to by his Excellency, which is evidently an obligation on his own part alone, and involves no specific stipulation on the part of the Begum, that her Highness should have refused to supply his Excellency with money under any emergency whatever.

7. With a reference to his Excellency's complaints against her Highness the younger Begum, impartial justice compels me to declare that they are, for the most part, totally groundless, as has been established beyond a doubt, in documents already before the Government, or forming a part of the records of my office, which it appeared to me to be superfluous to translate.

8. The Begum did certainly, on one occasion, authorize her servants to take possession of a very small portion of the vacant and ruinous buildings adjacent to

Consultations,

from Resident at

to her residence, with the view chiefly of repairing them to prevent accidents to her servants, and eventually of converting them to the increase of her own inadequate accommodation. The Vizier objected to and opposed this trifling encroachment in a harsh and ungenerous manner, and her Highness relinquished it by my advice. The opportunity of inspecting her Highness's habitation afforded to me at my recent visit, was sufficient to prove to me its total inadequacy to her comfort, and the illiberality, in this respect, of his Excellency's conduct towards her Highness.

9. Her Highness's purchase or forcible possession of land, or other property, without paying the full price of it, is an accusation the most erroneous and perverse. Her Highness was in terms of purchase of a small spot of ground contiguous to her residence, on the bank of the Goomtie, with the view of building a house on it. The Zemindar or proprietor (nominally in this country) of the ground had agreed to sell it to her Highness for a moderate sum, and the Vizier, or his servants by his orders, prevented the conclusion of the bargain, and instigated a false complaint on the part of the Zemindar, who refused ultimately to part with his ground, and her Highness relinquished her intention.

10. Of a similar nature is the complaint of her detaining the child of a Syyed by force as a slave, in opposition to the will of its parents. A long correspondence on this subject took place between his Excellency the Vizier, her Highness the Begum, and me, which is referred to in one or two, if I mistake not, of my former despatches to your address.

11. In the progress of this correspondence it was proved, that her Highness (as is the universal custom of this country) observing accidentally a helpless female infant, the offspring of indigent parents, who possessed not the means of its support, had adopted the child as her own, had entertained the mother as a servant to nurse it, and had given a sum of money to the father for his support; that the child grew up under the Begum's care, was treated with maternal kindness, and repaid that kindness in such a manner as to create maternal affection in the heart of the Begum, who had ultimately resolved to bestow the young woman in marriage on some deserving dependant of her own. The father, a worthless person, taking advantage of her Highness's growing fondness for his daughter, repeated and increased his pecuniary demands against the Begum, to a degree which excited her indignation, and he then complained to the Adawlut of the forcible detention of his daughter as a slave. This complaint, encouraged certainly, if not instigated by the Vizier, was referred to me by his Excellency, and by me submitted to the Begum for redress.

12. Her Highness, injudiciously, at first combined her right of purchase from the father (which, by the way, is universally recognized and admitted in this country) with the title of a parent by adoption proceeding on the father's consent; and this plea, when repeatedly opposed by the Vizier, I deemed it to be my duty to reject, and her Highness reluctantly abandoned it, in compliance with my decision. She further expressed her resolution to give up the child if I required it, declaring at the same time, that she considered the infant as her own, and that their separation would overwhelm her with grief. I now entreated his Excellency to accede to her Highness's wishes, and to admit of her compromising the complaint by satisfying the worthless father of her adoptive child or protégée.

13. In this manner above a year and a half ago I was enabled to settle, as I believed, to the satisfaction of all the parties, a most unpleasant and vexatious dispute, which forms the subject of the principal complaint that is now adduced by his Excellency against the unfortunate widow of his brother, the descendant of ancestors by far more illustrious than his own.

14. Any further comment on the tenor of his Excellency's letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General were manifestly an unprofitable encroachment on his Lordship's valuable time.

Letters from the

Khoord Muhl.

From Doolhun Begum, and seven other Ladies of the Khoord Muhl to Tuhseen Alee Khan. (No date.)

We have heard that Hoshmund Alee Khan, the faithless villain, is about to be appointed our darogha, which God forbid !

We were never happy under this person, and food and drink are unlawful to us since the intelligence of his appointment arrived : our lives and honour are at stake. When we refused to submit to the Begum we were perfectly satisfied with you, whom we consider as the light of our eyes ; our life and honour are still with you. If this intelligence, which God forbid, should be confirmed, we swear by the Holy Imams, that we will proceed bareheaded to Golab Baree (Shooja-ood-Dowlah's tomb), and that no consideration on earth, even a lac of rupees per mensem, will induce us to submit to such an arrangement. At your hands, and with you, beggary, nay starvation, will be agreeable to us. We will proceed with you to Kerbelaw. Reproach us not hereafter for what may happen. We have given you timely information : if you forsake us and relinquish your office, we will no longer retain our lives. Consider a little written on this subject as a great deal. In the time of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, when Hoshmund was our darogha, the Nawaub ordered twenty thousand rupees for us, and that villain appropriated the whole to himself. When we taxed him with this conduct he gave us his bond for the sum, and we hold his bond to this day : so great a thief is Hoshmund.

At length we have received your letter and understood the whole of its contents. The intelligence of your returning health has delighted our hearts. May God preserve you a hundred and thirty years in health and happiness, for the sake of Mohummud and his posterity.

You write, that we know nothing of the Hindee calculation of time. That is very true ; but we know that our stipends were originally fixed on the 13th of the month of Mohurrum, and that this is the proper account. Our friend, you will take care that the account be fairly adjusted. You know better than we do. If you possessed the power, we are sensible that you would give each of us separately thousands of rupees, and that we should no longer be plagued by our creditors. God knows, and is our witness, that we love you more than our nearest relations. If we urge you on the subject of our claims and accounts, it is because all our dependence is on you, and to whom else could we apply ? But your pleasure is all that we wish for. We agree to take one month at your desire, notwithstanding the distress which it will occasion. On the 13th of Ramzaun four months were due to us, and the fifth is now in its progress ; we are, therefore, distressed beyond measure. Send in two months from Lucknow, and order a month to be paid to us here, to relieve us in some degree. Our friend, two circumstances distress us particularly : first, that in the time of the late Nawaub we received only five or six months in the year, and that now twelve months are paid to us, yet we suffer reproach from incumbrance in a greater degree than formerly ; secondly, that you should threaten to relinquish your office : let the pen of the writer never convey such a remark to us again. Inform us of the day of your bathing, that the vows which we have made may be performed. Send an answer to this letter immediately. If you give us up, then where are we, where this muhl, where the city of Fyzabad ? In such an event we must seek the plains of Kerbelaw ! Of this truth be assured.

The intelligence of your having bathed on your recovery has been a cause of delight to our hearts. We had long by day and by night prostrated ourselves before God to solicit this blessing, that you might be preserved over our heads, whose honour and happiness depend on you.

Letter from the Ladies of the Khoord Muhl.

You complain that Behroze has been occupied for two months in explaining matters to us, and that we refused to receive his explanation: you have also written, that we seemed in secret to wish for your removal, and if so, that we should plainly speak out. This is all a mistake upon your part. While we live, we wish for no person but you, and can never consent to your removal: banish, therefore, this erroneous conception from your mind. Do with us whatever you please; send us only three months allowance on the expiration of the month of Ramzaun. We never complained of your deducting one or two months from our allowance; we stated merely, that the intercalary month had been stopped, and that thus, in three years, a month's allowance had been lost to us. May God preserve his Excellency and you. We trust that hereafter we shall receive sicca rupees, and be indebted for this addition to your kindness. We say nothing for the present year; but next year it is our intention to insist on the payment of our allowance in siccas, and of this we inform you beforehand.

It seems that you have written to Doolhun Begum to explain all matters to us, and to endeavour to satisfy our minds. To what purpose was this? Is she greater than we are, that we should attend to her explanations? If we be satisfied, we must be satisfied by you; if dissatisfied, to you express our dissatisfaction. We are all here on a level, and there is no one greater than another: of this truth be assured. Doolhun Begum is the daughter of Alee Beg; but who is she, that she should cause us to understand? This is all an erroneous conception. Our understandings are equal to hers, and we act from our own judgment, without reference to her or any other.

Sir:

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have the honour of transmitting to you a letter received from his Excellency the Vizier, to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which is referred to in my despatch of this date to the Chief Secretary to Government. A Persian copy of a letter which I deemed it to be my duty to address to his Excellency the Vizier on the subject of his letter to the Governor-General, and copies of several papers of intelligence and other documents having reference to the superintendence of the Khoord Muhl, (which it has been found impracticable to translate), are also transmitted by this despatch, with a view to convey the most ample and satisfactory information regarding every point that is stated in his Excellency's letter, without any unnecessary delay.

Letter
from the Vizier.

After expressing my desire for the pleasure of a personal meeting with your Lordship, which is the chief object of my wishes, I proceed to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter of the 8th of May last, replete with sentiments of friendship and regard, the contents of which I have fully understood. Having written an answer to the points contained in your Lordship's letter, I sent my reply to Major Baillie, and after a discussion of some of its contents,
it

it will shortly be transmitted to your Lordship. Some strange occurrences having lately taken place here, namely, the departure of the ladies of the muhls from Fyzabad, and their arrival at Lucknow in a state of the utmost wretchedness, distraction, and misery, the departure of her Highness the Bhabee Begum (Shums-oon-Nissa) in the most ungracious manner from this city towards her own jagier, and her ordering her Khassburdars and other attendants to march with their matchlocks lighted, and ready to fire at any one who should offer to stop them, I consider it to be my duty to state the real circumstances for your Lordship's information. The affair of the ladies of the muhls is this: Some time ago letters having been repeatedly addressed to me by these ladies, and they having come out of their muhls and excited clamour and disturbance, and it appearing certain to me from the contents of their letters that they were in the highest degree dissatisfied with Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan, and that they would shortly proceed to bring dishonour and disgrace upon themselves, I repeatedly called upon Tuhseen Alee Khan to propose some measure which would have the effect of composing those clamours and disturbances. The Khan proposed nothing but measures of severity and menaces, such as I could not employ, and which would have been injurious to my reputation, and would have provoked the Begums to put an end to their lives. I saw no other expedient but that of appointing some other person as Nazir in the room of Tuhseen Alee Khan. Being thus without remedy, I nominated Mohummud Nusseem Alee Khan, on the recommendation of Afreen Alee Khan, and that person accordingly proceeded thither, and pacified and appeased all the ladies of the muhls; and all these ladies, well-pleased, returned into the muhls, and desisted from further clamour and disturbance. In the interval, Major Baillie made a representation to me, for the purpose of restoring Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office of Nazir. I replied that I was ready to restore him, but that the Khan must first propose a plan which should have the effect of putting an end to the clamours and disturbances of the Begums, and of inducing them not to come out of the muhls, a proceeding which would be attended with dishonour and disgrace. Major Baillie spoke to the Khan: the Khan did not suggest any plan. On this account I was deliberating about his re-appointment, when your Lordship's letter arrived. Major Baillie took that opportunity to make a second representation to me on the subject of restoring the Khan to the office of Nazir and giving him an honorary dress. I sent an honorary dress to the Khan, and gave him in charge a letter to the ladies of the muhls. The Khan gave the honorary dress to Nukhut, Khaujeh Sera (eunuch), and deputed him to Fyzabad. The ladies of the muhls, immediately on hearing the intelligence of Nukhut's receiving an honorary dress, came out of the muhls and raised a greater clamour and disturbance than before. Afterwards letters were brought to me from those ladies, stating the circumstances of their distress and the hardships and misery of their situation, and complaining of Nukhut, the deputy of Tuhseen Alee Khan. Out of a regard to the representations of Major Baillie I returned no answer, and many of their letters which came to me I sent to him. When no attention was paid by any one to their situation, the ladies of the muhls, submitting to undergo the fatigue and difficulties of travelling, some on foot, and some in carriages of various descriptions, came to Lucknow in a miserable and wretched plight, without tents or awnings. The enclosed copies of eight letters from them, and of a statement transmitted to me by my brother, Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan, who accompanied them on their journey from Fyzabad, will afford your Lordship detailed information respecting their situation. Disgrace and dishonour, such as never before sullied our reputation, have now been brought on my house, and the circumstances have become notorious to all the world. In requiring the Khan to propose a plan to me, as before alluded to, the sole object, which from the first I had in view, was to prevent the disgrace and degradation which have now occurred, and which will continue to take place. Had the Khan thought of a plan, this misfortune and disgrace would not have come to pass.

With reference to what your Lordship has written on the subject of the engagement concluded between her Highness the Lady-mother (Bhow Begum) and me, in the month of February 1798, according to my promise, I have never been guilty of any remissness or neglect in shewing her every degree of respect and attention, and in doing every thing to promote her convenience and comfort: but, on the part of the Begum, the reverse of what is contained in the engagement, viz., that, whenever requisite, she will afford me every degree of friendship and assistance in my affairs, has taken place; for on the occasion of Marquess Wellesley's coming to Lucknow, it having become necessary for me to pay a sum of money into the Company's treasury, her Highness did not afford me any assistance whatever. As by the engagement abovementioned, the British Government is the guarantee of all the affairs of the Begum, it becomes incumbent on it to devise means that the Begum may pay to me such a sum of money as may afford me assistance; and that in future, whenever it may be requisite, she may manifest her friendship and afford me assistance.
and

Letter
from the Vizier.

With reference to what your Lordship has written, "whether the appointment of a person of my own selection to collect the revenue of the jaidad and dis-tribute it to the ladies of the muhl," and so forth, I have to inform your Lordship, I never appointed a person to collect the revenues of the jaidad. I have not removed the person who is appointed on the part of the Begum to receive the revenues of the jaidad. The fact is this: The Begum received the revenues of the jaidad by the hands of an officer (Aumil) of her own nomination, and sent the amount of the stipends through Tuhseen Alee Khan, who on my part held the office of Nazir of the deorhees; when the distribution of the stipends was made, and every matter of business, great or small, relating to the deorhees, which arose, was submitted by the Khan to me, and executed by him according to my orders. Your Lordship will be kindly pleased to ascertain, that her Highness had no right of interference in the distribution of the stipends of the muhls, or in their reduction or augmentation, or in any other matters connected with the deorhees, and that she never exercised any superintendence over the affairs of the Khoord Muhl. The receipts of the ladies of the muhl were always brought; and if any of the persons in the muhls died, the charge of the funeral ceremonies devolved upon me. Had the ladies of the muhl understood that the Begum was vested with the superintendence of the affairs of the muhl, they would never have agreed to it. This is evident from the clamour and disturbance and other proceedings which have now taken place. With respect to what is contained in the engagement, that the stipends of the muhls shall be paid by the hands of the Begum, it does not appear to me that, by that stipulation, the ladies of the muhls shall be subject to the authority of the Begum. Your Lordship will be pleased to judge whether or not I am the master (wauris) of the ladies of the muhl; whether or not the management of the muhls is a part of my household concerns; whether or not the honour of the ladies of the muhl is identified with my honour; whether or not, by the treaty, I ought to have a control over my household concerns, and whether it be proper or becoming in me to acquiesce in the dishonour and disgrace of those ladies.

With regard to what your Lordship has written respecting the severe distress and vexation experienced by her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and that "you have received copies of the letter which the Resident addressed to me on that subject, under date the 1st of April, and of the letter from her Highness to the Resident to which it refers," and that your Lordship "concurs entirely in the sentiments expressed in the Resident's letter," and that your Lordship has "directed the Resident to make an application to me on this subject, and to request that I would redress the grievances of which the Begum has reason to complain," the case is this: I am ready to redress any grievance of which the Begum can justly complain, and at no time have I ever concurred in or permitted any molestation or cause of grievance to her Highness, nor has ever such a thought entered, or can it enter into my mind. On the other hand, however, several petty acts on the part of the Begum have occurred, which are a cause of grievance and distress to some poor people, and a source of vexation to me; such, for example, as taking the property of another and not paying the price of it, or occupying a piece of ground without the consent of the owner; nay, she even detained in her muhl the daughter of a poor injured Syeed; and when the father complained, she said that she had purchased the girl, nor would she attend to the representation of the Resident in his behalf. Your Lordship will be pleased to determine whether the sale of a Mussulman is permitted by the Mohomedan law. Her Highness has also possessed herself of several places belonging to me. Be pleased to weigh this well, whether any one takes possession of the property of another without the consent of the proprietor. This also I overlooked. Her Highness, moreover, has entirely given up the observance of those appearances and external forms, which are suitable to the relation in which we stand to each other of brother and sister; and when she is expostulated with on such points, she prepares to leave the city, and she frequently remarks, how can she remain a subject in a place where she possessed the rule. And with respect to settling the affairs of her jagier, on which she has spoken to me, if any difficulty is made about sending my people there, she makes it a subject of complaint; and if my people are sent, she accuses them of plunder. At the time when the Resident spoke to me on the subject of settling the business of the bazar attached to her deorhee, and of making an allowance in money in place of the khassa (virtuals) which are furnished to her Highness from my household, I replied, "let her" "Highness observe the forms of respect which are due to my rank as sovereign, "and the obligations of fraternal affection, and on my part, to the extent of my "ability, there shall be no failure in the manifestation of my duty towards her, "as one of the heads of the family, or in the cultivation of her good will." Major Baillie asked me if what he should submit to my consideration in this affair would be agreeable to me. I replied, "certainly." At length it was settled, that Major Baillie should repair in person to her Highness's deorhee, and reason and expostulate with her. A reconciliation rested accordingly on the success of the Resident's expostulation. In the end, however, the Resident did not repair in person to the Begum. Your Lordship will be pleased to deliberate maturely, whether any or what improper request has been made by me, and what cause of grievance to her Highness has arisen on my part. Her Highness will not consent to a reconciliation; nay, she declares that she has made a solemn vow to heaven never to see such a one's face, meaning me. Your Lordship will be pleased to judge whether it is her Highness who does not listen to the representation of the Resident, or whether it is I. It is my wish that her Highness should, in all matters, pay regard to what is due to me, as the sovereign and as a brother, and that I, on my part, should promote her satisfaction and render her service. Notwithstanding so much consideration towards her Highness on my part, she formed the determination to quit this city; upon which I transmitted a letter to her, enclosed in one to the address of the Resident, and omitted no intreaties, arguments, or professions of consideration and regard for her, offering to wait upon her in person. Copies of my letters to her Highness and to Major Baillie, and of Major Baillie's reply, I have the honour to enclose for your Lordship's information. Her Highness, without paying any attention to my arguments and kind and conciliatory expressions, and without returning any answer to my letter, left Lucknow and proceeded to her jagier. A copy of the letter which she addressed to Major Baillie, under date the 28th Shabaun (4th September 1812), was transmitted by him to me, and I now enclose it for your Lordship's notice. Your Lordship will be pleased to observe in what terms of conciliation and regard I have addressed her Highness, and in what terms she has expressed herself of me to the Resident, paying no regard whatever either to my rank as the sovereign, or to the relation in which I stand to her as a brother. The same questions had been agitated between us from former times, but never did her Highness proceed to take the step she has now taken, nor has she once reflected on this, that the terms in which she has expressed herself of me will not be agreeable to the Resident, in consideration of the friendship and union which subsist between the Honourable Company and me.

May the days of your prosperity and happiness be perpetual.

It has been reported to me that your Excellency, from motives of regard for the reputation of Tuhseen Alee Khan and a desire to please him, does not intend to remove him from the office of Nazir. This is surprising. In all the world the honour and reputation of father and mother, and one's own, are dearer than those of any other person: how then can it be, that the reputation of a male or female slave should be of more value with your Excellency than ours? Woe is me, of this life, if this be the fact! Accursed be such a state of existence! When I and the other ladies of the muhl have been forsaken by your Excellency, and been exposed to be insulted by a slave of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, we ought to be ashamed to live longer in the world. Your Excellency knows well that we have no dispute but on one point, the Nazirship of Tuhseen Alee Khan, to which we do not consent. When your Excellency, who is our natural patron and protector and the defender of our rights, is not well disposed towards us, who is this Nazir? We know not what this vengeance from heaven is which has overtaken us. Till now we have considered that we lived on the bounty of your Excellency, but should the Nazir not be removed we shall certainly consider it to be the bounty of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and we wish not to live on the bounty of a perfidious slave, who every moment uses reproachful language towards us, and will not allow an account of our situation or our letters to reach your Excellency. A letter is half a personal meeting. If we cannot see your Excellency let our letters at least reach your presence; and when a letter comes from your Excellency, we can imagine ourselves to be sitting in your company. I have never set foot out of the muhl, and in the presence of Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan I have sworn to it by your Excellency's precious head. Of what use then would it be to come out of the muhl? It is better to die at once. I now also swear by your blessed head, that if the Nazir be not removed from his office I will take poison, and my life shall be your sacrifice. When honour is gone, of what worth is life? Further details of our situation will be made known to you by the letters of the Nawaub, Shums-ood-Dowlah. It is a duty incumbent on your Excellency to turn the eye of regard upon us, and to have compassion on our wretched condition. I shall hope to receive an answer to this letter. If one individual should perish it is of little consequence; but as I am in debt, I beg of your Excellency to take charge of my funeral, that my corpse may not remain unburied, which would excite the scorn of the people and add to my dishonour. What more can I write? It is probable that, from this cause, the measure of my days is now completed. May the Almighty preserve your Excellency for a hundred and forty years, for the sake of Mohummud and his posterity. Let the portion of my days be added to those of your Excellency; but on the day of judgment I will make this base-born villain understand. In this world, as his loins are broken, so in the next shall his neck be broken with the weight of our blood. On the day of resurrection I will mount upon his neck, and cry out under the canopy of heaven, "My blood is on the neck of Tuhseen." My words will not be in vain. In short, since the decease of the Nawaub Shuja-ood-Dowlah my life has been brought to an end by the indignities to which I have been exposed. It is better to die than to live. I beg your Excellency will favour me with an answer, and may the sun of your life continue to shine.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from the Ladies of the Muhl to the Nawaub, Shums-ood-Dowlah, Son of the Vizier.

It is generally rumoured here, that Tuhseen Alee Khan, the Pharaoh of the day, intends to come here (Fyzabad) after the mohurram; we therefore write to inform you, that we have given a written promise to his Excellency, the Vizier, that we will never set a foot beyond the door, nor indeed did we ever form any such intention. How much then have we been slandered by Tuhseen, who has told his Excellency that every moment we are ready to come out of the muhl. Perhaps he is now endeavouring to make his words true; for if he come here, and for the purpose of making us satisfied with him, we are not and never will be be satisfied with him, and we will make away with our own lives. We are unanimous in this affair. By a thousand arts, Juwahir Alee Khan, the former Nazir of her Highness the Bhow Begum's deorbee, sought to make us acquiesce in the authority of her Highness, but without effect. Now that we have fully understood Tuhseen Alee Khan, when will we ever agree to take our stipends from him? Let it not happen, therefore, that he come and make his arrangements here, so that our letters shall be prevented from reaching the Presence. Then, indeed, we shall be without remedy at his hands, and we will come out of the muhl and go to Gola Baree, or we will shut the doors and put ourselves to death. It is proper that you make a representation to his Excellency, that never, never, in any way whatever, will we take our stipends from Tuhseen Alee Khan. He has formed a wrong resolution in coming here, and he will only bring disgrace upon himself at our hands, or be the cause of our losing our honour and our lives. If each of us were to receive gold in place of silver from him, we would not take it. From the hands of his Excellency, who is our patron and master, we should be satisfied with a crust of bread. Further, accept our prayers for your welfare, and consider the little which we have written to imply a great deal.

Translation of a Copy of an Agreement executed among themselves by the Ladies of the Muhl.

(Text of the Coran.)

By the above sacred text we swear, that while life remains in our body, be we killed or be our heads severed from our necks, we never will be satisfied with Tuhseen, and we never will agree to his holding the office of Nazir. We will never betray or be false to each other: never, never, in any way, will we consent to Tuhseen Alee Khan's being Nazir. To this instrument, therefore, we set our seals. To whatever calamity may befall us, we submit; never will we shrink from it. But to Tuhseen's being Nazir, who is an oppressor and the enemy of our house, we will not assent. If we depart from this engagement, may we depart from God, and from the Prophet and the holy law.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from Doolhun Begum to his Excellency the Vizier.

Your Excellency has well discharged the obligations of filial duty, in permitting such oppression to be exercised on us by Daraub, Tuhseen, Nukhut, Asghur Alee Khan, and the Begum, who is the ruler of Fyzabad (Bhow Begum), every one of whom uses every exertion to bring disgrace upon us and cause our death. The base-born villain Nukhut, Khaujeh Sera, has cast a thousand scandalous reflections on us. On Monday the 5th, a servant at three rupees per mensem died, when Begum Jaun, a dependent of Sahib Jee, asked Nukhut for the monthly pay of the deceased. We, all the ladies of the muhl, agreed, in jest, not to permit the corpse to be removed for interment. At length I paid the money out of my pocket, and caused the body to be interred. The Bhow Begum and Daraub told Nukhut not to go on such a day near to the muhl. That son of a strumpet, however, from a spirit of tyranny, sought to cause our destruction, and came to the door, when I and all the other ladies raised a cry of lamentation, and openly pouring out curses and imprecations on his head, we each seized a stick in our hand. Nukhut, standing at the door, called out to bring more sticks, and pile them at the door. Alas, that in your Excellency's life-time, Dalmeër, a misbegotten Peon, should say to us that he would beat us back into the house. Since our honour is come to this, why leave us in the muhl: better turn us out at once, or at one stroke separate our heads from our bodies. We never in our lives will agree to Tuhseen's being Nazir. Nay, should any one, two, or three of us be satisfied with that perfidious villain, the rest of us will put them to death. To-day I have sworn all the ladies of the muhl, high and low, on the Coran, and caused them to affix their seals to the engagement, that they will put themselves to death, and have sent it through Omrao Sing, the news-writer, with a letter from myself, and another under the seals of all the ladies, to be laid before your Excellency. I therefore therefore send Fuzl Alee to you, the servant of Mirza Akbur Alee. My people do not go out of the muhl: they are the prisoners of Nukhut and her Highness the Bhow Begum. You will observe by the solemn engagement which we have executed among ourselves, that we will give up our lives sooner than consent to have Muhummud Tuhseen as Nazir. What will your Excellency gain by our death? Such is our evil fortune that we cannot trust our own shadow. God knows whether the news-writer forwards our letters to your Excellency: nor do we know what crime we have committed that your Excellency should give us up to be put to death by these villains. If our food and raiment were a heavy expense we would not ask for them. Turn us out of doors. We do not know who the Begum is, that she should exercise such tyranny over us. In the life-time of her son, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, she never exercised authority over us, nor oppressed us. Who then is she, while your Excellency is preserved to us? For fifteen or sixteen years the Begum knew nothing of us, and never issued orders to our servants. Why does your Excellency wrongfully allow us to be dishonoured? If your Excellency has any discussions to hold with us, send for us to Lucknow, where you and Major Baillie and the Nazir (Tuhseen) are, and we will answer for ourselves. If you bear us enmity and wish to put us to death, do not delay, but give orders to separate our heads at once from our bodies. If we shrink from the stroke may the curse of God be upon us. Why do you permit the Begum to molest us so to death? We hope your Excellency will send an answer to this letter by the hands of our messenger, Fuzil Alee, and despatch him quickly, for we are reckless of life and are ready to destroy ourselves by taking poison. What can we say more? Consider a little to mean a great deal.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from the Ladies of the Muhl.

Let it be known to you, on the part of all the unfortunate ladies of the muhl, that after forty years the day fixed by fate has arrived, that is to say, to-day, Thursday the 5th of the month, when the deputy of Tuhseen Alee Khan, having built up the Delhi gate and assembled two thousand people, villagers and rajpoots, for the purpose of beating us poor helpless women, came and surrounded the muhl. It is also reported, that he intends forcibly to enter the inner apartments. He has turned out our female domestics, and does not permit them to come in to us. No offence has been proved against us. Our only offence is, that we are satisfied with his Excellency and will not be satisfied with Tuhseen; and for this offence he is ready to put us to death: and you, Sir, cause us to be put to death. Nukhut has also determined to withhold our food, that we may be starved into compliance. The Begum tells us that she will give us the increase of stipend which we ask, if we will accept the Darogah (Tuhseen). We, poor unfortunate women, are like a drop of water ready to fall. If you have a spark of humanity or generosity, we entreat you, for the sake of God and his Prophet, to take our case into your consideration, otherwise you will soon hear that, like a dying ember, we have been extinguished at once.

Translation of an Arzee from the Ladies of the Muhl addressed to the Nawwab Vizier.

Be it known to your Excellency, that it is the custom of the world for every poor and injured subject to seek redress from the prince, when justice is done to him. What offence have we committed, but that for protection we have caught hold of the skirts of your Excellency's garment? When we attempted to repair to your presence for the purpose of obtaining redress, the bearers and carriage drivers were prohibited from assisting us; and when we resolved to proceed on foot, six hundred people belonging to the Begum, peons and rajpoots, some with sticks and others armed, surrounded us, and considering us to be without a protector began to threaten us and raise a tumult. What could we unfortunate females do, but weep and wail and cry out for redress? at this juncture orders from Nukhut Alee Khan were suddenly brought to the peons, not to allow a single female domestic or other person to go out, and to stop all victuals from being carried in. Accordingly, we could get no food, nor was even a sweeper allowed to enter. Being reduced to the last extremity, that the Begum might be without excuse, we sent an arzee to her, informing her of our situation, by the hands of Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan and Mirza Serāj-ood Deen Hyder Khan. The news-writer of his Excellency and the Chuprassy of the news-writer to the Residency were present at the Begum's deorhee when our two messengers arrived with the arzee, and held a discussion on the subject of our representation, the details of which it would be too long to write. In the end, the Begum sent a verbal message by Khoosh Chushm, Khaujeh Sera, that she had done nothing on her part; that she had not sent the people; that she had no concern with our affairs; but that agreeably to the directions of a person of authority (the Resident), she had sent her people to attend Nukhut, and who might, on his own part, order what he pleased. That Tuhseen was the Nazir chosen by a person of authority, and would never be removed; that it was decreed by fate that he should be Nazir; that she had no concern in this affair; that we ought to inform our patron and protector of all the circumstances of our distress, and that he would do whatever he deemed to be best for us. We implore your Excellency, therefore, for the sake of God and of his Prophet and the posterity of the Prophet, and by the pure spirit of the departed Nawaub (Shuja-ood-Dowlah), with whose honour, as well as that of your Excellency, our honour is identified, to take our case into your consideration, and to save us from being disgraced and insulted at the hands of others, or otherwise to put us all as criminals to death with your own hand, that we may receive the punishment due to our guilt. If your Excellency, out of consideration for the wishes of the English gentlemen, can do nothing of yourself in this affair, be pleased to refer our case to the doctors of the holy law, and discuss the question (with the Resident). By the holy law, Tuhseen never can possess the right of being our master (wauris) and ruler (hākīm). It is now incumbent on your Excellency to save us from this tyrant (Tuhseen) and to defend our honour. If your Excellency shall maintain Tuhseen in his appointment of Darogah over us, we will destroy ourselves by poison. What species of tyranny, oppression, and indignity is left, which we have not experienced at the hands of Tuhseen? We are tired of life, and we have taken an oath on the Coran, that if Tuhseen shall be Darogah, we will take poison and never will consent to live. Alas! alas! a hundred times, that while your Excellency is preserved to us, we should suffer such dishonour and disgrace at the hands of Nukhut. We had talked among ourselves, that we should set fire to the Delhi gate and go out. Nukhut was informed of this as he was sitting in the mosque, when he said he would kindle a fire all round the muhl, and would deduct the amount of the loss out of our stipends. It appears to us that they intend to cast us into the fiery furnace, when Tuhseen will become Darogah of the dépôt of martyrs.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from the Ladies of the Muhl to His Excellency the Vizier.

Be it known to your Excellency, that on Monday the Chobdar of the Begum (Bhow Begum) came here to summon Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan to her Highness's presence. He accordingly repaired to the Deorhee, when a conversation took place with her Highness, through Khoosh Chushm Khaujeh Sera. To-day a conversation was held with him, through Saadet Khaujeh Sera, who informed him that her Highness desired him to return and make us understand that what we were doing would not be good for us. Her Highness at the same time sent for Nukhut, and he was present during the whole of the conversation. She said that Tuhseen would never be removed from the office of Nazir. The Mirza replied, that it was not possible that the ladies of the muhl would be satisfied, and that they would sooner submit to lose their heads or suffer whatsoever else should befall them. Saadet observed, "You shall not lose your head, the ladies shall not lose their heads, nor shall Tuhseen lose his appointment of Darogah, and what is not possible will become possible." Mirza Hoosein Alee said in answer, "as long as words only shall pass in this affair, I and the others will say nothing; but when Tuhseen shall proceed to " take

"take any improper measures with the ladies, our heads shall go first, and after that whatever shall happen to the ladies cannot be helped: we will not consent to Tuhseen's being Darogah." Nukhut said to him, "it is you who mislead the ladies." The Mirza replied, "I have nothing to do with Tuhseen, but the case is this: If any one shall offer insult or indignity to the ladies of our late father's family, we will not survive the affront. What oppression have they not suffered? Their walls and doors have been closed up, their female domestics have been denied ingress and egress, their food has been withheld; what worse can befall them?....." And persuade the ladies of the muhl to desist from such proceedings, for otherwise they will be beat and driven into the muhl with broken legs and arms, and dragged there by the hair." Your Excellency will judge from this what we may expect to suffer. These indignities and the loss of life we submit to, but we will not submit to that accursed tyrant being Darogah. God knows, and all the world knows, that in no age have ever such iniquitous proceedings been witnessed.

Translation of a Memorial under the Seals of Hoosein Alee Khan and Serāj-ood-Deen Hyder, Brothers of the Vizier.

The circumstances of our unfortunate case are these: After the demise of his Excellency the late Nawaub-Shooja-ood-Dowlah, the Khoord Muhl was made a separate and distinct department by the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and the Bhow Begum had no further concern with it, nor did she interfere in our affairs. Our stipends were paid to us by the Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, distinct from that of her Highness: Nay, even when he sent presents of fruit, &c., he sent them separately for the Begum and separately for us. The Nazirship of Tuhseen Alee Khan depended on his obedience to us. When your Excellency ascended the musnud, you issued your orders for the issue of twelve months' stipend in the year. From that time Tuhseen was in the habit of deducting three per cent. for his own benefit, and without receiving fifteen or sixteen rupees from us he would not permit our relations to come and visit us. Various acts of oppression he was in the habit of exercising upon us, which made us weary of life. When we saw, at length, that we should be entirely ruined and must die under his Nazirship, and that no one took any heed of us, we of necessity came out of the muhl, and sent several letters to your Excellency, with an account of our situation; and we pledged ourselves to each other, that if your Excellency would not attend to our representations, we should set out barefooted to your Presence. Your Excellency was pleased to take compassion upon us, and appointed Mohummud Nusseem to be our Darogha. We had agreed to this, when in the mean time Tuhseen again sends a person, called Nukhut, on his part, to act as Darogha. Nukhut having come to Fyzabad said to us, "You, in your own imagination, have removed Tuhseen from the office of Nazir, but, thank God, you have once more

"come under the rod of Tuhseen: you will now find it so." When we found that Nukhut was so full of anger, we shut the doors and would not allow him to enter. We afterwards came out of the muhl, and the ladies of the muhl sent Mirza Kumaul-ood-Deen Hyder and me (Hoosein Alee Khan), to represent the circumstance of our case to your Excellency. When we reached your palace you did not call us to the Presence, nor did you take any notice of our condition. Being thus disappointed, we returned to Fyzabad and informed the ladies of what had passed. On that occasion Narain Doss, the vakeel of Tuhseen, said to Nukhut, "Do you remain silent. I will send for the Begum's peons, and give them a good beating until they submit to Tuhseen: please God, I will make them eat pease off my shoe. Shall a parcel of female slaves dare to disobey Tuhseen's order; and do they think that they can remove him from his office?" Nukhut and Narain Doss then went to the Begum, and brought with them six hundred peons to surround the muhl. They would not allow any food to be conveyed to us, nor would they permit any one, not even a sweeper or water-carrier, to come in or go out. On Thursday, when many of us kept fast, they would not allow parched pease to be brought to us. If there had not been a well in our house we should have perished for want of water. Nukhut, on that occasion, said to us, "Now that Tuhseen will be confirmed as Darogah, I will make you eat half split pease and rice, and half salt, for these doings." Seeing him in such a state of anger and passion, we addressed an arzee to the Begum in these words: "What crime have we committed, that we should be kept in confinement and denied meat and drink, and brought to the point of death? In the time of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, who was the fruit of your Highness's womb, your Highness never had any concern with our affairs, and now you exercise tyranny against us." The Begum sent a verbal message to our arzee by her Khaujeh Sera, Khoosh Chushm, that it was of no use sending arzees to her; that from the day of Shooja-ood-Dowlah's demise she had no concern with us and had relinquished all authority over us, but that she knew we should bring great disgrace upon ourselves if we did not consent to receive Tuhseen as Nazir; that she acted solely by the direction of the British Government; that she had not caused us to be confined, but that a great person had written to her, and that therefore she had placed her peons under the orders of Nukhut; that that person could do as he pleased; that we should inform our patron (wauris) of our situation, who would do what he deemed to be advisable. We therefore sent arzees to your Excellency, stating the circumstances of our situation, but we were not honoured by an answer from your Excellency; and Nukhut, seeing how matters stood, took a penalty bond from all the bankers not to advance a single farthing to the members of the muhl, on pain of being punished as a state delinquent. Dalmeer, the discharged peon and Narain Doss, having consulted with Nukhut, said to Saad Oollah, an officer of her Highness the Begum, who was put under their orders, "To-morrow you will drive them by force into the muhl." Saad Oollah demanded a written order to that effect, which might be a voucher if he were afterwards called to account, observing to them, that Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan and the other Sahibzadahs had declared at the Begum's deorhee, that if any indignity should be offered to the ladies of the muhl, they would sacrifice their lives in defence of their honour. Nukhut then told Saad Oollah that he would give him an answer the next day. Afterwards, Nukhut, on the part of the Begum, gave orders to the bearers and drivers of carriages, telling them if any one lent a carriage or cart, or any other vehicle, to the people of the muhl, they would be put in prison. From these proceedings we foresaw that by remaining here (at Fyzabad) we should be exposed to great indignity and insult, and accordingly we determined to proceed to Lucknow, and began to seek for the means of conveyance. Although we offered to pay double hire we were unable to procure a single vehicle: no one would agree to furnish us with carriages. Being thus without remedy, we resolved to set out on foot. Nukhut, upon this, gave orders again to Saad Oollah and the other people, that whenever the ladies should attempt to leave the muhl they should beat them well. Saad Oollah and his people asked for a written order from the Begum. Nukhut and Saad Oollah then went to the Begum and told her the state of affairs. The Begum said, "You must never lift a stick against the ladies, but as

" Nukhut shall settle it: you must first beat the female slaves, that the ladies may be thus deterred from the attempt to quit the muhl." When we came out of the muhl the peons seized sticks and began cudgel play. Saad Oollah and others seeing that the ladies could not be distinguished from their women withdrew from the scene. We then left the city (Fyzabad) bareheaded and barefooted, in a miserable state, such as may our enemies never know. Nukhut called out aloud, " They are not going with the intention of getting Tuhseen removed, but to overthrow the Vizier, for his Excellency's Government is ready to fall to pieces, and they will gain nothing for their pains." After the ladies of the muhl had set out on their journey we went to the Begum's deorhee to request the means of conveyance, saying that we were to accompany the ladies of the muhl, and that the honour of Shooja-ood-Dowlah was involved in their honour; that we were descendants of Shooja-ood-Dowlah, and begging that we might be furnished with carriages. The Begum told us that she should not supply us with carriages, and that her reputation was not concerned. Being without help, we travelled as we could and reached Mourabee. On the next day, when we came to Mohummudpore, the chief man there also refused to furnish us with the means of conveyance. We were ready to die with the fatigue of walking on foot, and our feet were blistered in such a manner that we could not proceed: many of us also fainted from the excessive heat of the sun, and lay on the ground. We procured from the neighbourhood a few carts, and waggons, and carriages, and by this means brought on those who were unable to proceed further. When we came to Durreeabad the people shut their shops, and with the utmost difficulty we succeeded in procuring some flour and pease. In like manner were we treated at Nawaub-gunge and Salar-gunge. Such calamities, both in times past and the present, having been brought upon us by Tuhseen, how can we ever be reconciled to him? If your Excellency prefer Tuhseen and is indifferent about us, be pleased to take our lives, or let us depart for the holy shrines at Kerbelaw. Great God! while such a just protector (wauris) as your Excellency is preserved to us, how should it happen that we should suffer such tyranny and oppression, as never were experienced in the time of the late Assuf-ood-Dowlah? We never thought that your Excellency would have permitted the memory of the Nawaub, Shooja-ood-Dowlah, to be disgraced in such a manner. We have now no desire but to go to Kerbelaw. Neither honour nor reputation is left to us. The very slaves give us abuse to our faces; and Nukhut and Dulmeer, a discharged peon, Narain Doss, and others, order us to be beat, and say, " beat these female slaves till their legs be broken, for till their legs be broken they will not be stopped." Excepting our refusal to acquiesce in the appointment of Tuhseen, what fault have we committed, that we should suffer such severity and misfortune? We hope, from the justice of your Excellency, that you will give us redress, and we will ever pray for your happiness and prosperity.

On personal attendance on her Highness, you had a painful opportunity of listening to the detail of her grievances, and of observing the state of her accommodation, which, for my sake, you would have wished to suppress, but which you should now be compelled to report, by way of answer to my complaint, and as a justification of her Highness's resolution to quit my dominions. The state of the case is this: I said to you, that whatever you should propose I would agree to. After this you addressed a letter of inquiry after her health to the Begum, and you also had a personal interview with her. While I was yet expecting an answer, I received your memorial, containing the observations above recited; I have therefore addressed a letter to the Begum, which I now send to you enclosed in this. I wished, at the same time, to answer the other points of your memorial, but I am compelled by indisposition to postpone my intention till another opportunity. Of necessity I have written on this subject, and my reply to the other points shall be sent to you shortly, as soon as I get well. Until you shall receive it, I request that you will not forward to his Lordship my letter to his address.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from Major Baillie, to the Nawaub Vizier, dated the 31st August 1812.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of this day's date, with a letter to the address of her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and have understood its contents.

The substance of what passed at my interview with her Highness (as the time does not admit of my entering into a detail of the particulars,) is as follows: I exhausted every argument to pacify her Highness, to induce her to desist from her resolution to expose herself to the troubles and fatigues of travelling, and to persuade her to remain in ease and comfort at home, or at the least to postpone her departure until I should have time to communicate an account of her situation to the Right Honourable the Governor-General; and I also gave her an express promise that your Highness would settle all her affairs, as well those pending at present as those which might arise hereafter, with every degree of attention to her Highness's rank and wishes; but to all these representations on my part she only replied, in the most earnest and resolute manner, that it was impossible that the toils and difficulties of travelling, nay (which God forbid) the pangs and agonies of death itself, could be equalled by the vexations and distresses which for a long time past she had submitted to bear, and that she would much rather prefer the first. She added, "From my experience of the past, what have I to expect from the future? It was my fixed determination to leave Lucknow this very day, and I only waited to receive your visit. I shall now depart without further delay, and I commit all my affairs into your hands and to the British Government; but for your sake, and not to disappoint the expectations of your Government, as well as in consequence of your interview with me to-day, I will consent to this much: On Tuesday the 31st of August I will leave this place and go to my jagier, where I will remain until the receipt of an answer to your letter from Calcutta, provided it arrive in the course of twenty-three days, after which, whatever may be the result, I will proceed into the Honourable Company's dominions." This is the substance of what Her Highness said to me at our interview. With respect to the buildings there, which I personally inspected, I will make a representation to your Excellency hereafter. For the present I have despatched your Excellency's letter to her Highness by a confidential messenger, and I will endeavour to prevail on her Highness to depart from her purpose. For the sake of your Excellency, as well as of her Highness, the interests of both of whom are the nearest objects of my heart, I pray to God that my representations may be attended with success, and that her Highness may be persuaded to remain in Lucknow. But if your Excellency is sincerely disposed disposed to conciliate her Highness and pay her due respect, there is a strong probability; nay, I entertain a confident persuasion, that even after she shall have gone to her jagier, such an arrangement may be made as will induce her Highness to return to Lucknow, and enable her to remain here in future with honour, ease, and comfort.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from his Excellency the Vizier to Major Baillie, dated 30th Shabaun 1227 (9th September 1812).

With reference to what you have stated in your memorial, on the subject of the contents of my letter in reply to the letter from the Governor-General, namely, "To me it must form a source of the greatest surprise and concern, that your Excellency, after yielding to all my suggestions regarding the "khoord muhl," and so forth to the end. The case is this: that as to what you and his Lordship have recommended to be done in that affair, since his Lordship is my kind and affectionate friend, there can be no harm in my writing to his Lordship an account of the real state of the case; nay, it is necessary that I should do so.

With reference to your observation in the same memorial, viz. "of your "Excellency's pecuniary demand against her Highness the Bhow Begum," and so forth: my demand against her Highness is evident, from the terms of the engagement quoted in his Lordship's letter.

As the circumstances of the arrival at Lucknow of the ladies of the khoord muhl from Fyzabad, and the departure of her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum to her jagier, require that I should inform the Governor-General of these events, I have now addressed a letter to his Lordship on those subjects which I request you to forward at an early period.

Translation of a Copy of a Letter from Major Baillie to the Nawaub Vizier, dated 1st Rumzaun (9th September 1812).

I have been honoured by the receipt of your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date, conveying a letter from your Excellency to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and it is my intention, agreeably to your Excellency's desire, to forward that letter immediately, to-day if it can be copied in time, or certainly to-morrow, the 2d of Rumzaun (10th instant). In the mean time, however, in conformity with my established practice, founded on the sincerest regard for your Excellency and for the true interests of your Government, I shall offer a few observations on the general purport and contents of your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

With a reference to the statements under the seals of Mirza Hoosein Ale Khan and Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder, and to the copies of letters from the ladies of the muhl, which seem all to have been prepared in Lucknow and had never been seen by me before, I am clearly and decidedly of opinion, that the whole is a groundless fabrication on the part of the misleaders of those ladies and that oppression, harsh treatment, or improper conduct of any kind, can on no principle be ascribed to the unfortunate Tuhseen Ale Khan or to his naib; nay, that your Excellency knows better than I do, that those complaints, from beginning to end, are utterly erroneous and groundless. Mohummud Nukhut, who who went to Fyzabad, had never been admitted within the precincts of the khoord muhl, so as to give him an opportunity of saying what he is charged with; and if the statements of the Honourable Company's news-writer stationed at Fyzabad, which have been hitherto and are now daily transmitted to the Presidency, be worthy of any belief, they must be considered as perfectly conclusive against the truth of the accusations preferred, without any further comments on my part.

Before my receipt of your Excellency's letter, I had prepared a draft of a letter containing some friendly suggestions to your Excellency, with the view of putting a stop to the disorderly conduct of the ladies of the khoord muhl, which I meant to have submitted to your Excellency, and which the press of business alone has hitherto prevented me from having copied fair for transmission. And although, from a retrospect of the many recent occasions on which my earnest advice has been offered to your Excellency, with the view of strengthening the relations of amity between the two States, and that advice, at first apparently acquiesced in, has been ultimately openly disregarded or secretly opposed, I can indulge no very confident hope of the success of my representations on this occasion; yet, still, in the discharge of my duty, and from motives of sincere friendship, I shall submit the purport of the suggestions above noticed to your Excellency, before despatching your letter to the Governor-General's address. It is as follows.

Being satisfied in my own mind, from apparent circumstances as well as authentic information before me, that the ladies of the khoord muhl, now residing in this city, have been misled chiefly by the machinations of Doolhun Begum and three or four others, who have excited all the rest to proceedings derogatory to their character and destructive of their happiness and peace, and that matters could never have been carried to this extremity but for the machinations of these four; in addition to which it has been proved to me, that from the beginning of the disturbance till this moment, Mirza Shujaat Alee Khan has been the chief fomenter of the discontents, and the principal obstacle to the success of the just and necessary arrangement which is now under discussion: under all these circumstances, I suggest that the separation of Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Mukhoo Begum, and one or two more of those ladies, who are the instigators of the ill conduct of the rest, and their temporary residence in some other convenient place, with the prohibition of Mirza Shujaat Alee Khan from visiting those ladies for a time, and the immediate departure of the other sons of the late Shuja-ood Dowlah who have recently come here with their families from Fyzabad, would, in all probability, nay, in my judgment, certainly, prove the means of putting a stop to every future disorder, and tend unquestionably to promote your Excellency's honour and reputation, as well as the future tranquillity of your mind.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark at the close of your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, "that I did not wait on the younger Begum:" as both your Excellency and his Lordship in Council are apprized not only of my having visited her Highness on Thursday the 18th of Shabaun (27th ultimo), and of my having used every possible argument and entreaty to dissuade her from her purpose of quitting Lucknow, but also of the failure of those arguments and entreaties, and the cause of it, the remark in your Excellency's letter above quoted might, I conceive, with propriety have been withheld.

Enclosure
in Resident's Letter.

(25th July 1812.) The Ladies of the muhl, on hearing of Tuhseen Alee Khan's appointment to the office of Nazir, raised a great clamour and disturbance. They came out of the Zenanah and caused the people to retire from the Delhi gate, as far as Angooree Baugh.

Heengoo, a female attendant of Doolhun Begum, with several others, went to Omrao Sing, the Vizier's news-writer, and dictated to him what they wished to be written.

(26th July.) Doolhun Begum, Peearee Bhye, and Janee Begum, caused each a flag to be erected in the bazar, and Mukhoo Begum erected one on the Delhi gate, and they all began to set up a cry of lamentation and mourning. The four ladies above named are the authors of these disturbances.

(27th July.) A letter from the Vizier has been sent, through Omrao Sing the news-writer, to Nusseem, the discharged Darogha, summoning him and his Umla to the Presence. Doolhun Begum and the other ladies, on being informed of its contents, said to Nusseem, "You are one with us, whatever befalls us will befall you." They told the news-writer that they would never consent to receive their stipends from the hands of a slave (alluding to Tuhseen Alee Khan), and that if Nusseem went to Lucknow they would give Fyzabad to the flames and go with him.

(28th July.) Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, and Mukhoo Begum, caused the Delhi gate to be opened, and cleared the whole of the bazar on the other side for their Zenanah, and they despatched Mirza Kumaul-ood-Deen Hyder and Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder on their affairs to Lucknow.

(29th July 1812.) Nukhut, the eunuch, and deputy of Tuhseen Alee Khan, the newly appointed Darogah, arrived from Lucknow, and came to the gate of the muhl, where he stood. Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Peearee Bhye, Mukhoo Begum, and Janee Khanum, retired into the inner apartments. Nukhut delivered the Vizier's letter. The ladies, on reading it, said that they would never consent to what it contained. Nukhut requested that they would open the inner door a little, that he might inform them of the Vizier's commands. They replied, that they knew all he was going to say, and that if he brought them loads of diamonds and other jewels they would never take them from the hands of Tuhseen Alee Khan. They would not listen to his representations. Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder opened the door a little, and said to him in an angry tone, "What has brought you here? Take yourself off; you will not be allowed to remain in any part of this city." Nukhut accordingly went and took up his quarters in the public sera, called after Mirza Hussun Reza Khan.

(31st July 1812.) Heeranund, the news-writer to the Residency, sent a message to Doolhun Begum and the other ladies, that he wished to communicate something to them, and that they should send a confidential person to him. They returned for answer, that for fifty years past they had no correspondence or communication with the English gentlemen, none of whose people ever came to Fyzabad, and that they would not hear what he had to say. The news-writer then came away.

Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder, on the part of the ladies, desired all the dependents to execute a penalty bond, that they would not go to Nukhut the eunuch. Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, and Mukhoo Begum, enjoined their female attendants to take notice what persons of the muhl maintained any intercourse with Nukhut.

(5th August 1812.) It is understood, that Doolhun Begum, and the other ladies, carry on a correspondence, through Shujaat Alee Khan, with Shums-ood-Dowlah (the Vizier's son), and also with Shujaat Alee Khan himself (the Vizier's brother).

ther). Doolhun Begum, Mukhoo Begum, Janee Begum, and Omda, a female companion, are intent on mischief.

(9th August.) Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan has come from Lucknow. He sent for Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Mukhoo Begum, Nadira Bhaee, Cheetul Bhaee, Ishk Bhaee, Moosahib Bhaee, and others, and told them that it was the Nawaub Vizier's pleasure that they should agree to the appointment of Tuhseen Alee Khan as Darogha. They answered, that they had refused on a former occasion, and how would they agree to it now? And that they would set out for Lucknow in whatever manner they could.

(10th August.) Dhurum Doss, Ram Deen, and Bhagaw, Bankers, employed by the ladies of the Khoord Muhl, told Nukhut that the excitors of all the disturbances were Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Mukhoo Begum, and Boochoo Khanum, and that these ladies had required them to execute a penalty bond, that they would not have any intercourse with Nukhut and his people.

(13th August.) On information being received of the ladies having come out of the muhl, her Highness the Bhow Begum ordered peons and telengas to be stationed at the Delhi gate, that no one might be allowed to go out. Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder and Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan, and several female slaves and attendants, made use of abusive language to the peons, and desired them to be gone, or otherwise they would receive a beating.

(14th and 15th August.) A Hurkarrah and Omrao Sing, the Vizier's news-writer, attended the deorhee of the ladies of the muhl, by their desire. Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Mukhoo Begum, and others, held a private conference with them, through the medium of Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan, and sent Meer Assud Alee along with the news-writer, to assist him in writing what had passed.

(16th August.) Omrao Sing, the Vizier's news-writer, delivered with his own hand a letter from Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan, at Lucknow, to Doolhun Begum and Janee Begum. On his coming out from their deorhee he said to Zaffran, a female attendant, "Convey my congratulations to the ladies." Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder, and the other grandsons of Shooja-ood-Dowlah and the Begums, consulted together, when the Mirza caused all the ladies to affix their seal to a paper, expressive of their satisfaction with the Nawaub Vizier, and their dissatisfaction at the appointment of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office of Darogha, and then delivered it, enclosed in a letter to Shoojaat Alee Khan, to the news-writer, who had been summoned to attend. Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen has placed a gun loaded with small shot at his door, saying that the preceding night he could get no sleep for the people of the Bhow Begum keeping watch, and that if they came their rounds this evening he would discharge the contents of the gun at them.

(17th August.) At twelve o'clock Mirza Hoosein Alee, at the desire of the Bhow Begum, attended her Highness, who repeatedly ordered him to expostulate with the ladies of the muhl and bring them to reason. The Mirza replied that they would never agree to the Nazirship of Tuhseen Alee, not even if the Nawaub himself were to come to Fyzabad; and that if the English Resident should attempt to appoint one person in room of another, they would not submit to it, but would complain to the Government at Calcutta.

(20th August.) Purdeea, gardener to Janee Begum, brought a letter from Ashruf-oon-Nissa Begum, at Lucknow, for her mother, Ishk Bae.

(21st August.) A person called Sufdurr Alee brought letters from Lucknow, addressed by Nujum-oon-Nissa Begum, to her mother, Beebee Rūhmūt, and to Janee Begum.

(24th August.) Yesterday Imaum Buksh, a servant of Mirza Ahmed Alee, grandson of Shooja-oo Dowlah, who had carried letters to Lucknow, returned with answers from Ashruf-oon-Nissa Begum to Doolhun Begum and Ishk Bae, her mother. To-day Alee Bukhsh, a bearer in the service of Lutchimsee Begum, was despatched with letters to the grand-daughters of Shooja-ood-

Dowlah at Lucknow. Nukhut, the eunuch, by the orders of the Bhow Begum, went to the Khoord Muhl near the Delhi gate. Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, Hyat Bae, and others, on hearing this, came and repeatedly called to him from behind the curtain, giving him abuse, and saying, "Why don't you come to us, that we may tie your hands and beat you, as you deserve?" Nukhut hung down his head with shame and went out by another way.

(26th August.) To-day letters addressed to Shoojaat Alee Khan, Ashruf-oon-Nissa, Nujum-oon-Nissa, Zeenut-oon-Nissa, and Hyatee Begum, were despatched to Lucknow. Mirza Ahmed Alee, son of Mirza Inayet Alee, son of Shooja-ood-Dowlah, came to Nukhut, and whispered to him that Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan and the ladies at Lucknow wrote to the Begums, not to agree to the appointment of Tuhseen Alee Khan as Nazir.

(27th August.) At seven o'clock in the morning two female slaves, with flags in their hands, came out of the muhl. Afterwards Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan and Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder, with swords and shields, marched out to clear the way, and after them came all the Begums raising a cry of lamentation. Those two persons asked Nukhut why he offered no opposition to them? Nukhut replied: "I have written several arzees to the Nawaub, who has returned no answer. You are the Sahibzadahs (sons of Shooja-ood-Dowlah), and you can take the ladies of the muhl if it be your pleasure." All the ladies and female slaves, beating their breasts, have set out for Lucknow. The Darogha of the Mint and the Darogha of Golab Barea, belonging to the Vizier, attended them at the tank of Ahmed Alee, and supplied them with hired carriages, bearers, &c.

(28th August.) A carriage and two palkees have been sent by Seedee Nazir, in the service of the Bhow Begum; and three carriages, together with some bearers, have been supplied by Omrao Sing, the news-writer, for the use of Doolhun Begum, at Rotae.

Substance of Intelligence from the Quarters of Doolhun Begum and the other Ladies of the Muhl. (7th September.)

Mirza Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder and Hoosein Alee Khan, who had set out early on the morning to wait on the Nawaub, returned at nine o'clock. Mirza Syf Alee and Mirza Inayet Alee, grandsons of Shooja-ood-Dowlah, came to the ladies and held a conversation with them, after which they returned home. It appears that the sum of one thousand rupees has been privately furnished to the Begums, at their request, by Shums-ood-Dowlah, the Nawaub's son, for their expenses. A servant of Behrooze Alee Khan, eunuch, who was formerly Darogha of the Khoord Muhl, came to the deorhee, and sent his compliments to the ladies by the female attendants, and after inquiring after their health went away. At twelve o'clock Musseetie Begum and Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan went into the deorhee, and held a consultation with the Begums. It has been learnt from many of the female attendants, that all the Begums, with the exception of Doolhun Begum and three others, complained to Shoojaat Alee that it was entirely owing to him that they had come away and been disgraced; that not even a single ornament was left with one of them, which they might sell for their support; and that there appeared to be no prospect of any adjustment of their affairs by his Excellency the Vizier. The Mirza gave them many assurances to pacify them. Many of the Begums also expressed a desire that they should each separately receive their stipends from the Vizier. Hoosein Alee Khan sent for Mukhoo, the Hircarra of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and asked him by whose orders he attended the deorhee to collect intelligence. The Hircarra stated, that it was his duty to attend on the part of his master, to keep him informed of the health of the Begums: upon which the Mirza took him by the hand and carrying him to the Zenanah, informed Doolhun Begum of the circumstance. Doolhun Begum, Janee Begum, and the rest of the Begums, came behind the outer gate, and called out in a loud voice, that the Hircarra should be well beaten with a bamboo and his nose be cut off, and that Tuhseen was the cause of all their disgrace, for which they hoped he would be punished hereafter.

The sepoy then turned the Hircarrah out, and warned him not to show his face there again, as he wished to escape a drubbing. The Hircarrah then left the place and went to Tuhseen. During the whole of the day a communication was maintained, by means of the female attendants, between the daughters of Shooja-ood-Dowlah at Lucknow and the Begums. At seven o'clock in the evening Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan and Musseetic Begum took leave of the Begums and returned to their own houses. Many of the ladies of the muhl are tired of remaining at Lucknow, and cry out aloud that they have been misled by Janee Begum and the sahibzadahs (Serauj-ood-Deen Hyder and Hoosein Alee Khan), who caused them to take an oath on the Coran, and that they have been ruined by them; that nothing has yet been done for them; that they are in want of the means of daily subsistence; and that they are looking for the time to return to Fyzabad and receive their stipends.

About nine o'clock at night Hoosein Alee Khan set out to hold a conference with the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, and returned in the course of two hours.

To day (8th September) Mirza Abbas, Mirza Ameen Alee, and some others of Shoojaa-ood-Dowlah's grandsons, set out to wait on the Vizier; but meeting him by the way, they paid their compliments, without having an opportunity of presenting their nuzzers. Several of the female attendants yesterday took away some of the articles belonging to the Imaumbarrah and the mosque. The Vizier, on being informed of this, sent one hundred and fifty bearers and porters to carry away all the things in the Imaumbarrah, and to place them in safety at Baolee. Noor Mohummud, a Hircarrah in the service of the Bhow Begum, who had gone to the deorhee of the Begums in company with the Residency Hircarrah, was stopped by Meer Imaum Alee and Mirza Motie, who turned them both away, saying, "Why do you come here after having executed a penalty bond 'not to come?'" They threatened to beat them if they presumed to return, and said that they would never permit the Bhow Begum's Hircarrah to enter the deorhee. However much the Hircarrah of the Resident expostulated with them, telling them that the Bhow Begum's Hircarrah accompanied him by the Resident's order, and that it was improper to stop them, they replied, that they had received orders from the ladies of the muhl and Hoosein Alee Khan not to admit the Bhow Begum's Hircarrah. The Hircarrah accordingly came away.

Intelligence from the Deorhee of the Begums at the Imaumbarrah of the late Nawaub, Assuf-ood-Dowlah, 8th September.

The Darogha of Mirza Ghazce-ood-Deen Hyder (son of the Vizier) having stationed peons on the road between the Imaumbarrah and Baolie, has conveyed away all the gold and silver articles from the former to the latter place. At three o'clock Mirza Syf Alee Khan, Inayet Alee Khan, and the wife of Mirza Adjoo, came and paid a visit to the ladies of the muhl. The female attendant of Musseetic Begum mentioned that her mistress, on seeing that the female attendants had carried away many of the articles belonging to the Imaumbarrah without the Nawaub's leave, said to the Begums, that such proceedings would be injurious to their interests, and that the Vizier would be much displeased. The ladies of the muhl, on hearing this, were offended with Musseetic Begum, and asked her if she meant to accuse them of theft? On this account Musseetic Begum and Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan have not come to visit them to day. The peon of Beebee Fyzee told the Hircarrah of the Residency, that his mistress was averse to coming from Fyzabad to Lucknow, but that Doolhun Begum and the sons of Shooja-ood-Dowlah had brought her away by force; that she was much embarrassed on account of her daily expenses, and that she complained that there was no one in Lucknow to afford her pecuniary assistance. He added, that his mistress had sold her bracelets and other ornaments to support herself; that she would share the fortunes of the other ladies for one week more, but if in that time nothing was done for them, she would leave them and return to Fyzabad. Many of the bankers who accompanied the Begums from Fyzabad and have established themselves at their deorhee, say that as the sons of Shooja-ood-Dowlah and Doolhun Begum and Janee Begum, who purchase cloths and other articles, it must be supposed from that circumstance that they are privately assisted assisted from some quarter with money, for otherwise, without borrowing money for them, the ladies themselves have not funds to make such purchases.

Letter
from the Begum.

A long time has elapsed since a kind letter from your Lordship has soothed my troubled heart and brought comfort to my afflicted spirit: grant, great God, that the cause of this intermission of our correspondence be nothing but the entire occupation of your Lordship's time and attention with public affairs. The communications of Major Baillie, as well as my former letters, must have already afforded your Lordship full information of the wretched situation of my affairs. Under this supposition, however aggravating it must be to your Lordship's feelings to revert to so painful a subject, yet as my sufferings have now reached the utmost verge of endurance, and death is more desirable than life, I am compelled once more to state the circumstances of my case.

My kind friend, it will not be unknown to you that the much-injured female who now addresses you is the daughter of the Nawaub Intizām-ood-Dowlah Bukhsheer-ool-Moomalik Khan Khānān, son of the Nawaub Vizier-ool-Moomalik Asoph Jah Eatemād-ood-Dowlah Intizām-ool-Moolk Meer Kummer-ood-Deen Khan Cheen Behauder Nusrut Jung, son of the Vizier-ool-Moomalik Nawaub Meer Mohummud Aunur Khan Cheen Behauder. The high respect which the late Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah manifested towards her illustrious Highness, the Nawaub Begum Sahiba, my grandmother, a world of people are yet alive to bear testimony to, on their personal knowledge, and there still survive some of the nobles and courtiers of that period who witnessed the joy and exultation of Shooja-ood-Dowlah at the honour he considered his family to have acquired by an alliance with our illustrious house, to which, after the most earnest solicitation and entreaty, he obtained the consent of his departed majesty, Shah Allum. Notwithstanding the change of fortune, and the confusion into which the affairs of the empire were thrown by the rebellion of some disloyal and ungrateful subjects, no indignity, nor disrespect, was ever experienced at the hands of any individual by the members of our illustrious house. The Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah entertaining a just consideration for my rank, regarded me as one who had ennobled his family, and sought with such devotion to promote my satisfaction, and manifested such kindness and favour towards me in so many ways that the particulars could not be contained in volumes. Whenever the recollection of the past comes into my mind, the comparison of it with the present embitters existence. On the succession of Shooja-ood-Dowlah's son, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, to the musnud, my rank and dignity continued daily to be respected more and more, and with the union of our destinies so intimately were our affections united, that I looked upon him as my very self, and myself as his very self. In a state of such perfect identity of person, the sense of mutual obligation, no more than the cause of complaint on either side, could be conceived to exist. There was no department of the State, the officers of which ever objected to obey my will, and every one executed my commands with all his heart and soul not a single inhabitant of the city had power to act perversely towards any of my household. After the demise of Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, when the signs of unworthiness appeared on the forehead of Vizier Alee Khan, I expressed my hope to the late Governor-General, Sir John Shore, that due attention would be paid to my rank and situation. On that occasion I received from him assurances of the most gratifying and satisfactory nature, and I have in my possession a letter from him to the same effect, written to me at the time when Vizier Alee Khan was removed from the musnud, and his Excellency Saadut Alee Khan was elevated in his room. Notwithstanding my high rank and station, and my right to be treated with the utmost reverence and respect by his Excellency my brother, I have experienced from him such tyranny and oppression as could not be detailed in writing in fifteen years. My hereditary possessions in Delhi, consisting of villages and houses purchased by my ancestors, were on my grandmother's decease given in charge by me to the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah. On the expiration of the term of mourning for the late Nawaub, and the settlement of the question respecting Vizier Alee Khan, I requested his Excellency the Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan to give the sunnuds of release and possession for the property in question to my agents at Delhi. To this request his Excellency at first returned no answer: being at length pressed by frequent letters and verbal messages, he amused me with promises from day to day. A letter containing his promise is forthcoming. Fourteen years and some months have since passed away, and his Excellency still usurps possession. I trust that your Lordship, who is endowed with the power of just discrimination, will pause for a moment to view with attention this act of tyranny.

Other mean acts of tyranny and oppression, which I consider it a disgrace even to mention, his Excellency does not blush to sanction: such, for example, as discontinuing the pay of the palkee-bearers of my establishment, the allowance for candles and oil, the allowance for the hospital and for pawn, the pay of the peons, chobdars, and abdaur, the allowance for feeding the horses of the eunuchs, and other charges, all of which were established of old, and were current even during a considerable time after his Excellency's elevation to the musnud. How can I enter into a detail of such transactions, which cannot but give extreme pain and dissatisfaction to a liberal mind, and a heart which reveres justice, such as your Lordship's? Moreover, I abstain from enlarging on a subject so fatiguing and painful to your Lordship, as I am afraid of intruding on the little leisure which the multiplicity of important public affairs may allow you to enjoy. What I have now stated I have been unavoidably compelled to state, for the tyrannical acts of his Excellency my brother, which have not even left a place in my body for my soul to reside in, will not suffer me to remain silent. Another more singular occurrence than the preceding is as follows: My brother was desirous from the very first to discontinue the supplies for my table. Accordingly, in the time of Colonel Scott they were stopped for a month and some days. As the Almighty has been pleased to distinguish the virtuous nation of the English above all other nations, by their love of justice and by the regard which they pay to the rank and situation of every individual, they never on any occasion depart from the strict line of justice, nor suffer one to oppress another, as well from a respect for the principles of government as from a desire to do what is pleasing in the sight of God. Colonel Scott reported the circumstance to the Governor-General, Marquess Wellesley, and with the sanction of his Lordship, with much severity and anger caused my table to be supplied as before, and a compensation in money, at the average of the usual expense, to be paid to me for the time during which the supplies had been withheld. Although satisfied that the exercise of acts of injustice and oppression would never be permitted by the English gentlemen, in whose court of justice the renowned monarch Nooshirwaun would be proud to hold the office of doorkeeper, still his Excellency persevering in his tyrannical career, caused such victuals to be furnished for my table as my servants turned away from with loathing and disgust. Being without remedy, I defrayed my table expenses out of the receipts of the small jagier which the late Nawaub had settled upon me, through the agency of Mr. Middleton, for the supply of tobacco, cawn, and missee, for the use of my household, and I caused the victuals to be cooked within the muhl. I cannot but lament the stupidity of his Excellency in this affair, that he

he did not for a moment reflect that, in a case so clear and evident as this, if the British Government was prevented by any obstacle from augmenting the sources of provision for one whom it considered to be entitled to superior attention and respect, it would never, at least, suffer such a person's established privileges to be diminished or infringed; and that in elevating his Excellency to the musnud, the real object and ultimate intent of the English gentlemen were, that he should administer the affairs of the country with justice, and promote the happiness of his subjects; not that they had commissioned him to seize with the hand of rapacity the property of the inhabitants and to oppress and tyrannize over the people; or that, in violation of the established forms of respect to be observed towards families of high and illustrious descent, he had been authorized to disgrace and degrade those who were entitled to be treated with distinction and honour. Merciful God, what words are these which have dropped from my pen! The just and virtuous consider the exercise of injustice under their sanction to be worse than the commission of it by themselves, and look upon it as more criminal to authorize another to practice cruelty and oppression, than to be guilty of those acts in their own person. All that has befallen me is solely to be ascribed to the tyrannical disposition and folly of my brother, which all the salutary counsel and zealous exertions of the English gentlemen cannot mend. If, notwithstanding their strenuous exertions in my behalf, his Excellency has thus persevered in his career of tyranny, what would have become of me had they, contrary to their usual and praiseworthy conduct, been indifferent to my fate, and instead of protecting and watching over my interests and welfare, had shut their eyes to my brother's proceedings.

Letter
from the Begum.

Another and more singular instance of his Excellency's tyrannical disposition is as follows:—As he cannot actually deprive me of my jagier, he is desirous, from an innate spirit of malevolence, to render it a barren and unproductive waste. Actuated by these motives, when the refractory Zemindars of my jagier, find a secure place of retreat within the Khalsa lands of his Excellency, and the crops and carry off the property of the Ryots, his Excellency adopts no measures for the prevention or punishment of such proceedings; nay, on seeing that these acts afford his Excellency satisfaction, the Zemindars of the Khalsa are accustomed to excite disturbances in my jagier, and seizing my ryots, they carry them away, and do not set them at liberty until they have extorted money from them. On a former occasion, while your Lordship was at Madras, I stated the particulars of this affair to his Excellency the Vice-President. It is now some months since Sheikh Mussood, a Zemindar under the protection of the Aumil of Nawaubgunge, belonging to his Excellency, forcibly cut and carried off the crops of a mouzah in my jagier. Notwithstanding my kind friend the Resident repeatedly exerted his influence with his Excellency to obtain redress of this grievance, no success attended his representations. In another case, Goolaub Sing, a Zemindar of the Khalsa, slew Sudder Sing, the shuhna of one of the mouzahs of my jagier; and the same person has several times plundered my ryots of their property. Every exertion on the part of the Resident to procure the punishment of Goolaub Sing proved ineffectual. As the punishment of the guilty deters others from the commission of similar offences, and as connivance at their crimes gives confidence and encouragement to the evil-minded, the disturbances of the disaffected in my jagier, who have a safe place of retreat within his Excellency's khalsa lands, and of the robbers and marauders residing in the khalsa contiguous to my jagier, have risen to such a pitch, that the small pittance of revenue which I now enjoy will shortly be entirely stopped. There is not a single Aumil, officer, or servant of his Excellency, from whom I have not experienced indignity or oppression. To detail the instances of disrespect, on the part of the officers of his Excellency's court of oppression, which he has dignified by the title of court of justice, would require a volume. Despairing, therefore, of accomplishing so arduous a task, I give a new direction to the current of my discourse. The circumstances, indeed, of the transactions to which I have alluded, must have been communicated to your Lordship by the Resident, Major Baillie, whose consideration for my rank, and whose kind exertions in my behalf, exceed the powers of description.

Another similar instance of his Excellency's enmity, which I communicated to the Vice-President in your Lordship's absence, I now consider it necessary to state

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from the Begum.

state to your Lordship. At a former period, when I was labouring under a severe depression of spirits occasioned by the decease of the late Nawaub, and when I was also attacked with a violent fit of asthma, I requested his Excellency, as my own muhl was in a confined situation, to permit me to reside at Mutchee Bhuwun. The result of my application was, that after his Excellency had repeatedly broken his promise, he at last wrote to me, in answer to a letter from me complaining of his conduct, that he had only appeared to agree to my request to humour me, and that, consistently with good manners, he could not give me a plain refusal. Since that time I have never made another request of him. My health having suffered extremely in the course of the last fifteen years, from the repeated indignities which I experienced at his Excellency's hands, and which preyed upon my mind, I requested the Resident last year to obtain permission for my visiting the gardens of Kaukerabaud for a change of scene, and in the hope of finding relief from my asthmatic complaint. His Excellency not thinking it proper to refuse the Resident's request, secretly issued orders to the people in charge of the gardens to fill all the apartments of the house with the sweepings and rubbish of the grounds. On my arrival there, unsuspecting of such meanness and malice on the part of his Excellency, I found the house full of dust, rubbish, and stripped of furniture and floor-cloths. Vexed and incensed more than ever at this mark of disrespect, I returned to my own house on the third day. Being without remedy, I at last bethought me that if I could build a small house on the banks of the river, within the precincts of the bazar attached to my own deorhee, the sight of the running stream might occasionally divert my melancholy, without being under an obligation to any one. Accordingly I purchased from some of the inhabitants of my bazar, for more than the value of their mud and straw huts, a piece of ground for the erection of a house. My brother, from motives of enmity, and with a view to lessen my dignity, instigated one of the inhabitants to bring forward a plea of a proprietary right in the ground, as having been held by his ancestors, and by a decree of the demons of his court of Adawlat (by which I mean the law officers, who are the instigators of mischief) he caused a stop to be put to the prosecution of the work. Although the Resident, my kind and compassionate friend, used every means in his power to prevent the work being stopped, he failed of success. In consequence of this indignity, the not being permitted to build a house on the ground attached to my own deorhee, where the vilest of the people construct their huts, and for which I had paid the money, I was desirous of leaving the city the same day; but my kind friend abovementioned, whose affection and regard cannot be equalled by that of a son or a brother, soothed my mind by his consoling expressions, and succeeded in allaying the flames of my just indignation.

But the most disgraceful of my brother's acts is as follows. A person called Benec Pershaud, a low writer, whose salutation a sweeper of my house would have been ashamed to return, being puffed up with pride on becoming a farmer of customs, with the concurrence and authority of my brother seized all the people of the town and the suburbs who were in the habit of supplying my bazar, and caused them to enter into a penalty bond not to bring their articles for sale in my bazar; although I sent to the Resident a petition from those persons, with the terms on which they were willing to purchase permission to trade in my bazar; and although Major Baillie spared no pains to promote their suit with his Excellency, his exertions failed of success. The farmer of customs relaxed not from his unjust and oppressive course of proceeding, nor did his Excellency dismiss from his thoughts the desire of heaping indignities upon me. The weight of these injuries and insults has pressed so hard upon me, and has so broken my health and spirits, that I cannot live in this climate, and notwithstanding the skill and attention of my two physicians my complaints suffer no abatement. When I reflect, also, on the pain which the knowledge of the indignities and injuries to which the cruel tyranny of his Excellency has exposed me during a course of fifteen years must have occasioned to the English gentlemen, I suffer more from vexation on this account than even from the sense of my own sufferings. The tyrannical conduct of his Excellency has moreover reached such a pitch, that human nature is unable longer to endure it, and it has become impossible to live under such circumstances of dishonour and disgrace disgrace in this land of trouble. The climate, also, is unfavourable to my constitution. Accordingly, I could not restrain myself from writing to Major Baillie, that it was my intention to depart from this land of trouble, and to take up my residence in the Honourable Company's dominions. Major Baillie made use of every argument to dissuade me from the execution of my purpose, pointing out to me the difficulties which would attend my travelling in the unprepared state in which I was, and striving to comfort and console me; but as my soul was ready to quit my body, and death itself was preferable to living in Lucknow, I would not consent to stay, and removed to my jagier at Pertaubgunge, with the intention of prosecuting my journey to Calcutta. The conduct of his Excellency on this occasion will afford to your Lordship's discerning mind the best test of his intentions; for, until my tents were actually sent on in advance, he never wrote a single line to me. After they had been sent on, he addressed a letter to me through the Resident, containing some preliminary observations, which excited my utmost indignation. An infant at the breast might be capable of discerning that his Excellency's letter was written entirely at the solicitation of the Resident, and with a view to exculpate himself. Your Lordship has doubtless perused a copy of his Excellency's letter, and the spirit of its contents cannot fail to have been rightly understood by your discerning mind. His Excellency's assertion, that he is ignorant of the cause of my distress, is sprinkling salt upon my wound; and his professing that my departure has occasioned him nothing but grief and sorrow, when he reflects on the distress to which it will expose me, and the scandal which it may create among those who are ignorant of the true state of circumstances, has torn afresh my bleeding heart. I cannot but admire the extent of my brother's sagacity. With regard to the sincerity of his promise of service, I need only observe, that when he resided at Benares he addressed letters to me after the decease of the late Nawaub, assuring me of his desire to serve me. In the course of the fifteen years which have elapsed since that time, what services has he left undone to make me weary of life, that he should still desire to render me more? Although I was not to be deceived by the contents of his letter, I was willing, at the request of Major Baillie, communicated to me through a confidential messenger, to postpone my departure for two days further. Accordingly, I did not set out until Tuesday morning, at which time it having been reported to me that his Excellency had made an observation in company, that I was waiting for him to make an apology to me, for that otherwise what prevented me from commencing my journey, I could no longer restrain my indignation, but set out immediately, notwithstanding the burning heat of the sun.

My kind Lord: in the sincerity of my heart I assure you, that my object in relating these transactions is not to prepare the way for any application on my part for an augmentation of my jagier or of the established sources of my subsistence, neither is it to seek for reconciliation, or for redress of my injuries; but my sole object is merely this, that as the Almighty has pre-eminently endowed the English with the virtues of justice, magnanimity, and a love of truth, your Lordship, who is the fountain of equity and justice, full of kindness and affection, justly discriminating the truth and appreciating the rank and worth of every one, will, according to the dictates of your just disposition, be pleased to direct your attention to my oppressed condition and my injured rights, and not withhold from me the observance of that degree of respect and consideration which was established for me by the late Vizier, and to which the rank of my ancestors entitles me, and that you will afford me such a proof of your regard as may enable me in future to pass my life in tranquillity and comfort, which but for the kind and sympathizing attention of Major Baillie, would have come to an untimely end. My wish is, that my days may not be wasted in this land of trouble in the sinful neglect of the ordinances of my religion (alluding to the performance of a pilgrimage). Your Lordship's kindness in this respect will both be pleasing in the sight of God, and will exalt and perpetuate your reputation in all times and in all regions of the earth.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch to your address under date the 9th instant, having reference to the tenor and contents of the Vizier's letter of that date to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, I deem it to be my duty to transmit to you, for his Lordship in Council's notice, the enclosed copy and translation of two letters on that subject, which have more recently passed between his Excellency and me.

2. The Vizier's rejection of my proposal, with the view of putting an immediate stop to the disorderly conduct of a few of the ladies of the khoord muhl, affords an additional though unnecessary proof of what is apparent to every respectable inhabitant of Lucknow, that his Excellency has been the sole instigator of the resistance of those ladies to the authority of the Nazir from the beginning, and that, with the exception of four or five of the ladies who are particularly encouraged in their opposition by advances of money, under his Excellency's orders, for their support, every individual of the muhl now confined in the Imāmbarrāh is sincerely and anxiously disposed to return in peace to Fyzabad, and prevented from executing this design alone by the restraints which are imposed on them.

3. The nature and object of his Excellency's allusion in his letter to the pain with which he would view the further disorderly conduct of women, whose conduct has ever been disreputable, and whose present proceedings are instigated and directed solely by himself, must be sufficiently apparent to you to supersede comment on my part. If his Excellency's honour or reputation, or the memory of the Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah could be affected in any degree by the disorderly conduct of women, who have neither honour nor reputation to lose, and whose rank in his father's household was never higher than that of slaves, the injury now complained of has been sustained in a similar degree on a number of former occasions, and its reparation by an act of obvious justice and expediency is at present exclusively in his Excellency's hands.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 2d Ramzaun 1227, 10th September 1812.)

I have perused your letter of the 1st instant, in reply to mine of the Sulukh (last day) of Shabaun, acquainting me of your intention to transmit to the Right Honourable the Governor-General the letter which I sent you to his Lordship's address. It is well. Send, as you propose, my letter to his Lordship, and also a copy of this my shookha to you.

With respect to your observation, that the statement under the seals of Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan Behaudur, &c. (recapitulate). The fact is this: It is true that the statement of my brothers has been prepared since their arrival at Lucknow, and submitted to me here, and that the letter of the ladies of the muhl, and the agreement entered into between them, formerly received from Fyzabad, have been copied here. Copies of what they had written, without the smallest alteration, are enclosed in my letter to his Lordship, and some of their letters on being received from Fyzabad were originally sent for your perusal; but as you did not seem to give much credit to the contents of those letters, I discontinued transmitting them to you.

You

You remark, that before receiving my letter you had drafted some friendly suggestions with regard to the khoord muhl, &c. (recapitulate). The state of the matter is this: I have certainly performed all that I promised to you on this head. If you had mentioned more particularly the deviations from my promises, and that they were known to me, I should have written a reply to this remark.

You have stated, that from motives of sincere friendship (recapitulate). You are, indeed, my undoubted friend and well-wisher, the strength of my arm, and personally dear to me, and I hope that you will ever continue to be so. It would grieve and afflict me if the contrary, which God prevent, should ever appear.

With reference to your proposal of the separation of Doolhun Begum, &c. (recapitulate). The truth is: That the agreement entered into among themselves by the ladies of the muhl, a copy of which is enclosed in my letter to the Governor-General, must convince you that the separation of the ladies you mention from the rest would prove the source of additional clamour and disturbance. It was always my wish that none of the ladies should quit the muhl nor commit disturbance: but bad management has led to the present disgraceful proceedings. As the ladies of the muhl and my brothers above-named are all leagued together in their measures, it is impossible to separate them: on the contrary, I am convinced that if orders should be issued for the separation of those four ladies, and for prohibiting the visits of my brothers, whose mothers are among the number, they would all immediately quit the restraint of the muhl; and I cannot, therefore, as far as I have power, or as the matter may rest with me, consent to a measure which would have the effect of driving those ladies into the streets and bazars, for it would be more painful to me than death to witness such a scene as that described. The ladies of the muhl being no longer regardful of any thing, I have, of necessity, written on this subject to you. Consider with justice and impartiality how nearly I am related to these ladies, and you will own that, under this circumstance, I must view with pain their degradation and dishonour, by their appearing abroad in the streets.

You have stated, that with a reference to one remark in my letter to the Governor-General respecting the younger Begum, &c. (recapitulate). The truth is this: At the time when you agreed to wait on her Highness, for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation, and asked me whether I would agree to all your proposals, and I answered "yes," you did not certainly then go for the purpose in question, but, on the contrary, you informed me that her Highness did not seem pleased with your intention of waiting on her for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation. Hence it follows, that your going to her with that view is one thing, and your waiting on her more recently, in consequence of your hearing of her intention to leave the city, is another.

lency seems disposed at least, if not determined, to evade a satisfactory communication on any of the remaining points which are treated in the Governor-General's letter, till he receive a reply to his own letter on the questions of the superintendence of the khoord muhl, and of her Highness the younger Begum's departure from Lucknow.

3. His Excellency's recent proceedings, and more particularly the proceedings of his Aumil of Baraitch towards her Highness the Bhow Begum, and with a reference to certain portions of her jagier and jaidad, have been oppressive and violent in the extreme, and have induced her Highness to address a letter on this subject to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which I have received, and shall hereafter transmit to the Secretary in the Persian Department. A translation of a letter from her Highness to my own address, and a copy and translation of a letter which I have addressed in her behalf to the Vizier, are conveyed by this despatch for information.

29th August 1812.)*

I have perused with great attention the letter which your Excellency has sent to me, to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General. It was not only my anxious wish, but also my well-grounded hope, after the communication which I made to your Excellency at our conference on the 16th of Shabaun (25th instant), that your letter to his Lordship should contain nothing whatever having reference to any question that is treated in it, to the truth of which I should not be enabled with cheerfulness to subscribe, and to support by my concurrence with your Excellency every statement to be contained in your letter. Disappointed entirely in this hope, and in the natural expectation which I had formed, although nothing was omitted at our conference which seemed worthy of being stated to your Excellency with a view to the speedy and satisfactory adjustment of all the points of His Lordship's letter; yet, under the idea that my remarks on that occasion may have escaped your Excellency's memory, and with a view to remove all further responsibility from myself, by leaving no argument unessayed to afford conviction to your Excellency's mind, I shall recall to your recollection the observations which I made at our last interview; and in the course of my recapitulation of those remarks, I shall reply to such fresh matter as your Excellency has introduced into this letter. And 1st, with a reference to your Excellency's proposal of the nomination of one of your sons to be accompanied by a detachment of British troops for the purpose of settling your country, this measure was agitated, if I mistake not, long before I had the honour of residing at your Court, and was departed from or suspended by your Excellency, after mature deliberation, on various grounds of expediency, which are obvious, and which it is unnecessary now to describe. But your Excellency must be perfectly aware, that the proposal abovementioned was not accompanied by any plan or scheme of a settlement or system of assessment of your revenues, to be executed by your son or any other person, which the British Government might have been called upon to approve or disapprove; and, on the contrary, that the first suggestion of a regular plan for the just assessment and future realization of the revenue was submitted to your Excellency originally by me and afterwards enlarged on and explained to you by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in his Lordship's letter to your Excellency's address, under date the 28th of December 1810. It follows, therefore, that the approbation or disapprobation by the British Government of a system or settlement suggested by your Excellency was totally impossible, since no such suggestion had ever been made: but even now I am free to declare, that, according to my judgment, there is none of your Excellency's sons possessing that degree of knowledge and experience in revenue affairs, which could recommend him for such an employment; and further, that in my opinion neither the aid of the British troops, nor of

of any other military force, can be required for the settlement of the revenues of a country, if the objects of the settlement be justice, moderation, and a due regard to the rights of the subject, without the wish or intention of making excessive demands, and of enforcing them by violence and oppression.

Enclosure.

Secondly, in regard to the objections which are stated by your Excellency in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General against the system which his Lordship recommended, although those objections have been already repeatedly answered and removed, I will again, in a summary manner, submit the answers to your Excellency. The jumma bundy, or settlement of your Excellency's dominions, in the manner which his Lordship has proposed, by a fair standard of assessment for a fixed period of years, can, with the utmost facility, be accomplished without any immediate recourse to the expedient of universal measurement of the lands, and the following is a proof of this assertion. The jumma bundy of all the ceded and conquered provinces of the Honourable Company's territory has been effected in the manner proposed, and settlements, first for three years, then for four, and ultimately for ten years, intended to be perpetual, have been made, and not a fourth part, nor a tenth, nor even a twentieth part of the lands, has to this day been subjected to measurement. The necessity for actual measurement is obviously limited to cases where the quality and produce of the lands cannot by other means be ascertained, to that degree of accuracy on which a fair and moderate assessment can proceed; where disputes between the revenue officers and landholders arise, which can in no other way be adjusted, as when the demands of the one are exorbitant, and the others are obstinate in withholding what may be considered as a reasonable jumma; and this state of things may occur in one or two villages of a district, but not surely in every village of every district in your Excellency's dominions, so as to suspend the settlement of the whole, till the whole shall have been actually measured. In addition to which I submit, that such a rigid assessment as this, which your Excellency would propose in the first instance by actual measurement of the lands, is what no just or wise government would suggest on the introduction of a new system to its subjects: On the contrary, a moderate assessment should in the first instance be made and established for a term of years, in order to give confidence to the people, to encourage the cultivation and improvement of the soil, to provide for the future increase of assets, and to give time for the more accurate and gradual ascertainment of the real value of the lands, without creating diffidence or alarm in the minds of the landholders or cultivators.

With a reference to the appointment of Ameens, your Excellency's objection seems to me to be exactly similar to that which is above described. The object of the appointment of Ameens is to conciliate the minds of the people, who have long suffered from oppression, not surely to give ground for alarm which might create disaffection or commotion; and if disturbance or rebellion in such a case could be reasonably feared, the British troops would be ready to suppress it, and to support the just authority of the Ameens. In short, what I stated to your Excellency at our last interview, with a reference to this point and to every other question of a similar nature, seems to me to be conclusive on the subject, namely, that for the successful progress of the measures of reform, and of every just measure which can form an object of mutual interest to the two States, two things only are required: On the part of your Excellency, a sincere disposition to promote their success; and on the part of the British Government, the exertion of its influence and power in support of your Excellency's authority. The perfect union of these two requisites must overcome every obstacle which can oppose them; nay, must preclude the possibility of opposition.

With regard to the establishment of courts of justice and police, which your Excellency proposes to suspend until the extirpation of every rebel and disaffected person from your dominions; as the British troops have repeatedly, I may say constantly, during the last thirteen or fourteen years, been employed in pursuing, destroying, or expelling every rebel or supposed rebel, whom your Excellency and your Aumils have been pleased to describe as such, it seems difficult to account for the existence of the inclination or means of resistance to the authority of courts of justice and police to be constituted in the manner proposed, with the advice of the British government ; but if any such power or disposition do still exist, the British troops are at all times ready to suppress it, to support the just authority of such a police, and the decrees of such courts of justice as those described.

Thirdly. With a reference to the investigation and adjustment of the claims and demands of your Excellency's Government which the British power may be required to enforce, the approved and unobjectionable plan which has been proposed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, by his Lordship's adoption of the contents of my letter to your Excellency under date the 15th of January last (22d zeehijj), namely, the appointment and deputation of Ameens on the part of both governments, or on my part, for the investigation and adjustment of such demands, a measure too which can occasion no diminution whatever of your Excellency's consequence and authority, as already repeatedly explained to you, supersedes any further inquiry, and might, in my judgment, with propriety have superseded the expression in your Excellency's letter to his Lordship, of a wish for further information on a question already so fully and so satisfactorily explained. His Lordship's reply to this part of your Excellency's letter, must inevitably be a reference to what you already know.

Fourthly. On the subject of Moonshee Alee Nuckee's claims, your Excellency has been pleased to observe, that they are of two kinds : one against this Government, and the other against the associates of the claimant. Your Excellency, in the conclusion of this remark, has furnished an obvious answer to what is stated in its commencement. Moonshee Alee Nuckee is at present completely divested of every part of his ancient and rightful possessions in Sandee. If he have no rights in that district, there can be no associates in his rights. The Moonshee has repeatedly submitted to your Excellency, through me, the original sunnuds for his rights, and your Excellency declined to peruse them. Copies of those sunnuds, authenticated by my signature and seal, have been transmitted to your Excellency, and may be referred to at any time in your duftur ; or if you wish it, fresh copies can be made out, attested, and delivered when required. The history of those sunnuds is as follows : some of them bear the seals of chieftains who held the district of Sandee in jagier, before the accession to those dominions of any of your Excellency's ancestors ; others are under the seal of this Government during the administration of the late Asuf-ood-Dowlah. They bear the seals of his minister, Hyder Beg, and of the British Resident of that period, purporting the Moonshee to be in possession of nankar and other privileges from remote times, and prohibiting his molestation in the exercise and enjoyment of those rights, not one of which is now in his possession, though a mandate, under your Excellency's seal, addressed to the Aumil of Sandee, during the residency of the late Colonel Scott, for maintaining the Moonshee in his possessions, and a statement of those possessions under the seal of the deputy Aumil be still extant, and prepared for submission to your Excellency. That no sunnud was obtained during the government of the late Shooja-ood-Dowlah, your Excellency's illustrious father, is accounted for on the obvious ground, that no molestation was ever offered to the possessions of the Moonshee during that period, which might have rendered new sunnuds necessary to support his right, as may be proved in the most satisfactory manner by the wasil-bākee or revenue accounts of the district during that time. With respect to the second description of the Moonshee's claims, which your Excellency would refer to the Adawlut, some of them are of a nature, and have already proceeded to a stage, which supersedes any reference to the Adawlut. What purpose, for example, could it answer, to bring before the Adawlut the case of Rushuck Loil, who in his arzee to your Excellency, a copy of which was transmitted to me, has himself acknowledged the Moonshee's right ? or again, with regard to my suggestion of your Excellency's ordering Imteeaz Alee to restore to the grandchildren of Salaam Oolla Chowdree that portion of their rights which is established by law, even admitting the legitimacy of Imteeaz Alee's birth, (which is disputed,) there can be obviously no necessity for a reference to the Adawlut, because the rule rule of law for inheritance in such cases is known to all. But, with regard to all other claims on the part of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, or of any other dependant of the British Government in Oude, they can never, with a hope of justice, be submitted to your Excellency's Adawlut, until the nature and constitution of that court shall become directly the opposites of what they are, in the manner recommended by the British Government, and repeatedly promised by your Excellency to me. Until such an alteration shall take place, the usual mode of determining all questions and claims on the part of the dependants of the British Government, which has been practised ever since the commencement of the friendship now subsisting between the two States, namely, your Excellency's concurrence with the Resident at your Durbar in an equitable investigation of the claim, must inevitably continue to be observed. Upon the whole, with a reference to the just claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee, it is a matter of surprise and concern, that your Excellency should now have thought it necessary to ask the opinion of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, after the receipt of two letters from his Lordship and the Vice-President on this subject, in support of my representation of the true merits of the case.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Enclosure.

Fifthly. Your Excellency's long and extraordinary statement, with a reference to the superintendence of the khoord muhl and other complaints against her highness the Bhow Begum, in no part of which I can concur, is alike a source of surprise and concern to me. The clamour and disturbance in the khoord muhl are ascribable, in my judgment, solely to the intrigues, in the first instance, of Mirza Shoojaat Alee Khan and others, who are entirely at your Excellency's devotion, and subsequently, as at present, to a conviction in the minds of those ladies, that their conduct is gratifying to your mind. Whenever those intrigues shall be put a stop to, when the conviction above described shall be removed, all clamour and disturbance must cease; and I beg your Excellency to be persuaded, that the sentiment which I have here expressed must be the sentiment of his Lordship in Council, of all the Members of the Government, and of every person of reason and understanding who shall become acquainted with the circumstances of the case. The right of her Highness the Begum to exercise her control over the khoord muhl, and to distribute the stipends of the women of it through a Nazir of her own choice, without any interference on the part of your Excellency, as stated and fully explained in his Lordship's letter to your address, can never be diminished nor affected, in any degree, by the statement in your Excellency's letter, which can answer no good purpose whatever; though to me it must form a source of the greatest surprise and regret, that your Excellency, after yielding to all my suggestions regarding the khoord muhl, after reinstating Tuhseen Alee Khan in his office of Nazir, conferring a khelât on his Naib, writing to that effect to the ladies, and desiring me to communicate this satisfactory information to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, should think it wise or expedient to address his Lordship in the terms of your letter which is before me, and the only effect of which must be to excite his Lordship's displeasure.

Of your Excellency's pecuniary demand against her Highness the Bhow Begum, which is stated in your letter to his Lordship, with the view, I presume, of soliciting his aid in the recovery of that demand, I have no information whatever.

Sixthly. With regard to her Highness the younger Begum, the many frivolous complaints, on points of the most trifling nature, which your Excellency has stated against her Highness, seem to me to be unbecoming in the extreme, and unworthy of your Excellency's mind, while some of them are totally erroneous. Having yesterday passed two complete hours in personal attendance on her Highness, I had the painful opportunity of listening to the detail of her grievances, and of observing the state of her accommodation, which, for your Excellency's sake, I could have wished to suppress, but which I shall now be compelled to report, by way of answer to your Excellency's complaint, and

Consultations,

and as a justification of her Highness's resolution to quit your Excellency's dominions.

Seventhly. With a reference to your Excellency's observation, that "attention to the interests and consideration for the conditions of those who have a title to the protection of the British Government have ever been deemed to be conducive to the increase of your own reputation, and that if the names and conditions of those who complain of injustice or disregard were known to you, &c." I should find no difficulty in furnishing your Excellency with a numerous list of such persons, in explanation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's remark, though his Lordship's letter in itself contain a few very striking examples; such, for instance, as their Highnesses the two Begums, Mirza Hoosein Alee Khan, Mohummud Tuhscen Alee Khan, and Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, which appear for the present to suffice. To those I might add, if it were necessary, the names of Mirza Cäsem Alee Khan, the widow and only legitimate sons of the late Ashruf Alee Khan, among persons of rank, and Moonshee Hoosein Alee Khan, Pershaud Sing Subadar, and some others, among persons of less consideration. But as it has always been, and is still my earnest and anxious wish, that your Excellency's generous and humane conduct to those persons, and others of a similar description, should hereafter be as generally known, and marked by the whole world, as its opposite has hitherto been, and should tend to strengthen and confirm the relations of amity between the two States, and to promote harmony in every branch of their intercourse with each other; under the influence of this cordial desire, I refrain from enlarging on the subject, and shall merely express my regret, that your Excellency should have introduced into your letter an inquiry which seems calculated to renew with additional grounds, instead of obviating the just grounds of the complaint that is stated in his Lordship's letter to your address.

Eighthly. On the case of Hoosein Alee Khan your Excellency has been pleased to remark, that "you have no knowledge whatever of the allowance alluded to, nor of the correspondence of that period." A complete and satisfactory answer to this remark was submitted at our conference on Tuesday, and can scarcely require to be repeated; but, for the sake of greater precision, I shall now state it in writing. The grant of the allowance in question, immediately after the death of the late Ameer-ood-Dowlah, by the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, is universally known to all ranks and descriptions of persons residing in this city. My information of its having been settled and regularly paid for a number of years is derived as well from the records of this government as of our own, at the period to which I have alluded, and consequently the obligation on your Excellency to continue it, can never be evaded by professing ignorance of the grant. In addition to which, I have recently had occasion to know from a communication from the Persian Secretary to Government, that when the Honourable Henry Wellesley came here for the purpose of promoting the conclusion of the treaty of cession with your Excellency, and discussions regarding the establishment of an efficient police in your Excellency's country arose, the question of the regular payment of the pensions granted by the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah to persons of distinction at Lucknow, was also agitated on that occasion, and the result of those discussions was this: That your Excellency should continue and regularly discharge the whole amount of the pensions which had been granted in your brother's time, as well as your own, and that the demand of our government regarding the police should be given up. But, independently of the above information, the official detail of the proceedings of Marquess Wellesley at Lucknow, and of his personal conferences with your Excellency, is conclusive on the question at issue; for it records your Excellency's promise, not only to continue the payment of the several pensions assigned for the support of your relations and dependants, but to liquidate all the arrears; and as it is abundantly obvious that Hoosein Alee Khan, and the other sons of Hyder Beg, must be comprehended in the number of persons of distinction dependent on your Excellency's government for their support, the delay of Hoosein Alee Khan for a time time to demand the payment of his pension can, on no principle of justice or humanity, have a tendency to prejudice his right.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
2 July 1813.

Enclosure.

Having thus, from motives of the purest friendship for your Excellency, explained and commented on such passages of your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General as seemed to me to have been unwisely introduced in it, or to require revisal and alteration, I have only to add a request that your Excellency, after maturely deliberating on what I have here written, will be pleased to determine on the expediency of transmitting your letter as it stands, without any further delay, or of recalling it for the purpose of revisal, and of suppressing such parts of its contents as may on reconsideration seem hostile to the spirit of friendship and cordiality, that should ever regulate the discussions between the British Government and your own.

You are well acquainted with the various acts of violence and oppression committed by the Aumils and Zemindars of my son's government against the people in my jagier, and you have often represented those circumstances, as explained to you by my letters, to my son, but no measures have hitherto been adopted to put a stop to them; and as I suffer a heavy loss from such proceedings, I have been compelled to address the Right Honourable the Governor-General on the subject, and enclose a letter to his Lordship, with a copy of it for your information. Letter
Lucknow.

I submit, for your Excellency's perusal, a copy of a letter just received from her Highness the Bhow Begum, complaining of the violent and oppressive proceedings of Umur Sing, your Excellency's Aumil of Baraich, in carrying away by force the whole of the produce of the disputed villages and lands in her Highness's district of Gonda, with a copy of an arzee on the same subject from the Zemindar of Bingha, Sheo Sing.

I have already, on several occasions, addressed your Excellency on this subject; and on one occasion, by your Excellency's desire, I pointed out the only mode which occurred to me of adjusting this unhappy dispute, and which your Excellency has been pleased to decline. In addition to this just ground of complaint on the part of her Highness the Begum, the recent atrocities of rapine and murder committed in other portions of her jagier by the subjects of your Excellency's government inhabiting and finding refuge in the khalsa, have been represented to your Excellency in vain, and her Highness has consequently been impelled to address a long letter of complaint on those points to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which she has transmitted to me for despatch.

From motives of genuine friendship for your Excellency, it is my sincere wish, if it be possible, to prevent the transmission of her Highness's letter to his Lordship; and, with this view, I submit that as her Highness's right to the disputed villages in Gonda has been established, in my mind, beyond a doubt, your Excellency should issue your orders to the Aumil of Baraich for his immediate surrender of those villages to Sheo Sing, Zemindar of Bingha, to whom the villages in question belong; or, if a doubt remain in your Excellency's mind of the justice of this measure, and you be desirous of a further investigation of the real merits of the case, that your Excellency concur with her Highness the Begum in referring the final decision of the point at issue to me, the friend and well-wisher of both parties, in which case, I shall depute an Ameen to investigate and report on the subject, and shall communicate my decision to your Excellency, with the least practicable delay.

If your Excellency will be pleased to agree to this proposal, and to promise the exertion of your authority for the redress of the other grievances complained of, I shall cheerfully suspend for a few days the transmission of her Highness's letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in the hope of accompanying the transmission of it with an assurance in behalf of your Excellency, that her Highness's grievances have been redressed. The satisfaction which his Lordship in Council must derive from intelligence so agreeable as this, and so conducive to your Excellency's reputation, will do more than compensate the delay.

Bhow Begum.

From her Highness the Bhow Begum. (Received the 5th October 1812.)

After presenting compliments and praying for your Lordship's health, I have the pleasure to inform you, that by the divine blessing I am well, and continually occupied in prayer for the agreeable tidings of your Lordship's welfare.

What account shall I give your Lordship of the disordered state of the affairs of my jagier? Many of the Aumils and Zemindars of the lands belonging to my son, the Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan (whose life may God prolong), commit acts of violence and oppression in my jagier, and occasion confusion and disorder in its affairs. Thus the Aumil of Baraitch for two years past has interfered with eighteen villages in the talooka of Bingha, a dependancy of the muhls of Gonda belonging to my jagier, on the plea of a dispute about the respective boundaries of Bingha and Baraitch, and some days ago he carried away the produce of the villages to a large amount, and he extorts sums of money from the Ryots whom he has seized. He has also placed his own people over seven other villages of Bingha. In like manner, two years past, the Zemindars of mouzah Surawan, in the district of Baraitch, have attached about seven hundred begahs of land in mouzah Dhuttolee, situated in zillah Ramaunpore, which belongs to Gonda, under the pretence of its being within the boundaries of their mouzah, and are prepared to take forcible possession of it. Accordingly, a few days ago they began to reap the crops of the lands situated on the frontier of the mouzah of Dhuttolee, upon which the Zemindars of that place resisted the attempt; but the Zemindars of Surawan having come in a large body with the intention of fighting, overcame those of Dhuttolee, seven of whom were killed by swords and fire-arms. The heirs of the slain are now besetting my deorhee, crying out for redress. Twenty days ago the Rajah of Kungole, situated in Baraitch, without any provocation, sent about four hundred matchlock-men into my jagier, when they killed Hunnoomaun Pooree Gossayne, the renter of mouzah Ramaunpore, a dependency of Gonda, and plundered his house of money and goods to the amount of nearly a lac of rupees.

Since last year, the Zemindars of Dhota, in the purgunnah of Dalmow, which belongs to his Excellency, have set up a claim to the lands of mouzah Shah-

Shahzādpore, in purgunnah Saloun, and excite disturbances. The Aumil of Dalmow sent a body of troops into the disputed lands, when they carried off the sons of Adhar Sing, the Zemindar of Shahzādpore, and they still refuse to release them.

Letter from the
Bhow Begum.

Moreover, in the vicinity of Nawaubgunge, and in the lands of Saloun, which belongs to my jagier, the Darogha of his Excellency's customs, at the desire of his Excellency, has forcibly established a new chowkee for the collection of duties, in consequence of which I have sustained a great pecuniary loss. In like manner, the Aumils of his Excellency's Government have been guilty of violence and oppression in many other villages of my jagier. I have repeatedly written to his Excellency and to the Resident. On his part, he also has made suitable representations to his Excellency, but without effect. The affairs of my jagier are daily falling into more and more confusion and disorder, and in consequence of these oppressive acts on the part of his Excellency's Aumils, the amount of the revenue realized from my jagier falls short of what it formerly was. As the British Government is bound to protect and defend my rights, and as I have every hope of receiving its aid and assistance, in consideration of our long established friendship, I trust that your Lordship will be kindly pleased to issue instructions to the Resident, calculated to restore order to the affairs of my jagier, so that the dispute about the boundaries of Bingha and Baraitch may be settled, the offenders be punished, all questions respecting jagier be adjusted, the plundered property be restored, and the Aumils and Zemindars be strictly enjoined not to commit in future any acts of violence or oppression in my lands, on pain of meeting the punishment due to their offence.

Deserters, also, from my jagier established themselves in the lands belonging to his Excellency, from whence, with the assistance of his Excellency's Zemindars, they come and excite disturbances in my villages. When I write to his Excellency on this subject, he practises evasion and delay, and I am unable to obtain any redress. On this account I sustain a great loss of revenue. I therefore request, that your Lordship will instruct the Resident to direct his attention to this point, and to take measures for the timely redress of such outrages in future. By your Lordship's kindness and favour, the affairs of my jagier will thus be restored to order, security will be afforded to my Ryots, and my mind will be satisfied and set at ease.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 30th ultimo,* conveying the instructions of the Government for my guidance with a reference to her Highness the younger Begum's departure from this country, and her future residence in the district of Elahabad.

2. The Begum quitted her jagier on the day which had been fixed for her departure, as announced in my despatch of the 19th ultimo, and proceeded across the Goomtie to the neighbourhood of Selimpore, about twenty miles from Lucknow, where her Highness halted for several days, at my suggestion, in the hope of receiving a letter from the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in answer to that which announced her resolution to quit the Vizier's country and reside in the Company's dominions.

3. On Thursday, the 19th instant, I paid a visit to her Highness in camp at Selimpore, and in compliance with the apparent wishes and the earnest desire of the Vizier, though with scarcely any hope of success on his or my own part, I renewed my endeavours to bring about a reconciliation between his Excellency and the Begum, and to prevail on her Highness to return to Lucknow, or take up her permanent residence in her jagier.

4. After

4. After occupying a considerable time in unavailing exertions and entreaties to the above effect, I deemed it proper to call her Highness's attention to the probability of increasing disturbances in her jagier, in consequence of her retirement from this country, and to suggest to her the necessity of some arrangement, which might ensure to her the means of subsistence during her residence in the Company's dominions.

5. It was her Highness's wish and expectation that I should assume the superintendence, and engage for the protection and support of her servants in the management of her jagier, and in the realization and remittance of its revenue; and on my stating a number of obstacles to, and explaining the impracticability of this measure, her Highness proposed as an alternative, the transfer of her jagier to the Honourable Company, in exchange for a portion of land of equal extent and produce in the Dooab, or on any other terms which the Government might be pleased to prescribe to her.

6. My rejection of this proposal, on grounds which it is unnecessary to state, was followed by a protracted discussion between her Highness the Begum and me, of the arrangement suggested by Government in the Chief Secretary's despatch to my address under date the 11th September, for the commutation of the jagier for a stipend proportioned to its produce, to be regularly paid by the Vizier into the treasury of the Resident at Lucknow; and I have great satisfaction in reporting, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, that I succeeded at length in obtaining her Highness the Begum's consent to the arrangement preferred by his Lordship, on the just and reasonable condition of the Vizier's combining with the stipend, or clear revenue of the jagier, the amount of a compensation in money for the provisions hitherto supplied from his Excellency's kitchen for her Highness's daily consumption.

7. A written authority for the final adjustment of the terms of this arrangement with the Vizier, in the name and behalf of the Begum, has been subsequently transmitted to me by her Highness; but I have hitherto delayed to commence the discussion of the subject with the Vizier, for the reason assigned in my despatch of the 15th ultimo to the Chief Secretary to Government, namely, my expectation of receiving a letter for his Excellency from the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which must tend greatly to promote the success of my negotiation, not only on this point, but also on the question which is at issue between the Vizier and the Begum of Fyzabad, namely, the superintendence and control of the khoord muhl.

8. A number of the women of the khoord muhl are still residing in the Emaum Barra, and occasionally clamorous for their stipends, which the Vizier has thought proper to issue to them, indirectly and secretly, with the view of encouraging their unreasonable and improper resistance to the authority of her Highness the Begum, and of the Nazir of her Highness's choice; while her Highness is extremely urgent with me for my support of her authority over the muhl, in terms of the Honourable Company's guarantee, and resolute in her refusal to issue the stipends of the women through any other medium than that of their ancient and respectable Nazir, Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan.

9. I transmit, for the information of the Government, the enclosed copy of a letter which I have addressed to the magistrate of Elahabad, on the subject of her Highness the younger Begum's departure to that district, and

1. Her Highness the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, widow of the late Nawaub Vizier, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, having determined, with the sanction of our Government, to depart from the province of Oude and to reside in the Honourable Company's territory, and her Highness having selected the city of Elahabad, or

or its neighbourhood, as the place of her future residence, I have been directed by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to correspond on this subject with you, to apprise you of the probable period of the Begum's arrival in your district, and to suggest to you the forms of respect with which her Highness should be treated on her arrival, and during her residence in the town or district of Elahabad.

2. The Begum has recently proceeded from her encampment on the bank of the Goomtie, and will probably reach the gath of Papamow on the Ganges, nearly opposite to Elahabad, about the 10th of the ensuing month. Her Highness is attended by an escort of the Honourable Company's troops, under the command of an English officer, Lieutenant Fell of the 10th Regiment, and this officer has been instructed by me to apprise you of the day of her Highness's arrival on the bank of the Ganges, with a view to your directing the supply of boats for her crossing the river, and provisions for her attendants and followers, including the escort, after their entrance into the district of Elahabad.

3. As a mark of respect for her Highness, on the day of her crossing the Ganges into the Honourable Company's territory, I suggest that the principal native officer, or tehsildar of the district, be instructed to attend in her Highness's camp, and to offer to her acceptance a nuzzur on his own part, and a sum of money, not less than a thousand rupees, with a small supply of the usual articles of consumption, such as rice, ghee, doll, goats, fowls, &c. as a zeafut on the part of the Government; and that, as soon as may be convenient after the Begum's arrival within your district, or at all events on the morning of her approach to Elahabad, you proceed in person to meet and receive her Highness, and conduct her to the spot which may be selected for her encampment, till a suitable place for her permanent residence can be found.

4. The Begum has understood and expressed her belief, that the house of the late Nawaub Khan-é Aulum, in the town of Elahabad, is the best adapted to the purpose of her accommodation, and that it is either at the disposal of Government, or may be rented on easy terms from the proprietor through the medium of your negotiation. In any of the cases supposed, I recommend that this house be assigned for her Highness's temporary residence; and, further, considering the present infirm and unhappy state of her Highness's health and her mind, I suggest that some well-enclosed garden, or if possible, a convenient garden-house and enclosure in the neighbourhood of the city, be appropriated to her use for a time, with the view of affording her the benefit of occasional changes of air and scene, till the perfect restoration of her health shall admit of the adoption of measures, under her own orders, and at her own charge, for her comfortable permanent establishment.

5. With a reference to the high rank and the truly respectable character of her Highness the Begum, it appears to be superfluous to add, that every possible degree of respectful attention to her wishes, and of consideration for her comfort and ease, should be practised on all occasions by yourself and by those under your authority, while her Highness may reside in your district.

6. The Begum's principal eunuch and minister, Mohummud Nushāt Alee Khan, or a confidential person on his part, will be the usual medium of communication between her Highness and you.

Sir :

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, and transmitted to the Persian Department, a letter addressed by his Excellency to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, on the subject of her Highness the younger Begum's departure from this country ; in which his Excellency expresses extraordinary concern at her Highness's departure, and ascribes it erroneously, in my opinion, to the evil counsels and the interested designs of a few of her Highness's servants ; inferring, on their parts, a resolution to appropriate to themselves the personal property and wealth of the Begum, in the case of her demise on the journey or soon after her arrival at Elahabad ; an event which his Excellency believes to be probable, and to which he looks forward with no other concern, I apprehend, than as it may affect his personal claims, or his views regarding the succession to her Highness's property.

2. The Begum has been seriously indisposed since she proceeded on her journey from Selimpore, and has halted for several days in the Bow Begum's jagier, where she expected to meet, and has certainly met with much greater attention and kindness than in his Excellency's territory. But my latest accounts from her camp give no reason to apprehend her sudden demise, nor indeed any great protraction of her illness, and his Excellency's alarms upon that score seem to me to be disproportioned to the occasion.

3. With regard, however, to the disposal of her Highness's property after her death, whenever that event may take place, there seems good reason to believe that she has already provided, or will make a provision, for the disposal of it, by bequests during her life-time ; and considering her Highness's situation with a reference to his Excellency the Vizier, as well as the nature, exclusively personal, of her property, with the exception of her jagier, there seems to me to be no doubt of her perfect competency to dispose of it according to the dictates of her inclination.

4. His Excellency the Vizier, in his letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, having referred to and transmitted a copy of a letter to my address, expressive of his anxiety to be reconciled to the Begum and for her Highness's return to Lucknow, I deem it to be my duty to convey to you, for his Lordship in Council's perusal, a translation of the letter in question, with copies and translations of letters and other documents submitted by me to his Excellency, to which that letter is a reply.

5. The Vizier had originally replied to my letters in very different terms from those of the documents which he refers to in his address to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and it was not until I had laboured for several hours at a conference with his Excellency, on the morning of the 18th ultimo, to convince him of the impropriety of the terms of his first letters on this subject, that he agreed to recall those letters, and to substitute one in their stead, according to a draft which I submitted to him, and which is now referred to by his Excellency as the dictates of his own inclination, the genuine sentiments of his mind on the question of the Begum's departure. I transmit, for more particular information, translations of the letters which were recalled.

6. Regarding the claim of her Highness the Begum for the restitution of the lands and houses at Delhi, the unquestionable property of her ancestors, which are now possessed by the Vizier, as his Excellency seems resolved to retain them, and to appropriate the rents of them hereafter, as heretofore, to himself, notwithstanding his original promise to restore them, I see no other more satisfactory nor more effectual mode of the adjustment of this claim, than by referring it to the Resident at Delhi, before whom, if it be necessary, the question may be judicially tried.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received two letters from you, dated the 4th and 12th of Zeekaud (9th and 17th instant), on the subject of the affairs of her Highness the Bhabee Begum.

I have ever been, and am still, extremely concerned at the departure of her Highness from this city, and the thoughts of the difficulties which she must encounter on her journey from the inclemency of the season afflict me in a great degree. I consider her Highness's residence in this city as tending to promote its prosperity, and therefore I most anxiously desire that she may be induced to return, and increase the splendour of Lucknow by residing in it. If her Highness be desirous of a change of scene and air, she is heartily welcome to occupy my garden-house of Nawaubunge, or any other palace or garden of mine for a time; and should she prefer it, the palace of the Golden Dome, which is a very large and spacious building, is entirely at her service as a future residence.

It is the sincere wish of my heart, that her Highness should continue to reside in this city, and to enjoy every degree of ease and comfort which is possible; and I earnestly request that you will use every means in your power, to induce her to return to Lucknow. With regard to the future satisfaction of the Begum, and the fulfilment of all her reasonable wishes and views, no fault shall be committed hereafter on my part: and, with a view to her immediate gratification, I agree to commute the provisions which are cooked and supplied to her Highness by my officers, though it be contrary to the custom of my Government, for a certain allowance of money, according to your desire; and, further, I solemnly promise, if her Highness return to Lucknow, to enlarge, as far as may be practicable, the place of her former residence, never to molest the Beoparies and others attached to her bazar, and to restore, as far as in my power, the good order and tranquillity of her jagier.

After explaining all these circumstances, and conveying those assurances to the Begum, if you deem it advisable and proper, I shall go out myself to Selimpore, repeat to her in person what I have here written, and accompany her back to Lucknow; and if, after all this, she be dissatisfied, and determine to quit my country, it cannot be imputed to me.

I have the honour of submitting for your Excellency's perusal, the enclosed copy of a letter which I have received from her Highness the Begum, Shums-on-Nissa.

Her Highness, being now firmly resolved to take up her residence in one of the cities in the Honourable Company's territory, will probably march from Pertaubunge in a few days. She has called on me for the settlement of two particular claims which are connected with your Excellency's Government.

1st. The commutation of the provisions hitherto supplied to her Highness from your Excellency's kitchen for a monthly sum of money, agreeably to the adjustment which took place in the time of the late Colonel Scott; and

2d. The restoration of sums collected from her Highness's hereditary possessions in Delhi since your Excellency's accession to the musnud, with a shookha to your Darogha at Delhi, directing the surrender of those possessions to a person whom her Highness may appoint, agreeably to your Excellency's promise, conveyed in a letter to her Highness on a former occasion, a copy of which, with a list of all her possessions, I forward for your Excellency's information.

The justice of her Highness's claim with reference to those two points seems to me to be altogether unquestionable, and will, I doubt not, be admitted by your Excellency; because it is obvious, that no loss can arise to your Government from the commutation of provisions for the money which those provisions have uniformly cost, and because I am satisfied that your Excellency could never wish to derive personal advantage from the possessions of her Highness or her ancestors in Delhi.

Having recently received the orders of Government for the adjustment of all questions relating to the Begum before her departure, I trust that your Excellency will be pleased to communicate your sentiments on the subject of those two claims at your earliest convenience, that I may apprize her Highness the Begum of the result of my application in her behalf, and report the result to the Government before her Highness's departure.

On Thursday, the 19th instant, it is my intention to proceed to Selimpore to wait on her Highness the Begum, with the view of renewing my endeavours to suspend her Highness's departure, and by assuring her of your Excellency's promise to accede to all her wishes, to pave the way for her return to Lucknow. Yet, I confess, that I have no hope whatever of her Highness's return to this city, unless, indeed, as formerly suggested, your Excellency were to proceed to her encampment, and renew and confirm those assurances which I have hitherto conveyed to her in vain. For the purpose of aiding my own exertions on this occasion, I again solicit and recommend your Excellency's cheerful acquiescence in the two claims of the Begum, which were conveyed to you by my letter of the 4th of Zeekaud (9th November), that I may communicate this result to her Highness.

Extract of a Letter from His Excellency the Vizier to Her Highness the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, dated the 1st of Ramzaun 1215. (17th January 1801.)

I have received your Highness's gracious letter in answer to mine.

With regard to your Highness's complaint regarding the house Mutchee Buhwun, it is very surprising that your Highness should not have at once understood that my promise to give it up to you was merely a respectful mode of refusing; for had I given up Mutchee Buhwun to your Highness, where could I have found a place so spacious as to contain the furniture, &c. that is kept in it? Out of respect I could not flatly refuse your Highness, and therefore I was induced to make a promise.

With a reference to your possessions in Delhi, no one ever reminded me of the matter, and the delay must be ascribed to forgetfulness alone. If your Highness will now be pleased to send a person with a list of those possessions, I will issue a shookha, directing the surrender of them to the person appointed by you to take charge.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have received your letter, dated the 4th of Zeekād (9th instant), containing a copy of a letter from the Babhee Begum to your address, a copy of my letter to the Begum dated the 1st of Ramzaun 1215, and a list of the possessions of her Highness at Delhi, and requesting my compliance with the wishes of the Begum regarding the provisions supplied to her from my kitchen, and the surrender of her possessions in Delhi.

The degree of her Highness's displeasure against me, and of my wish for a reconciliation, as explained in my letter to the Governor-General, have long been apparent, and in proportion to my sincere desire for a reconciliation, her anger has hitherto increased ; nor is there any appearance of returning cordiality on her part. I have stated my wishes to you on this subject frequently ; and you, too, have explained matters to her Highness, in the manner which you considered the most advisable, but it has hitherto made no impression on her whatever.

The supply of provisions for her Highness's consumption has been, and is now, on the same footing as it was at the time of my arrival in this country. Even after her Highness's retirement to her jagier, her victuals were sent out to her as usual by my orders, and her Highness drove away the Darogha and others from her camp, and took from them the plates, cooking-pots, &c., which she has kept with her. Consider how little respect her Highness has shewn for me on this occasion.

With regard to the commutation of the provisions for a sum of money, I cannot determine till I receive an answer to my letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, dated the 30th of Shabaun (8th September last) : and with a reference to her Highness's possessions in Delhi, as they were in the time of my deceased brother under his authority, so they still remain under my authority: I did not resume them from the Begum; and consequently her claim for the restitution by me of possessions which descended to me with the Government can on no principle be admitted.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 17th November 1812, 12th Zeekād 1227.)

I have received your letter of this date, stating your intention of proceeding on Thursday, the 14th of Zeekād (19th instant), to Selimpore, to wait on her Highness the Bhabee Begum, with the view of renewing your endeavours, &c. (recapitulate). Do, by all means, as you propose, and in the manner which may appear most advisable, exhort the Begum to return: it will be very satisfactory to me.

With regard, however, to your assuring her of my promise to accede to all her wishes, &c., the case is this: I do not know what her Highness's wishes are, and consequently I cannot authorize you to promise a compliance with them on my part.

With a reference to your suggestion of the propriety of my proceeding to her Highness's encampment and renewing my assurances, &c. &c., you will recollect, that at our conference on Saturday, when you mentioned to me that the return of her Highness by any means would be agreeable to yourself and highly reputable to me, I answered, that if you thought it advisable I would write a letter to, or wait in person on her Highness, and your reply was that I might do whatever I thought proper; and when I observed further, that there was none besides yourself whom I could consult in such a case, you made no answer to that observation.

My son-in-law, Hoosein-ood-Deen Khan, waited on her Highness by my desire, and implored her to return, but was taken no notice of, nor paid any attention to whatever; I therefore leave you to judge what benefit is to be expected by my going.

from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 12th December 1812.)

After expressing my desire for the pleasure of a personal meeting with your Lordship, which is the chief object of my wishes, I proceed to remind your Lordship that on the last day of Shabaun 1227 Hijeree, corresponding with the 8th September, 1812, I transmitted a letter to the address of your Lordship respecting her Highness Bhabee Begum (Shums-oon-Nissa), which contained an account of the real state of her case, but I have not yet had the pleasure to receive an answer to that communication. As the Begum has, however, lately come to a fixed determination to retire from Lucknow, I herewith forward, for your Lordship's information, a copy of the reply which I returned to two representations which were conveyed to me on that subject by Major Baillie. The circumstances of Major Baillie's interview with the Begum, and the particulars of what passed on that occasion, will doubtless have been fully communicated to you by that gentleman.

My

My Lord, the fact of the matter is this: her Highness, Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, has been induced to leave this city, at the instigation of two or three persons, who will in all probability practice some deception upon her, and in case of her death (which God forbid!) possess themselves of her property and effects. It is with this view that those evil advisers have set her Highness at variance against me, her nephew, her niece, and her late brother's widow. In short, her Highness not returning to Lucknow has been injurious to my reputation, and has occasioned me much inquietude and uneasiness of mind.

*Translation of a Copy of a Letter under date the 13th of Zeekād (19th November 1812) from his Excellency the Vizier to Major Baillie, in Reply to two Letters from the latter respecting Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, referred to in the foregoing.

Letter

Lucknow.

Sir :

1. The letter from his Excellency the Vizier to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, in reply to his Lordship's letter of the 8th of May last, which his Excellency transmitted to me on the 26th of the month of August, and shortly after recalled for the purpose of revisal and amendment, (as announced in my despatch to the Chief Secretary to Government under date the 1st September,) has been returned to me this day by the Vizier, without any alteration whatever, save the omission of those paragraphs which had reference to the question of the superintendence of the khoord muhl, and to the departure of the younger Begum from Lucknow. It is accompanied by an answer to my memorial, under date the 29th of August last, a copy of which was transmitted in my despatch of the 18th of September: a translation of his Excellency's answer, with such remarks as the tenor of it may suggest to me, shall be submitted to the notice of the Government with the least practicable delay.

2. I have had many conferences with the Vizier during the period which he has avowedly occupied in reconsidering the tenor of his letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General's address, and I have laboured at each of those conferences with increasing zeal and assiduity, to convince him of the justice and necessity of his acquiescence in his Lordship's views.

3. The failure of my endeavours is ascribable, in my own judgment, to his Excellency's untoward disposition, to the habitual, I may add, constitutional jealousy and suspicion with which he has ever received propositions of the simplest nature and most beneficial tendency on the part of the British Government, and to the hope of protracting, at least, if not of evading, a compliance with its just views and requisitions, founded on the known reluctance of the Government to urge matters to extremity with him, or to adopt even the language of demand under any circumstances whatever.

4. I have transmitted his Excellency's letter in a despatch of this date to the Secretary in the Persian department.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 14th December 1812.)

After expressing my desire for the pleasure of a personal meeting with your Lordship, which is the chief object of my wishes, I proceed to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter of the 8th of May last, replete with sentiments of friendship and regard, and stating that you had expected to receive answers to your letter of the 28th of December 1810; and to two letters from the Vice-President, of the 29th of March and 12th of July 1811, the former on the subject of the claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, and the latter in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan, son of the late Hyder Beg Khan. I have fully understood the contents of your Lordship's letter. The suspension and delay which have occurred in the transmission of an answer have been occasioned by the discussions which have taken place between me and Major Baillie. The objections which occurred to my mind during those discussions I stated to the Resident in writing. As those objections have not yet been removed by Major Baillie, and as the execution of the several matters of business which formed the subjects of discussion has consequently remained suspended, from motives of respect and consideration for your Lordship, which I am ever disposed and attentive to observe, I suspended the transmission of my reply to your Lordship's letter. An answer to the letters of the Vice-President was not written, for reasons which are contained in the present letter to your Lordship's address. Now that your Lordship has kindly called me to your recollection, and favoured me with your letter above acknowledged, I consider it to be an indispensable duty to transmit a reply to your Lordship, and I proceed accordingly to state what is necessary to be represented. Under every circumstance, my expectation from the chiefs of the British Government, and especially from so kind a friend as your Lordship, is, that in the affairs of my Government, and in the dominions subject to me, as well as in all my concerns, my power and authority may daily be strengthened and increased, and that, in the spirit of the friendship and amity established of old between the two States, and which is conspicuous to all the world, no manner of loss, injury, detriment, or diminution may take place, and that counsel and advice, such as may be productive of salutary effects, may be afforded to me by the chiefs of the British Government, and more especially by your Lordship.

In your letter of the 28th of December 1810, your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that by the terms of the sixth article of the treaty of November 1801, I engaged to establish in my reserved dominions such a system of administration, to be carried into effect by my own officers, as should be conducive to the prosperity of my subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants; and further, that with reference to this particular stipulation, the late Governor-General, Marquess Wellesley, in a paper which he delivered to me under his seal and signature, in the year 1802, observed that I had engaged to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its counsels in the establishment of an improved system of administration within the reserved dominions, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of those dominions, and with the usual exercise of my established authority, and so forth. What your Lordship has written as above is right and true, nor is there any denial on my part. The case is this: At a former period I was desirous of sending my son with a detachment of British troops for the settlement of my reserved dominions, and that with the approbation of Major Baillie the Resident, he might establish a system of administration in those dominions. When I consulted the Resident on this point, that gentleman clearly and explicitly signified his prohibition, saying that in an affair of this kind the nomination and deputation of the Sahib Zadah, (that is to say my son,) were not necessary. The establishment of a system of administration was therefore not carried into execution. Your Lordship will decide with justice, that in the introduction and establishment of a system of administration in my dominions, and in advising with the British Government on that subject according to my engagements, I have not failed; and, with respect to the system proposed by your Lordship in your letter above quoted, it was not carried into effect, in consequence of some doubts and objections which occurred to my mind. Those objections were repeatedly stated by me in writing to the Resident, and personally discussed between us. Conformably to the dictates of the friendship which I entertain for your Lordship, I now feel it to be an incumbent duty that I should, of necessity, state some of those objections for your consideration. They are as follow. Your Lordship, in your letter above quoted, has written, "that if the assessment of the lands throughout the country should be regulated by the real assets of the several districts, to be ascertained by actual investigation and be fixed for a certain time, and if that assessment should be increased only in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the several districts, which might be expected to arise from an approved system of administration," and so forth. The case is this: that without the actual measurement of the lands of the several mouzahs and villages of the country, and without ascertaining the particular quantity of cultivated lands and lands capable of cultivation, village by village, and the boundaries accurately defined, and unless the Canoongoes, Chowdries, and Putwarries give a detailed statement of all these particulars and conceal nothing, and the Zemindars make no objection to the measurement of their lands, it appears to me that it will be difficult to ascertain the real assets of the several districts. With respect to the deputation of Ameens to ascertain all those particulars, apprehensions occur to me with regard to misconduct on their part, and to emigration and disgust on the part of the cultivators and renters, and to disorder and interruption in the receipt of the revenues, and to failure in the payment of balances in consequence of the introduction of a new system. All these objections will have been made known to your Lordship, by the perusal of the letters which I addressed on this subject to the Resident.

Letter
from the Vizier.

With respect to Major Baillie's representation on the subject of establishing courts of Adwlut and police in the several districts of my dominions under the management of officers of my Government, I am willing to appoint officers to those situations, conformably with the Resident's advice; but the accomplishment of these two objects cannot be contemplated, until every rebel and disaffected person in my territory shall have at once been effectually punished and rooted out of the country; until they find that if they seek an asylum in the British territories they will not be able to maintain themselves there; until they be utterly extirpated, and the troops never desist from pursuing them; and, finally, until they be convinced that there is no place where they can establish themselves secure from the troops of the Government. Thus, in the Honourable Company's dominions, whatever turbulent or disaffected person is proceeded against, until he is effectually punished he does not cease from his evil courses. Moreover, in the police establishment of each individual place, where the people of the establishment, according to the system, can only be few in number, how will they be able to maintain order, when the turbulent and disaffected shall excite disturbance in large bodies.

With reference to your Lordship's observation regarding the right of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands on my part and on the part of my Aumils, as the British troops may be required to support, and so forth. Whatever plan your Lordship may be pleased to adopt, for the purpose of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands, so that my independent power and authority, as established by treaty, may not thereby be impaired, and my dignity and consequence be not diminished in the slightest degree in the eyes of my subjects, have the goodness to communicate it to me and I am at your command. As I consider your Lordship to be my sincere and affectionate friend; as all my prosperity, welfare, comfort, and happiness, depend on your kindness and favour; and as, excepting the members of the British Government and your Lordship in particular, I know no protector and succourer, if your Lordship, which God forbid, shall be dilatory and forgetful in affording me aid and assistance, and in taking a warm and active interest in the arrangement and settlement of my affairs, know for a certainty, that then, in such an event, the settlement and reform of my government will be difficult to be accomplished by me.

Your Lordship has been pleased to observe, "that it may not have occurred to me that your Lordship's temporary absence from the Presidency produced no change in the authority of the Government," and so forth. My Lord, I who am your well-wisher, and firmly attached to you, entertain the same sentiments of regard and attachment towards you in all circumstances and at all times, equally in your presence and absence, when you are near and when you are far distant. Such a thought my imagination is not capable of conceiving. You will be pleased to consider such a representation, by whomsoever it may have been made, to be entirely erroneous. On mature reflection, your Lordship will be satisfied that a charge of the nature alluded to cannot with justice be attached to me.

Your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that "I should no longer delay " to exert my authority for the redress of the wrongs of which Moonshee Alec " Nuckee Khan has so much reason to complain." I never did nor ever can entertain the idea of sacrificing the rights of any individual. The state of the case is this: The claims of Moonshee Alec Nuckee Khan are of two kinds, one against my government, and the other against his partners and associates. With respect to the first, let the Moonshee produce the original sunnuds in succession, under the seal of my father, the late Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah, and the seal of my brother, the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, for the purpose of substantiating his claim and for my examination. In the event of his proving that the sources of provision stated in those sunnuds have been withheld during my government, I will order them to be restored to him. With respect to the claims which he has against his partners, let him refer them to the court of Adawlut, where they will be decided according to the holy law. On this subject I have stated to your Lordship what appears fit to me; but if it be not deemed so by your Lordship, be pleased to signify your wishes in this affair, that I may carry them into effect.

With reference to what your Lordship has written with your friendly pen, that "you have to regret the uniform disposition on my part to mark with my displeasure all those who are entitled to the protection and favour of the British " Government, and to exhibit the inefficacy of its counsels on points affecting the " honour and interests of my Government," I have to observe, that as I consider my prosperity and welfare to depend on the augmentation of the ties of friendship and union, and on the consolidation of the foundations of unanimity and concord with the British Government, and on the favour and kindness of your Lordship, which hitherto have happily increased from day to day; and as I deem attention to the interests, and consideration for the conditions of those who have a title to the protection of the British Government to be conducive to the increase of my own reputation, how is it possible that I should mark such persons with my displeasure? If your Lordship had been kindly pleased to apprise me of the names and conditions of the persons alluded to, I should have entered into the particulars. How is it possible that I should turn away from the counsel and suggestions of the British Government after discussion and explanation, or that I should act contrary thereto? At every time and every moment I have acted, and continue to act, in conformity to the counsel and advice of the British Government and the Resident. But with respect to a matter of business, the accomplishment of which does not appear to me to be practicable, and on which for my proper understanding of it discussions take place, your Lordship will yourself be pleased to judge how my judgment can be satisfied with respect to it, or the accomplishment of it can be contemplated.

With respect to what your Lordship has written on the subject of my exerting my authority to restrain or punish my officers and Zemindars, who afford protection and assistance to robbers and marauders, and to withhold them from the exaction of duties on merchandize in boats passing up and down in violation of treaty, I assure your Lordship that, conformably to your wishes, I have always been and continue to be ready and disposed to adopt measures for that purpose; nor have I ever been neglectful or remiss in that respect. Accordingly, the seizure of the marauder Budjha Sing has always been and is an object of my attention. If a copy of the letter from Major Baillie to my address, dated the 14th of Rubbee-oos-Sanee 1227 (27th April 1812, A.D.), in reply to my letter of the preceding day, in which Major Baillie expresses his approbation of the measures pursued by me in this affair, and his intention of transmitting it to your Lordship, that you might be apprized of the care and pains which I had taken to effect the seizure of the marauder in question, had been received by your Lordship before the despatch of your Lordship's letter, I am satisfied that you would not have had to express your regret and concern with respect to this point. The most positive orders and injunctions are at all times issued by me to the Aumils on on this subject, and what power have my Aumils and Zemindars to act contrary to my orders, and to aid and assist robbers and marauders? As it is not the practice of robbers and marauders, with reference to their own evil deeds, to fix their residence permanently in any one place, their detection and seizure must be attended with extreme trouble and difficulty. Thus, on the 6th of April last, Captain MacPherson proceeded with a detachment of British troops with the utmost secrecy and caution to the village of Jheona, in my dominions, and surrounded it; but after great and diligent search after Budjha Sing, was unable to find him. On the 4th of Jemmadee-oos-Sanee (14th June 1812, A.D.), several English officers stationed at Bheela Gaut set out with a body of horse and telingas (infantry) to surprise a band of robbers at Mulpoor, near Umree, a dependency of Pertaubghur, when, after long and diligent search, they succeeded in apprehending only one person, named Sheo Dut. None of the other robbers and marauders could be found. Adverting, therefore, to the nature and habits of those who lead a predatory life, I am persuaded that your Lordship will not impute the want of success in apprehending and punishing them to any deficiency of exertion or zeal on the part of the Aumils. Your Lordship will also be pleased to reflect, that many turbulent and disaffected persons who have left my territories and taken up their residence within the Company's dominions, from whence, when opportunity offers, they make incursions into my country for the purpose of plunder, escape being apprehended and punished, notwithstanding the orders of the Resident and the most active exertions by the Magistrates of the districts. With regard to the exaction of the duties on merchandize, I have at all times prohibited and continue to prohibit such practices; and your Lordship will be apprized by the Resident's communication, of the measures which I have lately adopted for that purpose.

Letter
from the Vizier.

On the subject of the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, son of Hyder Beg Khan, your Lordship has written, that you have little to add to the just and forcible observations contained in the Vice-President's letter to my address of the 12th of July 1811. The state of the case is this: His Excellency the Vice-President wrote to me on the subject of compelling Akbur Alee Khan to make over to his brother, Hoosein Alee Khan, his just share of their family property, and of restoring a certain allowance for the support of the latter. I have no knowledge whatever of the grant of the allowance alluded to, or of the correspondence of that period. At a former time, when Hoosein Alee Khan rented from my Government the lands of Sundeela and Mulleehabad, on his being turned out of those lands he paid the balances due to my Government, partly by borrowing money from the late Almas Alee Khan, and partly by raising it in whatever manner he could, but he never stated any claim of right to an allowance, nor did his elder brother Akbur Alee Khan make any claim. When the late Colonel Scott was Resident at my court, no mention was ever made of the allowance alluded to; and at the time of Lord Teignmouth's visit to Lucknow, when the treaty was concluded between the two Governments, on which occasion the stipends of many persons were confirmed and of some augmented, and all points of business were settled and adjusted, I heard nothing of the allowance in question. In like manner, not a word was said about it in Lord Wellesley's time, and no mention was made of it during the negotiation of the treaty. On various occasions I have accommodated Hoosein Alee Khan with loans of money on his application for that purpose, sometimes of my own accord, and at other times at the instance of the Resident. But if the Khan had had any knowledge of the provision in question, he would have made an application to me for its restoration. I must be excused, therefore, in not having granted that allowance. With respect to giving Hoosein Alee Khan his share of the family property, his brother Akbur Alee Khan is still confined under a guard of British troops, and Hoosein Alee Khan may take it from his brother in whatever manner he can; or let him point out where his father's property is, that it may be given to him. The Resident having some time since repeatedly requested my permission for Hoosein Alee Khan's taking possession of some gardens and houses belonging to his late father Hyder Beg Khan I signified my consent, and the Khan is accordingly busy in digging and selling them, without fixing or specifying what his share is. As I am ready and willing to adopt any measures by which Hoosein Alee Khan may obtain his just share of the property, whatever your Lordship shall be pleased to

Consultations,

to dictate with respect to causing Akber Alee Khan to give up his brother's share, I will act accordingly.

As I swerve not from the path of compliance with your Lordship's wishes, if, besides this, there be any thing else which your Lordship is desirous of being done for Hoosein Alee Khan, I am ready to do it to the extent of my ability.

As my ease, comfort, security, tranquillity, my power and authority in the regulation and administration of the affairs of my country, and the welfare and prosperity of my Government, all depend on the favour and kindness of your Lordship, I entertain a confident persuasion, that by your kind care and attention the foundations of my Government will daily be more and more strengthened and consolidated. The execution and accomplishment of all matters connected with my Government, the interests of which are identified with those of the British Government, entirely depend on the favour and regard with which your Lordship may be pleased to consider them.

If your Lordship will be graciously pleased to consider me to be entirely at your disposal, and, abstaining from all discussions, will kindly devote your time and attention to the promotion of my dignity and authority, all points will be happily arranged and accomplished. The sole wish of my heart is, that being enabled by your Lordship's kindness and favour to pass the few days which may remain to me of this precarious existence in the possession of honour, dignity, authority, and affluence, I may employ myself in expressing my sense of gratitude and obligation to your Lordship; for in this transitory world I have no kind friend or protector to succour and assist me, save yourself. But should any question be agitated, God forbid that I should think it proper to dispute a single point of what your Lordship may propose; nor will I ever do so. My hopes and expectations are, that your Lordship, in the spirit of sincere and cordial friendship and affection, will watch over my interests at all times, and never for a moment be neglectful of them.

May the days of your Lordship's prosperity and happiness be perpetual.

(Signed) GEORGE SWINTON,
Deputy Persian Secretary to Government.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To John Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir :

1. I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, a copy and translation of the statement received from his Excellency the Vizier with his letter to the Governor-General, and intended as an answer to the memorial which I submitted to his Excellency on the 29th of August last.

2. In this statement his Excellency sets out with an indirect disavowal of any proposition for the appointment of one of his sons to superintend the collection of his revenue before my arrival at his Court. He calls upon me to detail to him what occurred on that subject before my arrival at Lucknow, and he declares his recollection of a proposal, not previous but subsequent to my arrival, which was suspended in consequence of my disapproving it.

3. The Vizier's letter to Colonel Collins, dated the 17th of Zeebije 1221, submitted to Government in Colonel Collins's despatch of the 7th of March 1807, and the instructions of the Government to Colonel Collins dated the 19th of that month, serve to demonstrate the truth of the remark in my memorial, which his Excellency has thought proper to disavow, and to prove that neither his original proposal to Colonel Collins for the deputation of one of his sons, nor the renewal of that proposal to me, could have been accompanied by any plan of a settlement or system of assessment of his revenues, the disapprobation or rejection of which by the British Government could have served to exonerate his Excellency from the express obligation of the treaty which gave rise to the question of reform.

4. His Excellency's next observation regarding the necessity of an actual measurement of all the lands in his dominions, and of the removal of all his imaginary doubts before any reform of his administration can commence, seems totally unworthy of notice, and is of a piece with the following remark:—"That courts of justice and police must be unavailing, till the extirpation of all disaffected persons from Oude." To the first observation it might be answered, if further answer were requisite, that measurement, in as far as may be necessary, is a branch of the improved system proposed, and that the adoption and exercise of this system must gradually produce the information which measurement is calculated to afford. To the second remark it might be answered, in the spirit and character of the remark, that under the present system of the Vizier's Government, the disaffected persons in Oude must be another name for its population, and that his Excellency would seem inclined to suspend the dispensation of justice to his people till his people shall be totally extinct.

5. His Excellency's objection to the appointment of Ameen upon my part, and his desire that the Governor-General should devise some other arrangement, for the investigation of his demands against landholders, whom our troops may be required to coerce, are obviously frivolous and evasive. The usual tenor of the instructions issued to officers in command of detachments employed against his Excellency's landholders, has uniformly prescribed their investigation of the Aumils' demands, and their attention to the complaints of the landholders, and if the Vizier could not reasonably object to those instructions being issued to our officers, there seems no plausible ground for his objection to the measure which is now proposed, exactly similar in its nature, though more effectual in its exercise than the former.

6. With a reference to the just and established claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan to his nankar and zemindaree rights in the district of Sandee, which the Vizier has been pleased to compare with his own disputed right to an extension of the limits of his rumna, involving in this comparison a parallel between his Excellency's Adawlut at Lucknow and the British courts of justice at Benares, it seems necessary merely to state, that the Moonshee's claims have been already established by the exhibition of attested copies of sunnuds which his Excellency has received but refused to compare with the originals, thus admitting the authenticity of the copies, and further, by the unmolested possession of the Moonshee and his ancestors during a period of several ages; and with regard to the Moonshee's disputes with the subjects of this Government, which his Excellency would refer to the Adawlut of Lucknow, that the Moonshee, in common with every other dependant of the British Government in Oude, will gladly submit his case to the Adawlut, on the indispensable and hitherto admitted condition of the proceedings of the Adawlut in such cases being subject to the Resident's revision, or of their being public, and regulated by the principles and practice of every well-constituted court of justice in the world, in opposition to the Adawlut of Lucknow, whose proceedings are notoriously guided by the private orders of the sovereign, and its decrees the dictates of his will.

7. His Excellency proceeds in his statement to refute the complaint of his unkindness and want of consideration towards the dependants of the British Government, by retorting an accusation of those persons who are mentioned in my memorial, and first of their Highnesses the Begums.

8. A complete and satisfactory reply to his Excellency's statement, as regarding the elder Begum, will be found in her Highness's letter to my address under date the 9th ultimo, a translation of which is enclosed, and a copy of which has been submitted to the Vizier. In this letter her Highness conveys a list of her grievances, and in the genuine spirit of a firm reliance on the justice and impartiality of the British Government, which she justly considers as by treaty alike the guardian and guarantee of her own and her son's rights. She calls on the Government to investigate and decide upon all the matters in dispute, and binds herself to abide by its decision.

9. I deem it to be my duty to submit on this occasion, for the serious consideration of the Government, whether or not we be bound, by the spirit and letter of our engagements with his Excellency the Vizier and with the Begum, to accede

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at

to her Highness's proposal, to arbitrate all the questions in dispute, and to enforce the execution of our decision by placing her Highness's officers in possession of whatever may be proved to be her right.

10. The question of the younger Begum's departure from Lucknow, and all the circumstances attending or connected with it, are so fully before the Government as to supersede any further remarks.

11. Hoosein Alee Khan and Tuhseen Alee Khan are notoriously the victims of his Excellency's displeasure and resentment. The former is absolutely starving, and the latter, though still in the possession of a small jagier, the grant of the former Government, has been successively deprived of every lucrative and respectable employment which he held at the time of the Vizier's accession to the musnud.

12. The just claim of the Nawaub Casem Alee Khan for the full amount of his monthly stipend, as stated in Lord Teignmouth's letter to the Resident at Lucknow dated the 28th of January 1798, a considerable portion of which is now withheld by the Vizier, has been long under the consideration of the Government, and a letter from his Excellency to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, containing many of the frivolous complaints which are now exhibited against Casem Alee Khan, was transmitted to the Persian department in my despatch of the 28th of September 1809. A satisfactory answer to most if not all of those complaints may be seen in my letters to your predecessor, dated the 28th of July and 28th of September 1809.

13. The charge of violence committed by the servants of Casem Alee Khan against a woman named Luchmee is erroneous in the extreme. Luchmee is one of Casem Alee Khan's wives, who, in consequence of some trifling domestic dispute, thought proper to quit her habitation, and was brought back to it with some trouble and persuasion by the children and servants of Casem Alee. She has since been reconciled to, and is living in peace with, her husband.

14. In reply to his Excellency's observation regarding the widow and legitimate children of the late Ashruf Alee Khan, it appears to be sufficient to state, and is worthy of particular notice, that the arrears of the stipend of this family for a period of seven months were issued from his Excellency's treasury, in consequence of my repeated and earnest remonstrances, on the day before this statement was received. It is a common practice with his Excellency to occasion and maintain a voluminous correspondence or a verbal discussion during months, for the purpose of evading a compliance with some simple proposition or some just requisition on my part, and when at length compelled to acquiesce by my temperate perseverance in the discussion, to take an early opportunity of boasting of his cheerful acquiescence in my views, his ready dispensation of justice to the person whose claim I may recommend to him. The present is an instance in point of the characteristic feature which I describe, and of which numerous instances might be quoted.

15. With reference to the two remaining persons who are mentioned in his Excellency's statement, I shall merely notice in reply, that the claims, or rather the complaints of oppression committed by his Excellency's servants, which were preferred by Moonshee Hoosein Alee about four years ago, seem now to be as far from adjustment or redress as they were on the first day of their being heard, and that the boasted favour and partiality of the Vizier towards Pershaud Sing Soubadar, have been such as to induce this superannuated officer, after a fruitless attendance of nearly four years in Lucknow, to quit the place and his pretensions to his zemindaree for ever.

16. The argumentative part of the case of Hoosein Alee Khan appears, to my judgment, to be exhausted in my despatch of the 31st of August.

I have, &c.

Statement

Statement of His Excellency the Vizier. Received the 5th of December 1812, accompanying his Letter to the Address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and intended as an Answer to the Resident's Memorial transmitted on the 29th of September.

Bengal Political Consultations,
2 July 1813.

The Vizier's Statement.

You have stated that the project of deputing one of my sons with a British force for the settlement of the country was agitated before your arrival at Lucknow, &c. If so, do you now state to me in detail what passed upon the subject before your time, and the grounds of the suspension of the measure on that occasion, as they are known to you. I certainly remember an occasion of the discussion of a plan for the settlement of my country with the advice of the British Government, by deputing one of my sons attended by a British force, long before your suggestion or the Governor-General's proposal of the present system, and the suspension of the plan which I proposed. If you do not remember that discussion, I am helpless.

You observe that the jumma bundee, or settlement of my dominions by a fair standard of assessment for a fixed period of years, can be well and easily accomplished without immediate measurement of the lands. The fact is this: that the adoption of the new system was originally made dependent on the measurement of the lands and the removal of my doubts, and in your draft of instructions to Ameens, measurement is also mentioned, and therefore as the employment of Ameens was suspended in consequence of my doubts not being removed, I have stated in my letter to the Governor-General the difficulty or impossibility of the adoption of the system proposed for the reasons abovementioned.

With a reference to your remark regarding courts of justice and police, the state of the case is: what I have written to the Governor-General is perfectly unquestionable, viz., that until the total extirpation of all disaffected persons, as has taken place in the Company's dominions, courts of justice and police are totally unavailing.

With regard to your description of an approved and unobjectionable plan for the investigation and adjustment of all claims and demands by my Government, &c. As I am satisfied that the adoption of this plan would occasion a decrease of my power and authority, I have, therefore, knowingly and wilfully requested the Governor-General to devise and propose to me some other plan, which may not occasion this diminution of my authority.

In reply to your observations on the case of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, the case is this: I have stated in my letter to the Governor-General the only mode which I approve of adjusting the Moonshee's claims, and if you approve of that mode it shall be followed. That the minute investigation of such claims as this is indispensable you must allow, because you know that, with regard to my own personal property, viz., my rumna in Benares, although I have a sunnud fixing its limits under the seal of the late Mr. Duncan, still your Government considered the investigation of my right to it as indispensable, which appears, indeed, from a translation of Mr. Edmonstone's letter which you sent to me; and, therefore, if I insist on the investigation of the Moonshee's claims and those of his partners, who are all the subjects of my Government, what objection can be proposed?

You observe that you could easily furnish me with a numerous list of such persons as are referred to in the Governor-General's letter, &c. My letter to the Governor-General dated the last day of Shabaun (8th of September), on the subject of the two Begums, has already been transmitted through you. I know not what I have done to evince my displeasure with their Highnesses; but I know that both of them have recently done many things regarding me that were never done by them before, even to the extent of neglecting the ordinary observances of friendship, such as sending charitable donations and messages of inquiry after my health, which I have frequently complained of to you. A number of the Zemindars of the elder Begum's jagier are constantly disputing and fighting with and plundering and murdering the Zemindars of the Khalsa, and her Highness takes no measures to prevent them, as you must have seen by a paper of

Consultations,

The Visier's Statement.

of intelligence dated the 15th of Ramzaun, which I sent to you on the 17th of that month. Formerly I had a servant named Bauker Beg Khan in Fyzabad, and then none of the Begum's servants were guilty of any irregularities; whereas now every species of impropriety is committed, and even my servants are treated with indignity by her Highness's people, and the settlement of disputes among the inhabitants of Fyzabad, which formerly belonged to the Government, is now with her Highness's servants, who make no reference to me. Further, her Highness has appropriated the revenue of Luwana and Buteye, and has taken possession of many other places belonging to the Khalsa. Are all these matters of my doing or hers?

With regard, again, to the younger Begum, her unkindness and disrespect towards me are apparent from the contents of her letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

To Hoosein Alee Khan, I have repeatedly given sums of money of my own accord, and by your recommendation; and although the inheritance of his father has never been divided, nor has he established his claim to any part of it, I have put him in possession of several houses, the materials of which he has sold, and appropriated the proceeds to himself.

Tuhseen Alee Khan I have never molested in the smallest degree. On the contrary, I have given him a jagier, on the produce of which he lives in happiness and ease.

My desire to investigate the claims of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan is no proof of my displeasure against that person. The allowance of Casim Alee Khan is regularly paid to him at your desire, and every other object of his which you recommend to me is accomplished. His attendance at Court is dispensed with, and I have long ceased to complain of him to you; yet you are acquainted with his former misbehaviour, and recently, as you yourself must remember, his people had the audacity to lay violent hands on a woman called Luchmee, whom they carried to his house, after robbing her of property, and I made no complaint on the subject from my regard for you. In the time of Colonel Collins, Casim Alee once delayed to accompany me on my hunting excursion, for which neglect the Colonel made him pay me a fine of 5000 rupees; but now, for what reason I know not, he presumes to do what he pleases. With regard to the widow and legitimate children of Shurf Alee Khan, whom you mention, I have done no injustice whatever. On the Khan's death I gave khelats to all the members of the family, and did every thing necessary to console them, as you acknowledged, when you gave them khelats on the part of the Governor-General without my previous knowledge, using a proverb on the occasion, to indicate that your own kindness towards them was merely the consequence of mine. I have not assumed nor confiscated any part of the property of the family, nor even accepted their proffered nuzzurs. The widow and children are in possession of all the wealth and effects, living in affluence and ease; while the eldest son, and many of the subordinate women, are starving and objects of compassion. How, then, is my displeasure with the widow and children to be established? You may ask herself, and she will acknowledge the many salutary advices which I have given to her.

Regarding the adjustment of the claims of Moonshee Hoosein Alee, you refuse to refer them to the Adawlut now existing in Lucknow, and therefore the adjustment must be delayed till another Adawlut is established.

Pershaud Sing Soubadar, who never had possession of his Zemindaree for a period of forty years, preferred a claim for it through you; and though he had never been attended to in my late brother's time nor in the days of any former Resident, I consented to hear his claim at your request, and gave orders that justice should be done to him: thus extending my favour, instead of evincing my displeasure towards him.

You have stated, with a reference to Hoosein Alee Khan, that "the grant of the allowance in question, after the death of Ameer-ood-Dowlah, by the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, is universally known to all ranks of people, and proved to you by your own records and mine, in addition to which, &c." The case is this : I have no knowledge whatever of such a grant : and at the period of the Honourable Mr. Wellesley's visit to this place, on the 7th of the month of Jemadec-oos-Sanee, 1216 Hijery, corresponding with Monday the 16th of October 1801, when it was agreed that all the pensions of my brother's time and my own should be regularly paid, if any such pension as that in question had then existed it must have been mentioned, and like the others have been regularly paid, which is a proof that no such pension did exist at the time referred to.

The Vizier's Statement.

In reply to your observation, that it is abundantly obvious that Hoosein Alee Khan must be comprehended in the number of persons of distinction dependent on my Government, I have already stated enough on that subject, and the rights of all the other persons of distinction are dependent on certain conditions which are stated in Mr. Wellesley's letter to me.

From Her Highness the Bhow Begum. (Received the 9th November 1812, 4th Zekaud 1227.)

Letter from
the Bhow Begum.

I have received your letter of the 24th of Shuvval (31st ultimo), with copies of two letters addressed by you to my son, Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan, regarding the villages of Bingha, and a copy of my son's answer to those letters.

From a perusal of the above documents, it appears that you have represented every matter in its true light, and without the least partiality or favour, but that my son has no wish to bring the matters to a fair adjustment. What loss, indeed, does my son sustain by delaying the settlement of those affairs. By the improper and oppressive conduct of the Aumils of the Khalsa during the last three years, a great part of the revenues of my jagier has been lost, and this loss must continue to increase till a decision be obtained on all the questions that are at issue. With this view, I now express my readiness to abide by any decision which you may pass on the several questions that are depending between me and my son, because I know that your decision will be just. There is evidently no other mode for the satisfactory adjustment of those affairs, than that you should appoint an Ameen on your own part to proceed to Bingha and Baraitch, ascertain the real circumstances of the disputed lands, and report to you on the subject ; that after receiving the report of the Ameen you pronounce your decision according to justice, and that I and my son become bound to abide by your decision.

But, in addition to the above question, there are many other matters in dispute which require a speedy adjustment, and the settlement of which seems impracticable by any other mode than the above. You formerly wrote to me for a statement of all the remaining questions, for the purpose of having them decided.

I now enclose the statement which you required ; and, with a view to the speedy and satisfactory adjustment of every remaining question, I propose that you appoint an Ameen on your own part, to ascertain in a proper manner the whole of the circumstances of the case, and report the same to you for your decision ; and whatever your decision may be, I hereby promise to accede to it. If my son consent to this measure it is well ; but otherwise, I desire that you address the Right Honourable the Governor-General on this subject, and forward the letter which I formerly transmitted to you to his Lordship's address, and obtain the orders of Government to settle the affairs in dispute in a just and impartial manner, and to enforce your equitable decision in all cases which may be hereafter referred to you.

Statement of Questions and Grievances which required to be adjusted and redressed, to the end of Shuvval 1227. (5th of November 1812.)

First. It is upwards of three years since the Aumil of Baraitch, contrary to established usage, seized upon certain villages of Bingha attached to the muhl of Gonda in my jagier, and he has this year made a collection of revenue from

Bengal Political
Consultations,

the Bhow Begum.

those villages. Let this question be equitably decided, and the money collected by the Aumil of Baraitch be restored.

Second. The Zemindars of Dhoma, in the pergunnah of Dalmow belonging to the khalsa, some time ago preferred a groundless claim to some lands in the village of Shazadpoor, pergunnah Salone in my jagier, and afterwards took violent possession of those lands, contrary to established custom, with the assistance of an Ameen and a military force deputed from the Khalsa. The Zemindars of Shazadpoor are willing to refer the matter to arbitration, to which the Zemindars of Dhoma will not agree, but keep forcible possession of the lands. Let an Ameen be appointed to investigate this business and an equitable settlement be made. Further, about a year ago, Pirthee the son of Idhar, and his nephews, with a Brahmin, were forcibly carried away by Luchmun Pershaud Ameen, who still retains them in confinement. The immediate release of those persons is required, as the affairs of the village of Shazadpoor are in confusion owing to their absence from it.

Third. About three months ago, Rajah Gungole of Baraitch sent three hundred decoits, matchlockmen, to the house of Hunoomanpooree Goshain, in the village of Ramanpore in Gonda, killed the Goshain, and plundered property belonging to him, to the amount of nearly a lac of rupees. Hurlollpooree, the Chela of Hunoomanpooree, is now at my threshold seeking redress. Let the Rajah be punished for the murder, and the property plundered be restored.

Fourth. About eight hundred Beegahs of land in the village of Dhonee or Dhunoulee, in Gonda, nankar of the widow of Doorga Pershaud deceased, and belonging to my jagier, have been sequestered by Becheloll Moostajer (farmer), Gholam and Byjnauth Tewaree, Zemindars of Surawan, in pergunnah Gwaritch, sircar Baraitch, who now wish to keep possession of it forcibly; and Ummur Sing, Aumil of Baraitch, from unjust partiality to the above moostajer, has confined Bukht Bully and Umrit Sing, Zemindars of Dunowlee. Several shookhas have been issued directing their release, but they have not yet been set at liberty; and, in consequence of their confinement, a loss of revenue is sustained by me. Exclusive of the above, and on a very recent occasion, when the Zemindars and Assamees of Dhunowlee went to Poorwa-puranapore to till and sow their lands, the Zemindars of Surawan, about three hundred armed men, collected together and killed Nepal Sing, Ram Sing, Bukhtawur Sing, Bhola Sing, Bilkur Sing, Dirgpaul Sing, and Joga Sing, in all seven persons, Zemindars of Dhunowlee. The heirs of the slain are constantly complaining, and nothing has yet been done to grant them redress. The remaining Zemindars of Dhunowlee, agreeably to my orders, have hitherto refrained from retaliating. Let orders be issued to the Aumil of Baraitch for the release of Bukht Bully and Umrit Sing. Let the Zemindars of Surawan be punished for the murders which they have committed, and let the dispute regarding the lands between Dhunowlee and Surawan be settled, through the medium of an Ameen.

Fifth. The women of the khoord muhl are still at Lucknow. Speak to my son on this subject, that he may allow the women to return to Fyzabad, and live in comfort as heretofore; and let those who have enticed the women be punished, that no one may hereafter presume to act in this manner. This will add to my son's reputation.

Sixth. A number of petitions have been presented to me by the ladies of the muhl of my late brothers, Mirza Alee Khan and Mirza Salar Jung, setting forth the hardships they endure. You should exert yourself in such a manner in their behalf as to ensure the regular payment of their stipends as heretofore, and that the allowances of persons deceased be continued to their children, otherwise a number of them must starve. It was ever the custom of this Government to continue the stipends of deceased persons to their heirs.

Seventh. The disorder and confusion which prevail in the villages and Saer Chowkies of Ismaelgunge in my jagier, have been frequently stated to you, and are now explained under distinct heads, as follows: Let an Ameen be appointed to investigate this business also, and a just decision be passed.

First.

First. About four years ago Buhwan Sing, Zemindar of Buhwareh, belonging to the Khalsa, placed chowkies at the villages of Meida and Bhodunpore, which reach to Kukraghat on the bank of the Goomtee, and which were formerly attached to Ismaelgunge. This person has ever since made collections at those stations, contrary to custom and right.

Consultations,

Letter from
the Bhow Begum.

Second. The same person, about three years ago, took forcible possession of, and has since possessed some lands in the village of Ghona, which formerly were attached to the low lands of the Jheel of Mobarukbagh. My Tehsildar is now completely dispossessed of the lands in question.

Third. The above person becoming this year still more daring and insolent under the idea that no notice would be taken of his conduct, has committed a fresh act of oppression, by seizing the Singhara and fish of the Jheels of Chenut and Mobaruck-bagh, which since the establishment of Ismaelgunge had ever belonged to it. The Tehsildar of Ismaelgunge is now prevented from disposing of the Singhara and fish, by the violence of Buhwan Sing, who will not allow the purchasers to carry them away.

Fourth. Tiluck Sing zemindar and farmer of Ismaelgunge, from whom a large sum of money is due to the Sirkar, has fled and taken refuge with his family at Kujowr Gawn, in Nawaubgunge. Let orders be issued to the Aumil of Nawaubgunge to apprehend Tiluck Sing, and deliver him over to the Tehsildar of Ismaelgunge.

1. In further continuation of the subject of my despatch to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, under date the 26th ultimo, I have now the satisfaction of reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that his Excellency the Vizier has been pleased this day, in compliance with my repeated and earnest desire, to issue his mandate to his Excellency's Aumil of Baraitch for the immediate restitution to the officers of her Highness the Bhow Begum of nineteen disputed villages of her jaidad, in the district of Gonda, which had been usurped from her Highness by that Aumil, and regarding which a vexatious discussion had been pending between his Excellency and me for a period of three years. A copy and translation of my last letter on this subject to the Vizier are transmitted for the notice of the Government.

2. The final adjustment and satisfaction of her Highness the younger Begum's principal claims on the Vizier have been prevented hitherto, chiefly by the dilatory conduct of the officers of her Highness's jagier, who have delayed to attend at Lucknow for the purpose of confirming their statement of the revenue ; but I have no reason to apprehend a deviation on the part of the Vizier from the promise which his Excellency conveyed to me on this subject in his letter of the 25th ultimo.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written 13th May 1813.)

The points in dispute between her Highness the Bhow Begum and your Excellency are so various and so complicated in their nature, that a distinct statement of the merits of each separately seems indispensable to their satisfactory adjustment ; and I shall adopt this method accordingly, beginning with the disputed right to a number of the villages of Bhiuga, in her Highness's jaidad.

A copy of your Excellency's letter, dated the 4th of last month, having been forwarded to her Highness the Begum, with a request that her Highness would be pleased to furnish me with a list of all the villages of the jaidad, including a detailed statement of their revenue, I have recently had an answer from her Highness, with the required list, copies of which are now submitted for your Excellency's perusal and inspection. The only sunnud which the Begum possesses for her jaidad would seem to be that important instrument under your Excellency's seal, and the signature of the Governor-General, Lord Teignmouth, which has of late been so frequently referred to, and formed the subject of protracted discussion between your Excellency and me.

This instrument contains no list whatever of the villages composing the jaidad; but a list of them which was obtained in the year 1204 fusly from the then Aumil of the district, Rajah Newaz Sing, by whom they were made over by your Excellency's commands to the Begum, is in my opinion equally authentic, alike demonstrative of the question of right to those villages, and is now submitted for inspection.

From the date abovementioned, it is proved that every one of the villages in question remained in the possession of the Begum and her Highness's officers, without any molestation or even claim on the part of the Aumil of Baraitch, or of any of the Zemindars or Talookadars of that district, till the commencement of the present discussion, occasioned by the manifestly improper conduct of Balick Ram and his son, in wresting by violence from the possession of the Zemindar of Bhingha no less than nineteen of his villages included in the original list of the jaidad, with the intention, not even concealed, of adding those villages to the khalsa, and paying their revenue to your Excellency, as is proved by the statement of an Ameen deputed by your Excellency to investigate and report upon the merits of this case. I have ever considered the report of that Ameen as decisive of the question at issue of the villages in dispute being a part of the zemindaree of Bingha, and consequently of her Highness the Begum's undoubted right to those villages.

Under the influence of this conviction, I now transmit to your Excellency a particular statement of the villages usurped by the Aumil of Baraitch, and I trust that your Excellency will be pleased, without any further delay, to issue your mandate to Umer Sing, for the immediate surrender of those villages to the officers of her Highness the Begum. When the purpose of this just requisition shall be accomplished, I shall proceed to consider and decide upon the other matters in dispute; and after a minute and impartial investigation of all the circumstances of each, I shall submit my opinion to your Excellency, in the confident expectation of its being approved, and of your Excellency's cheerful acquiescence in my judgment, conformably with your promise to this effect and with the desire of the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

A true copy :

Resident.

P. S. The draft of this letter had been sent to the office to be copied, when I had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of this date; and I shall here offer a brief reply to such parts of it as have not been anticipated above.

Her Highness the Begum has not furnished me hitherto with any statement of the revenue of the several villages of Bhingha, nor of any portion of the jaidad, nor do I consider such a statement to be necessary. The dispute between her Highness and your Excellency relates exclusively to the number and names of the villages, and has no reference to their revenue. To every identical village which was delivered over by Rajah Newaz Sing your Excellency's Aumil of Baraitch, in the year 1204 fusly, to the person appointed by the Begum to receive charge of the jaidad, her Highness has now an exclusive and unquestionable right, whether the revenue be increased tenfold or diminished in that proportion; unless, indeed, your Excellency should be pleased to maintain that a positive provision exists for the restitution of the toufeer, or surplus revenue of of the jaidad by the Begum into your Excellency's treasury, which has never hitherto been asserted, and is, in my opinion, contrary to the fact.

With a reference to all the other matters in dispute between your Excellency and her Highness the Begum, and particularly to your Excellency's claims against her Highness, I have already submitted to your Excellency that my judgment has not been formed; and foreseeing a great deal of difficulty in the investigation of those claims without deputing Ameens to the scenes of them, I am now looking out for some trustworthy and intelligent persons to be employed in the capacity of Ameens. When such persons shall be selected for this purpose, I shall have the honour of reporting my selection to her Highness the Begum and to your Excellency, that Ameens may be deputed by each to accompany those whom I shall appoint for the performance of this duty.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council,
&c. &c. &c:

My Lord :

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. On the morning of Friday the 7th instant, I received a letter from his Excellency the Vizier, in the following terms: " Having conveyed to my friend, the Governor-General, my request of his permission to travel, and his Lordship having complied with my request, I write to you to desire that at the next interview between us the matter of my departure may form the first subject of our discussion."

2. Being aware, from the character of his Excellency's recent conduct and counsels, as inferred from the tenor of his letters and reported to me through various channels, that the object of his renewal on this occasion of a question which he had purposely avoided at our conference of the 17th ultimo, was no more than a desire to evade the satisfactory adjustment of the remaining points in dispute, I deemed it to be advisable to evince the most perfect readiness, on my own part, to enter on this question with his Excellency, whenever he might be pleased to renew it; and, accordingly, I replied to his letter by a message to this effect, announcing my intention to wait on him for the purpose of concluding the arrangement on the morning of the following day.

3. On Saturday the 8th instant, at a conference with his Excellency after breakfast, I commenced by referring to and reading a portion of the instructions of Government to the late Resident, Colonel Scott, under date the 11th of November 1802, which had been translated for his Excellency's information, and presented, to him, in person, by Colonel Scott, on the 25th of the same month.

4. His Excellency acknowledged his being in possession of the document to which I referred, but professed his forgetfulness of the contents of it; and I proceeded to state to his Excellency, from the English copy in my hands, the principal arguments for the necessity of concluding an arrangement to provide for the due administration of the Government during his Excellency's absence from his dominions.

5. The Vizier did not call in question, but seemed rather to admit, the validity of the arguments which had thus been adduced. He stated, that he had some recollection of similar arguments proposed to him in the first instance verbally by Colonel Scott, and afterwards delivered to him in writing. That he would search for the paper received from Colonel Scott among his records, and prepare an answer to it as soon as possible; after which he trusted that no obstacle would oppose his early departure on his travels. I replied that the British Government being once pledged to his Excellency, in the person of the Governor-General Marquis Wellesley, to make no unnecessary objection to the accomplishment of his Excellency's wishes on this point, he was sufficiently aware of the good faith of the Government in all cases to render additional assurances on my part totally superfluous; and that however much your Lordship in Council or myself, from motives of personal friendship for his Excellency, might regret his absence from his dominions, he might rely on an implicit adherence to the promises which were made to him on this subject, and on a cordial disposition to promote his Excellency's personal comfort, the honour and true interests of the Government, and the happiness of the people of Oude, under any occurrence or change of circumstances to be contemplated, as well as in the actual state of the administration of his Excellency's affairs.

6. I noticed particularly, and requested the attention of the Vizier to two principal conditions originally imposed by Lord Wellesley on his consent to his Excellency's departure, viz. first, the previous establishment of an approved system of administration within the reserved dominions, in terms of the provision of the sixth article of the treaty of November 1801; and, secondly, an effectual arrangement for the due conduct of that improved system of administration, and all other concerns of the Government, more particularly its relations with ours, during the absence of its natural head, and under the exercise of a delegated and necessarily defective authority.

7. With a reference to the first of those conditions, I observed, that the only possible objections which his Excellency could at any time have proposed to it, and which he actually proposed to myself at our first or second conference after my arrival at his Court, had long ago been obviated and removed. His Excellency had solicited a plan for the better administration of his Government, and the formation of that plan had been delayed by unavoidable circumstances, with the best and most friendly motives, for a considerable period of time; but a beneficial and unexceptionable plan had been ultimately suggested by your Lordship, and the details of it had been submitted by me, nay, finally acquiesced in by his Excellency, though the execution of them had been unhappily postponed; and under these circumstances, it was obvious that your Lordship might, with justice and propriety, have insisted on the fulfilment of this condition and on the establishment of the proposed system of reform, before his Excellency's departure from his dominions.

8. Yet, on the present occasion, I was authorized and instructed to depart from this important original condition of the gratification of his Excellency's wish of a temporary retirement from his Government. The actual introduction of the reform before the commencement of his journey would not now be required; but I was particularly commanded to intimate, that the circumstance of his Excellency's departure, and far less the preparations for his journey, would not produce the smallest relaxation in the efforts of our Government to accomplish the salutary objects of reform, and to prosecute to a satisfactory conclusion every one of the questions that were pending.

9. With regard to the second condition originally annexed to our consent to his Excellency's retirement from his dominions, I observed that the peculiar nature of this condition, and of the salutary restrictions prescribed to the exercise of the power of Regent in the person of his Excellency's son, was obviously such as to render it totally indispensable in the judgment of your Lordship in Council and of every reflecting mind, and that his Excellency must doubtless have been prepared to acquiesce in those necessary restrictions of his delegated authority to his son, on every occasion of his contemplating even the shortest absence from his dominions. It was superfluous, I added, to recapitulate the nature of the limitations proposed, or the arguments on which they are founded. His Excellency would find an explicit and satisfactory statement of both in the document presented to him by Colonel Scott; and all that could be necessary on my part was an offer of my friendly aid and advice, in preparing the instrument and obligation by which the power and duties of the Regent were to be delegated and defined, when the necessity for that measure should be produced by his Excellency's solemn declaration of a resolution to depart from his dominions.

10. The Vizier was extremely attentive to me during the whole of the preceding discourse. He promised to deliberate on what he had heard, to search for and peruse with attention the translation of the instructions of the Government which had been delivered to him by the late Colonel Scott, and to fix an early day day for a conference with me at the Residency, when his final resolution should be announced.

11. I now commenced the discussion of a number of other questions depending with his Excellency the Vizier, particularly that of the reform of the police of his capital, in which the frequency of robbery and other crimes has increased in an alarming degree; and I entreated his Excellency to take measures for the detection and punishment of some banditti, supposed to be his Excellency's servants, who had recently committed depredations in the British cantonment and in the immediate neighbourhood of the Residency.

12. After a long conversation on this subject, and some others which have been recorded in separate despatches to the address of the Secretary to Government, I took my leave of his Excellency the Vizier; and though his Excellency had taught me to expect an early communication of his sentiments and final resolution on the subject of his departure from Lucknow, it was not until the 22d instant, after a lapse of a fortnight from the date of our former interview, that I had the honour of a visit from his Excellency, for the declared purpose of renewing this extraordinary discussion, and of settling what he is pleased to describe as his own particular object, the most important concern of his heart.

13. On Saturday the 22d instant, the Vizier did me the honour to breakfast with me; and on our retiring into another apartment, I expressed my readiness to receive the communication, which his Excellency had promised to make to me, of the result of his final deliberation on the subject of the necessary arrangements for his early departure from Lucknow. He replied that he had thought on the subject occasionally since our last meeting, and had committed his sentiments partially to writing, but that they were not sufficiently digested nor arranged to be delivered for my consideration. That of the two conditions annexed to his departure, the first appeared the easiest and best, and that the second was extremely difficult. The question of reform and all the other questions depending had better be settled before he set out, so as to supersede the other arrangement; and with this view he was ready to commence the work of reform, according to treaty, whenever I pleased to propose it; as well as to answer my letters on the other questions at issue, without waiting for your Lordship's reply to his letter of the 26th of August.

14. My original and uniform conviction of the utter fallacy and evasive nature and object of the Vizier's avowed resolution to retire from the Government of his country, did not require the confirmation which is contained in the foregoing paragraph, as quoted from his Excellency's words. I expressed the most genuine satisfaction at the resolution which his Excellency announced of establishing the system of reform and adjusting the other questions before he should set out on his journey. I admitted, that the satisfactory adjustment of all the depending questions would greatly facilitate, though it might not eventually supersede, the arrangements for his Excellency's departure, connected with the powers of the Regent and the obligations to be imposed upon him for his due administration of the Government with a reference to our interests in Oude. But I contemplated the supersession of those arrangements in another more agreeable point of view, by the satisfactory adjustment of all the questions that were pending between the two Governments, as leading to his Excellency's dereliction of his present disposition to travel, and to subject his sacred person to the dangers and inconvenience of a journey. I submitted, that if his Excellency were now, as I trusted he must be, sincerely disposed to put an end to every unpleasant discussion between the British Government and himself, the manner of doing so was the simplest and the easiest that could be imagined. Your Lordship's deliberate judgment on every question at issue was before him, the details of the system of reform had been arranged and finally agreed to in the month of April 1811, and the execution of them might now be commenced, without the smallest danger of their failure in any essential point, if conducted in the terms of the treaty, with our uniform concurrence and advice, which it was his Excellency's duty and interest to seek and implicitly abide by on every important occasion. That his zealous and cordial concurrence with me in the commencement and progress of the reform would afford ample and agreeable employment to his mind, and would banish banish all ideas of travelling or retiring from the Government of his country; and that the beneficial result of the salutary measures of reform, combined with the satisfactory adjustment of the remaining questions in dispute, would, of necessity, cement and improve the relations of friendship and harmony subsisting between the two states, in a degree that had never hitherto been known, and could never again be susceptible of the smallest diminution or change.

15. We now entered on the discussion, in a desultory manner however, of the details of the system of reform, and his Excellency's doubts with regard to them, and also of the question of police, and of the claims of Hoossein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee: but as no new arguments were suggested on either side of those questions, I refrain from submitting to your Lordship any further report of our conference. The Vizier, on taking leave of me, assured me that his consideration of the several questions depending, which had then formed the subject of our discourse, should be resumed without any delay; and that a period of five days, or of ten days at the utmost, should place me in complete possession of his final resolutions with regard to them. My knowledge of his Excellency's disposition, combined with the nature and tendency of some reports which are now prevalent in this city, precludes my placing much reliance on the promise which his Excellency has made to me.

I shall resume the subject of this despatch when circumstances shall appear to require it.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council,
&c. &c. &c.

My Lord:

1. My despatch, under date the 24th ultimo, to your Lordship in Council's address, conveyed a report of my proceedings and discussions with his Excellency the Vizier on the subject of his avowed inclination to relinquish the cares of his Government and to travel to distant countries. The object of the renewal of this question by the Vizier, namely, an evasion of the satisfactory adjustment of the remaining points in dispute between the two Governments, has long been apparent to your Lordship, and did not require to be developed by any recent proceedings of mine.

2. His Excellency's suspension of his pretended resolution to travel, on the ground of the difficulty of concluding a satisfactory arrangement for the administration of the Government in his absence, was exactly what I had contemplated before his declaration to this effect; and his declared preference of what he is pleased to assume as the alternative of such an arrangement, namely, the establishment of a system of reform before the commencement of his journey, was no more than a puerile attempt to ascribe his dereliction of a design, which he had never seriously harboured, to the imaginary obstacles opposed to its execution by us, and to gain time and distract my attention, by engaging me in a complicated discussion of several questions at once which are totally unconnected with each other.

3. In pursuance of this apparent design, but with a natural diffidence of the means on which he had calculated for the success of it, his Excellency had no sooner retired from our conference of the 22d of May, than he transmitted to me a statement in writing, extremely equivocal in its sense, but contradictory, in as far as intelligible, of the final result of our conference, and of his promise to resume the consideration of the important question of reform, as reported to your Lordship in Council in the concluding paragraph of my despatch under date the 24th ultimo.

4. I insert a verbal translation of his Excellency's statement referred to, for your Lordship in Council's information. "My permission to depart on my travels was the original condition by treaty of my cession of a part of my dominions, in lieu of the subsidy for the troops to be employed in the defence

" defence of my country; and in exchange for this cession by me, it was " freely and definitively agreed that I should place my son on the musnud as " my deputy, and proceed whenever I pleased, after signing the treaty of " cession, without any sort of objection, and with every mark of distinction " and respect. Consequently, as I have performed my agreement, it is now
 " incumbent on you, that according to promise and treaty I have free
 " permission to depart. But as my favourite son, Shums-oo-Dowlah,
 " although adorned with every virtue and good quality, is by no means so
 " well acquainted as I am with all the affairs of the State, I cannot give him
 " full authority, like myself, to direct all concerns in my absence, and to " govern my subjects as I do, and consequently it is my wish to settle matters
 " in my own presence, after discussion and consultation with you, and then to " set out on my travels: therefore it is proper that a written instrument, " containing an ample and explicit detail of all matters, be prepared and " delivered to my son, that he may be guided by this instrument during my " absence in the conduct of every affair, and that until my happy return, or " during my absence, no change or deviation may take place; and that the " British Government, in like manner as it has hitherto assisted me, may be " aiding and assisting to my son without injury or bias. Do you accordingly " begin to write the detail of affairs. And with regard to the question of my " departure, which is a great and momentous concern, and has very long been " suspended, no question can be of equal importance with it, therefore this " question must first be decided; for until this question be decided I shall be " unable to frame an answer to any other."

5. To the above-written statement from the Vizier, received through the medium of my Moonshee, I replied by a message to this effect: That the contents of the statement in question, in as far as I could well understand them, were in direct opposition to the result of my conference with his Excellency on the morning of the 22d of May, and that a part of it was quite unintelligible. His Excellency had observed at our conference, that of the two conditions annexed to his departure, the first was the simplest and best, the other extremely difficult. That the question of reform, and all other questions depending, should be settled before he set out; and that, with this view, he was ready to resume the discussion of those questions, without awaiting the reply to his letter to the Governor-General, and would communicate his final sentiments regarding them in the space of five or ten days. That in the statement now received from his Excellency, if the purport of it were rightly understood, he had declared the necessity of an immediate adjustment of the question of his departure from his dominions, and his determination to avoid every other discussion with me until this point should be finally settled. That the preface of his Excellency's statement, in which the unqualified permission to depart was made an absolute condition of the cession, contained a series of assertions and inferences, not one of which I was prepared to admit; and that the treaty of Cession itself, a copy of which was in my possession, so far from authorizing the belief that his departure was the object of the cession, did not even contain a provision having reference to the subject of his departure, or to the delegation of his authority to his son. That the particular nature of the instrument which his Excellency seemed anxious to prepare, and for which materials had been requested from me, (if I understood his Excellency's meaning,) was already sufficiently explained to him in the document presented by Colonel Scott, which his Excellency had avowed that he possessed, and had promised to refer to among his records; but that if any doubts on the subject remained, I should have the honour of waiting on his Excellency the next day, and should afford him every necessary explanation.

6. I attended his Excellency accordingly on Tuesday the 25th ultimo, and after expressing my surprise and concern at the receipt of a document from his Excellency, so inconsistent with the purport of his discourse, and with the final result of our conference, I read and presented to him in writing what I described to be the ultimatum of our Government, with a reference to the question of his departure, and to supersede not only the use of his Excellency's statement on this occasion, but of his renewal, at any future period, of the question to which it referred.

7. My statement, above referred to, was conceived in the following terms.

“ If your Excellency do really entertain the design of travelling, or of retiring from the government of your country, the only one indispensable condition of the accomplishment of your Excellency’s wish is now finally declared to you, and is as simple and practicable as can be. If you acquiesce, there is nothing to do but to fix the day of your departure, and apprise the Government of that day; and if you decline, any future avowal of a disposition to quit your dominions must, in my mind, be totally useless, since it is impossible for our Government to believe that the disposition is seriously entertained. The condition is briefly as follows. The Regent or occupant of the musnud of Oude under a delegated authority, whoever the person may be, must come under a solemn obligation to regulate his official proceedings by the advice of the British Government, and to adopt on every occasion, without hesitation or delay, such measures as may be suggested by the Resident, under the authority of that Government, for the prosperity of the country and happiness of the people of Oude; as also to refrain from all official measures which the Resident, under the same authority, may object to, and require the Regent to desist from: in other words, the administration of all the public concerns of the State must be virtually placed in the hands of the British Government and its representative, till your Excellency’s return to your dominions. With regard to your domestic concerns, the management of your family and household, your Excellency will, of course, be at liberty to give such authority and powers to the Regent, as to your Excellency’s wisdom may seem meet, and to prepare and furnish him with your written instructions accordingly. The above is the only condition on which your Excellency can retire from your dominions with the sanction of the British Government; because, in fact, it is the only arrangement under which the just rights and interests of that Government in the State of Oude can be preserved during the period of your Excellency’s absence. And I have further been commanded to declare to you, that if the object of your temporary retirement be a wish to evade or delay a reform of the system of your administration, or the satisfactory adjustment of any other point in dispute, this object cannot be attained by the means in your Excellency’s contemplation, since no consideration whatever can induce the British Government to relax in its zealous and strenuous efforts for the accomplishment of the measures in view.”

8. His Excellency, after hearing the above declaration, and receiving it in writing from my hands, observed that it certainly superseded the use of the statement which he had sent to me, which had, in fact, been prepared before our conference of the 22d., and which he now expressed a wish to withdraw, repeating the purport of his promise to resume the consideration of the reform, and to apprise me of his final resolution regarding it, within ten days at the furthest from the date of our former conference. I returned his Excellency’s statement and took my leave of him, after some desultory conversation on a few subordinate matters, which it is unnecessary to repeat to your Lordship.

9. On the 31st ultimo I received from his Excellency the Vizier what his Excellency was pleased to describe to me as a communication of his final and unalterable sentiments on the important question of reform, in a letter of that date to my address, a literal translation of which is submitted for your Lordship’s perusal.

10. It is not very difficult to perceive, though the language of his Excellency’s letter be extremely equivocal throughout, that his object on the present occasion, while conveying a reluctant consent to the introduction of a system of reform (for the notice of the specific system recommended by your Lordship is carefully avoided in his letter), is to demonstrate the impracticability of producing any beneficial change in the present frame of his Government through the agency or influence of ours, without encroaching on his independent authority, as guaranteed by the Honourable Company, in a certain degree and on certain provisions, no doubt, but misconstrued or rather wilfully perverted by his Excellency into a right of doing whatever he pleases on every occasion, without reference to our opinion or advice.

11. Another though a more remote object in his Excellency's view is probably that which is described in the instructions of the Government to me, conveyed by the Chief Secretary's despatch under date the 21st of June 1811, viz., by a previous intimation that he adopts the proposed system of reform in compliance with your Lordship's desire, under a conviction of its probable failure, combined with the secret intention of realizing by clandestine means the imaginary obstacles which oppose it, to preserve an ultimate pretext for ascribing the eventual failure of some of the measures of reform, or a partial defalcation of his revenue, to the inefficacy of the system proposed.

12. Under the influence of this construction of his Excellency's purposes and views, which is drawn from my knowledge of his character as well as from the tenor of his letter, I have deemed it to be my duty to prepare and transmit to his Excellency an answer conceived in such terms as seem calculated to frustrate his object, and to place in their proper light the relative rights and obligations of the British Government and his Excellency, with a reference to the introduction and progress of the reform of his Excellency's Government, and to every important measure of the public administration of Oude, undertaken with or without the advice and concurrence of our Government. A copy and translation of the letter which I addressed to the Vizier on this occasion are submitted for your Lordship's perusal, and I shall be highly gratified to learn that it obtains the honour of your approbation.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 31st May 1813.)

On the 17th of Shabaun, 1227 Higguree (26th August 1812), I addressed a letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, containing an answer to the contents of his Lordship's letter dated the 8th of May 1812 (25th of Rubbee-oos-sanee 1227), a statement of the difficulties attending the introduction of the plan of reform for certain reasons, and a request of information on certain points, and of the extirpation of the disaffected and rebellious from my country. His Lordship, in his letter of the 5th of March 1813 (1st of Rubbee-ool-Avvul 1228) recently received, from want of leisure or from some other cause, has not replied to any part of my letter above noticed, but has insisted on the contents of his own. As I have repeatedly said to you at our recent conferences that I am disposed to perform whatever is contained in the treaty, and have never departed, nor shall ever depart from it; and as I further promised, at our last conference, to send you a written statement of my wishes on this point in ten days, therefore, from necessity, contemplating the present disordered state of the country, occasioned by the delay in quelling disturbances and the consequent loss of revenue, without awaiting the receipt of his Lordship's reply to my statements, I send for your perusal a copy of the last paragraph of a discussion, containing a summary of the provisions of treaty between the two States, agreeably to which, without the smallest deviation, not even the point of a hair, I am prepared to establish such a system of administration in my dominions, as shall be conducive to the prosperity of my subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants. Do you peruse the enclosed document with attention and care, and keep the contents of it always in view, so that nothing contrary to its tenor may occur.

" The Governor-General now proceeds to state the general principles by " which the connexion and intercourse between the two States are to be

" By the terms of the treaty concluded between the British Government and

" exercise of his Excellency's authority within his reserved dominions, and the Governor-General will never depart from this engagement. His Excellency has engaged to establish within his reserved dominions such a system of administration as shall be conducive to the prosperity of his subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants. This system of administration is to be carried into effect by his Excellency's own officers and servants, and by his own authority.

" His Excellency has also engaged always to advise with, and to act in conformity to, the counsel of the officers of the Honourable Company. In the establishment, therefore, of an improved system of administration within the reserved dominions, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary government of those dominions, and with the usual exercise of his Excellency's established authority, the Vizier has engaged to advise with the British Government and to conform to its counsels.

" Those counsels will always be offered to his Excellency in the form of friendly advice, and in the spirit of reciprocal confidence and of mutual regard and respect.

" The Governor-General, when the importance of the subject shall require, and the nature of the occasion shall admit his immediate intercourse with the Vizier, will offer the advice of the British Government to his Excellency by a direct communication, either in person or by letter.

" The British Resident at Lucknow, however, is the constituted local representative of the British Government, and the ordinary and established channel of communication in all cases whatever.

" The Resident will, therefore, in the common course of business, offer to the Vizier the advice of the British Government in the name of the Governor-General; and in every case which may require the Resident to state such advice, it is to be received as proceeding immediately from the Governor-General.

" Such advice will be offered by the Resident in all practicable cases, under the general or specific orders of the Governor-General.

" The Resident must advise the Nawaub with perfect cordiality, and must employ every endeavour to coincide with his Excellency in an uniform course of measures, and to unite sincerely with his Excellency in carrying into effect exclusively under his Excellency's authority and through his Excellency's officers, those measures which shall be determined upon, in conformity to the counsels of the British Government. In cases requiring the aid of the British Government, or the assistance of the British troops, they shall be employed according to the exigency of the occasion.

" The Resident must conduct himself towards the Nawaub Vizier, on all occasions, with the utmost degree of respect, conciliation, and attention, and must maintain cordial union and harmony in all transactions, and must endeavour to impart strength and stability to his Excellency's authority.

" The Resident must never proceed to act in the affairs of the reserved dominions without previous consultation with his Excellency or with his minister; and the Resident must, in the first instance, observe strict secrecy with regard to the subject of such consultations, until the measures to be adopted shall be finally determined.

" Under these regulations, the Governor-General expects that the Nawaub Vizier will act in conformity to the advice and representations of the Resident: and as no question of difficulty remains between the British Government and his Excellency, the Governor-General entertains a confident hope that no future vexation can occur in the transaction of affairs."

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 31st ultimo; and the contents of it, though not distinctly expressive of your Excellency's acquiescence in the views of our Government, nor free from equivocation and doubt, yet as indicative of a final resolution to adopt the salutary system of government so often recommended to your Excellency by me, have afforded satisfaction to my mind.

Of the document which your Excellency has transmitted to me I was, of course, in possession before. There are copies of it in English and Persian deposited among the records of my office. Its provisions have been ever in my view. It is quoted in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter to your Excellency, and forms the basis of every proposition which has hitherto been offered to your Excellency by his Lordship in Council, or by me, and it is impossible that the smallest deviation from it should have ever taken place upon our part, or should even be wished for by me on any future occasion. On the part of your Excellency, however, I am impelled by justice and candor, as well as by motives of regard for the future welfare and true interests of your Government, to declare, that from the date of the instrument referred to, in as far as my records exhibit, generally, and during the period of my own residence at your Excellency's Court, particularly, the obligation "to advise with and conform to the counsels of the officers of the Honourable Company," has been forgotten, or treated with disregard. Not a measure of your Excellency's administration has proceeded with the concurrence of our Government, nor has your Excellency ever been pleased, on any one important occasion, to require my opinion or advice, nor even to apprise me of your measures before they were carried into effect; and therefore if your Excellency's authority and power, the establishment and maintenance of which have been guaranteed by the British Government, on the obvious and express provision of their being uniformly exercised with its advice, had in fact suffered injury or diminution, if a much more considerable defalcation in the revenues of your country had occurred, the responsibility must have all been your own, and the British Government must have been totally free from it.

But now, in opposition to the past, if this wise and important stipulation is indeed to be strictly adhered to; if your Excellency have sincerely determined "to advise with the British Government, and to conform to its counsels in all affairs connected with the government of those dominions and with the exercise of your established authority," you may, in this case, be fully assured, and your august heart may rely with confidence on the assurance, that no future injury can arise to the exercise of your power and authority, nor to the honour and dignity of your Government, which on the contrary must daily increase with the comfort and happiness of your subjects, the prosperity of the country and people, the security of their property and lives.

Upon those principles, and influenced by this wise resolution, your Excellency should have no hesitation in commencing the work of reform without any further delay, relying on my friendly advice and my cordial and zealous assistance in the commencement and progress of the arrangements, till they be brought to a happy conclusion. For this purpose I transmit to your Excellency a copy of our original agreement, under date the 4th of April 1811 (9th Rubbee-ool-Avvul 1226), to which I solicit your particular and constant attention, that no departure from the tenor of it may take place.

In answer to your Excellency's remark, that your acquiescence in this salutary arrangement (if such may be inferred from your letter) has been produced "by necessity, &c. without awaiting the receipt of a reply to your statements from the Right Honourable the Governor-General," I am happy to be enabled to inform you that his Lordship's reply to your letter under date the 26th of August may be very shortly expected, and that I hope to have the honour of presenting it to your Excellency within a limited period of time, when I confidently hope and expect that the necessity by which your Excellency would seem to be influenced on this occasion, will be changed into a cordial conviction of the wisdom and expedience of the several measures of reform, and a desire to promote their success by every exertion in your power. But, as I am already fully apprized of his Lordship's sentiments on this subject, and have been recently authorized and commanded to declare those sentiments to your Excellency, I submit to your Excellency, in the mean time, that a delay to give effect to the reform, in the contemplation or hope of any change in his Lordship's opinion regarding it, is not only unnecessary but unwise, and that, with a view to his Lordship's satisfaction, the sooner we commence it the better. At the same time I suggest to your Excellency, that as, after the commencement of this work, both your Excellency's attention and my own must be totally engrossed by its importance, and no other less momentous concern should be permitted to engage our attention, it seems peculiarly advisable and expedient that the only two remaining points in dispute, namely, the cases and claims of Hoosein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee Khan, should be previously adjusted by your Excellency in the terms of my recent letters, which have been submitted to the notice of the Government and have obtained its entire approbation.

Letter from
Governor-General.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 2d July, 1813.)

A considerable period has elapsed since I had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter in reply to that which I addressed to you on the 8th of May, 1812, on the several important topics which have for some time past formed the subject of negotiation between your Excellency and this Government, but their contents have not failed to occupy a large portion of my attention. The delay which has occurred in the preparation of my answer to your Excellency's letters has not been occasioned by the difficulty or intricacy of the subjects in discussion, nor by any doubts which the objections stated by your Excellency, either in those letters or in your correspondence and conferences with the Resident, have created in my mind, with regard to the justice, expediency, or practicability of the measures which you have been counselled to adopt. It has arisen partly from the occupation of my time by other matters of public exigency which would not admit of delay, and partly by a hope which I was led to entertain, that the operation on your Excellency's judgment and good sense of the powerful and unanswerable arguments which had been opposed by the Resident to the doubts and objections offered by your Excellency to a compliance with the just expectations of the British Government, would have enabled me to address your Excellency, in reply to your letters above acknowledged, in terms of congratulation at the satisfactory adjustment of all the questions which had so long been depending, and especially on the fair prospect of an effectual removal of the acknowledged evils of the present system of your Government, and of an early and substantial improvement in the revenues and resources of the state, in the wealth, cultivation, and population of your territories, and in the security, prosperity, and happiness of your people, which must be the certain consequence of the introduction into your dominions of that salutary system of administration which has been so earnestly recommended to your adoption.

It is with sincere regret and disappointment, proportioned to the deep interest which I must always take in the prosperity of your Excellency's affairs, that I find myself compelled again to address you in terms of remonstrance and expostulation, which it can neither be agreeable to me to use nor to your Excellency to hear.

While, however, my disappointment has been extreme at the failure of the Resident's endeavours to obtain your cordial assent to some of the most important requisitions conveyed in my former letters, and those of the Vice-President during my absence from Fort William, and in the representations which Major

Baillie

Baillie has addressed to you in my name and under my instructions, I have derived great satisfaction from the settlement of some questions of no inconsiderable moment, which has been effected since my last address to your Excellency. I shall advert to these points, and to the arrangements connected with them, which still remain to give effect to your Excellency's decisions, before I close this letter: but it is necessary, in the first place, to draw your attention to those questions on which your Excellency has continued to withhold your consent to the just and reasonable expectations and demands urged by the British Government, under the clear and unequivocal sanction of existing treaties and engagements.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter from
Governor-General.

The most prominent of these, in point of interest and general importance, is the reform of your Excellency's administration; or, to speak with more precision, the first step towards a radical reform of the existing abuses of your Government, by the introduction of an improved system of assessment, management, and collection of the land revenue throughout the whole of your dominions.

It can hardly be necessary to recall to your Excellency's recollection the tenor of my letter of the 28th December 1810, in which the right of this Government to propose to your Excellency the introduction of a reform, and the obligation imposed on you by treaty to adopt that advice, were proved beyond the reach of contradiction, and the outline of a specific plan of reform was offered to your Excellency's consideration, and recommended by the strongest appeal to your Excellency's humanity, understanding, and good faith. At your Excellency's desire, the Resident laid before you the measures of detail by which this plan might be carried early into effect, with ease, security, and success. After a minute and elaborate discussion of the several points comprized in my letter above referred to, your Excellency was pleased to admit in the fullest manner, the necessity of a reform in your administration, the obligation on your Excellency to carry it into effect in conformity to the counsel of the British Government, and your assent generally to the specific plan proposed. You also signified your acquiescence in the subsidiary arrangements for carrying it into effect, submitted to you by the Resident, with exception to some points in which, in compliance with your Excellency's wishes, a compromise was agreed to. Notwithstanding all these assurances, given both verbally and in writing, in a manner little less authentic and formal than if they had been reduced to the form of a treaty, and equally binding on your Excellency's honour and good faith, your Excellency was pleased suddenly to retract your consent, and to oppose the most determined resistance to every effort on the part of the Resident, acting under the positive orders of this Government, to induce your Excellency to abide by the terms of your engagements, and your own specific assent to the plan submitted to you. To recapitulate the arguments by which the proposition contained in my letter above referred to was supported, or those by which your Excellency's objections were successfully repelled and refuted by the Resident, in the correspondence and conferences which ensued, would be to renew a discussion which has already been completely exhausted. Equally unnecessary must it be again to express the astonishment and concern which were excited in my mind by your Excellency's extraordinary conduct, in refusing to abide by your own written and positive assent, by which the accomplishment of this great and beneficial object has for a time been frustrated. I cannot help, however, declaring to your Excellency, in the most unreserved manner, that I am unable to perceive a single argument or objection which you have advanced in the course of the protracted negotiation that has taken place on this subject, which has not been successfully combated by the Resident, and I am persuaded that a candid and dispassionate review of the letters which I have had the honour to address to you, and of the letters of the Resident, will impress this conviction as forcibly on your Excellency's mind as on my own.

When, indeed, I reflect on the nature of the objections which you have raised to this measure, they appear to me quite unworthy of the penetrating and just understanding for which your Excellency is renowned. With the example of the Ceded Provinces before your eyes, where the establishment of the system which is now recommended to your Excellency has not only promoted the prosperity, happiness, and contentment of the country and the people in an eminent degree, but materially augmented and secured the public revenue; I cannot understand your Excellency's apprehension of a loss of revenue arising from the introduction of the same system into your reserved dominions. In the certain support of the British Government in carrying into effect all your arrangements, and in overawing any of your refractory servants or subjects who may be prompted by their corrupt personal views to oppose the introduction of the reform, your Excellency possesses an unfailing security against any diminution of your just authority.

The advice of the British Government on this important subject has been dictated by a spirit of the most sincere friendship, and by the direct and cordial interest which it takes in the prosperity of your affairs and the tranquillity of your dominions, as well as by the powerful motive stated in my letter of the 28th December 1810, the necessity of reforming a system under which the troops of the British Government are called upon to employ their exertions in support of injustice, extortion, and oppression. Influenced by these motives, it is impossible that this Government can ever propose to your Excellency the adoption of a measure having the most remote tendency to diminish your personal consequence, or impair the just authority of your Government, which it is, on the contrary, both the interest and the duty, as well as the anxious desire of the British Government to uphold and support, and for the maintenance of which nothing will be so effectual as the establishment of the system of administration which has been recommended to your adoption. Your Excellency cannot suppose, that by conforming to the advice of the British Government your independent authority is weakened, or your consequence lowered in the eyes of your subjects or the world. Your Excellency knows that the same treaty which secures to you the exercise of your authority within your reserved dominions, confers on the British Government the right to offer, and imposes on your Excellency the obligation to conform to its advice, and that that advice has never been adopted by your Excellency in a single instance in which it has not manifestly redounded to your genuine interest and reputation. The British Government will never so far forget the duties of a sincere friend, as to withhold from your Excellency that counsel which it is entitled and required by treaty to offer, and to which your Excellency is bound by the same solemn obligation to conform, from an unworthy desire to conciliate your temporary good-will, by a sacrifice of the permanent interests and happiness of yourself and your subjects. A little reflection will satisfy your Excellency, that a just view of your substantial interests will identify the dictates of your own judgment with the advice of the British Government.

Entertaining the most deliberate conviction of the advantage, nay, necessity, of the proposed reform in your administration, of the right possessed by this Government to urge your Excellency to introduce it, and of the obligation which the treaty, as explained and confirmed by the result of your negotiation with the Marquess Wellesley at Lucknow, imposes on you to attend to the advice and opinion of the British Government in carrying into effect that salutary arrangement, the British Government would have been entitled, and was perhaps required, on receiving your Excellency's acquiescence in the specific plan of reform which had been proposed, to insist on your Excellency's proceeding without delay to carry it into effect, in concert with the Resident.

The necessity of a reform of your Excellency's administration was no new idea created by recent occurrences in your Excellency's territories, although its necessity was strongly confirmed by them and by the experience of every day, but had been long felt and admitted, both by the British Government and by your Excellency, even before the Treaty of Cession, as is sufficiently manifest from the provisions of that treaty and the negotiations which preceded it.

When, therefore, the existence of the evil was so fully admitted, and a specific remedy agreed to, after a careful and deliberate examination, your Excellency cannot fail to recognise, in the patience which the British Government and its representative at your Excellency's Court have submitted to the voluminous and laborious discussions which have since arisen exclusively from your Excellency's fancied apprehensions and unsubstantial doubts of the expediency and practicability of the plan, the strongest proof of the forbearance and moderation of the British Government, and of its anxious desire to afford every practicable degree of satisfaction and assurance to your Excellency's mind, on every part of the arrangement to which you had already given your express assent.

Letter from
Governor-General

Not a single argument or objection has been stated by your Excellency, whether applying to the general principle of the arrangement or to its subordinate parts, to the speculative advantages of the proposed system or to its practical details, to its immediate or its remote consequences, which has not been respectfully entertained, deliberately examined, and successfully refuted.

To what, then, am I to attribute your Excellency's persevering opposition to this most salutary measure? I cannot, consistently with my high opinion of your sagacity and discernment, ascribe it to a conviction of the solidity of doubts and apprehensions which have been so often proved to be groundless; and I am compelled therefore to adopt, although with extreme reluctance, the only conclusion which remains, namely, that your Excellency has formed a decided resolution to oppose the introduction of the reform under all circumstances, and that your repeated expressions of doubt, alarm, and apprehension, are employed with the sole view of perplexing and prolonging the negotiation, in the vain hope that the question will ultimately be abandoned by the British Government, in despair of obtaining your acquiescence.

I most earnestly caution your Excellency against admitting into your mind for a moment so delusive an expectation. You may rely implicitly on the assurance which I give you, that however desirous your Excellency may be to evade the performance of your engagements, the British Government will not cease to require you to fulfil them, and that no lapse of time, and no change of circumstances, will induce the British Government to relinquish a measure which it considers to be so essential to the welfare and happiness of your Excellency's subjects, to the promotion of your own substantial ease, comfort, and advantage, and to the reputation and interest of both Governments, and which it is bound by the most solemn obligations to persevere in seeing carried into effect according to the provisions of the treaty.

I request your Excellency to reflect, that by persisting in your refusal to carry into effect, through the medium of your own officers and with the advice and assistance of the officers of the British Government, a system of administration for your reserved dominions, conducive to the prosperity of your subjects and calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants, you will violate an express stipulation of the Treaty of 1801. Let me entreat your Excellency, with all the warmth and sincerity of friendship, to consider for a moment the consequences in which you may involve yourself by such a course of conduct, and to hasten to avert them, by entering with zeal and cordiality into the views of the British Government, directed by a desire to promote your interests and those of your subjects, which are inseparable from its own, and by applying yourself, in concert with the Resident, to carry into early and complete effect in all its branches, the plan of reform to which you have given your assent. Your Excellency may rely on the cordial, able, and zealous co-operation of the Resident in this great and beneficial work, and on the constant and effectual support of the British Government, and you will ultimately enjoy the benefits of the improved administration in the augmentation of your resources, the comparative ease and regularity of the collections, the tranquillity of the country, and the general prosperity and happiness of your subjects.

The Resident, whose conduct through the whole of the negotiation with your Excellency on the question of reform has merited my entire approbation, and who is acquainted with my views and furnished with my instructions on every branch of the subject, is prepared, in concert with your Excellency, to enter on the necessary arrangements for carrying this salutary work into effect, and I confidently expect that it will now be set on foot without further delay or opposition on the part of your Excellency.

Letter from
Governor-General.

The next point of those remaining unsettled, to which I shall call your Excellency's attention, is the case of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan.

The injuries which this respectable person has sustained at the hands of your Excellency's Aumil of Sandee are so well known to your Excellency from Major Baillie's representations and the inspection of authentic documents, as to render a repetition of them unnecessary.

The result of my deliberate judgment in the case of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan was finally stated to your Excellency in a letter from the Resident under date the 29th April 1813, to which no reply has been received. From that letter your Excellency will have learned, that I am entirely satisfied of the validity of the Moonshee's claim, as described by the Resident, and that I deem it incumbent on your Excellency's justice to issue your positive orders without delay to the Aumil of the district of Sandee for the release and restoration to the Moonshee of his hereditary possessions in that district, with the amount of the rents which have been collected from them during the period of his being out of possession, and for his being permitted to farm the villages in his zemindaree at a fair and moderate assessment; also to the several persons who have built houses on the Moonshee's ground without his consent for the immediate removal of their buildings, and for the reinstatement of the Moonshee's sons, the only legitimate grand-children of Sulām Oolla Khan, in the houses and other possessions of which they have been unjustly deprived.

I now renew my request to your Excellency to issue orders to the foregoing effect without any delay, in order that justice may at last be rendered to this much injured person.

The case of the unfortunate Hoosein Alee Khan, the second son of the late Hyder Beg Khan, whose family has so many claims to the consideration both of your Excellency's house and of the British Government, has been so thoroughly canvassed, as to leave nothing to be said but a renewal of the expression of my unalterable conviction of his right to the restoration of the pension granted to the family by the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, through the mediation of the Marquess Cornwallis, and enjoyed until your Excellency's accession to the musnud. My deliberate judgment on this point has been recently stated to your Excellency, in my name, by the Resident, in a letter of the 1st of May, to which you have returned no answer.

The actual grant of the stipend, and the receipt of it by the family till your Excellency's accession, are capable of the most undoubted proof; and the Resident has repeatedly declared his readiness to prove them, either by a reference to the records of the Residency, or by the evidence of respectable inhabitants of Lucknow on oath. Your Excellency's ignorance of the circumstance of the original grant, therefore, the only ground on which you have been pleased to refuse the restoration of the stipend, may be removed at your pleasure; and I feel myself entitled to call upon your Excellency, under the specific authority which this Government derives from your Excellency's letter to Mr. Wellesley, of the 26th of October 1801, to restore to this unfortunate family the means of subsistence of which they have so long been deprived without any grounds of alleged misconduct, excepting in the case of the elder brother, whose disgraceful and inhuman conduct towards his brother only constitutes an additional and most powerful argument for the restoration of the stipend in favour of the latter, and of those branches of the family who are left in a condition of distress by Akbur Alee's unjust appropriation of the property of his deceased father. On this point I must again refer your Excellency to the Vice-President's letter of 15th of March 1811, the reasoning contained in which appears to me to be unanswerable.

The Resident has my orders to renew his instances to your Excellency on this subject, and it is my request and expectation that your Excellency will attend to his representations.

The unhappy differences which have so long subsisted between your Excellency and her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and the failure of the zealous endeavours of the Resident to effect a mitigation of her Highness's distresses and to mediate a reconciliation, have been a source of extreme concern to me. Her Highness's Highness's ultimate resolution to retire to the Honourable Company's dominions, and her actual removal to Elahabad, with the subsequent consent of your Excellency to the commutation on the fair and just terms proposed by the Resident of her Highness's jagier and khassa for a fixed payment in money, have relieved me from the necessity of dwelling on that distressing subject. I trust the impediments which I understand opposed the completion of this arrangement have been removed, and that it has been satisfactorily adjusted.

Letter from
Governor-General.

There is only one point connected with her Highness's affairs which it is necessary for me to press on your Excellency's attention, namely, the restitution of the possessions derived by her Highness from her ancestors at Delhi, which are still retained in your Excellency's hands, together with payment of the rents and profits arising from them since they have been held by your Excellency. A list of those possessions was submitted to your Excellency by the Resident in the month of Zeekaad 1227, and your Excellency declared to the Begum your intention of ordering restitution: it can, therefore, only be necessary to recall this circumstance to your recollection, to insure the immediate performance of your promise; and I accordingly request that you will immediately send an order for the delivery of the lands, houses, and gardens in question, to such person as her Highness may appoint to receive them, and that you will pay the amount which has been received by your Excellency on account of them into the Resident's treasury, on account of the Begum. Your Excellency's early compliance with this just demand will be received as a mark of your friendship and attention to the advice of the British Government.

Your Excellency's assent to the arbitration by the Resident of all differences between your Excellency and her Highness the Bhow Begum, has laid the foundation of a satisfactory adjustment of all depending questions between your Excellency and her Highness. The right of the British Government, or its representative at your Excellency's Court, to exercise the functions of an arbitrator in all those disputes cannot be justly contested, and I have derived much satisfaction from perceiving the conviction which has been produced on your Excellency's mind in that respect. The affairs of the khoord muhl, which were a source of so much vexatious correspondence and controversy with your Excellency, have happily been adjusted, by the submission of the ladies of the muhl to the just authority of the Begum: nothing remains, therefore, to be said in reply to that part of your Excellency's letter which relates to that subject, except to express my satisfaction at the result.

Your Excellency's declaration of your desire to render justice to the Sepoys of the Honourable Company who may be aggrieved by your officers, is perfectly satisfactory to my mind; and the mode of decision in such cases which your Excellency has been pleased to adopt, cannot but meet my entire approbation and concurrence.

Your Excellency's final acquiescence in the unrestricted employment of the British troops stationed within your dominions in the pursuit and apprehension of marauders committing depredations in the Company's provinces, and seeking shelter in your territories, as a measure deemed essential to the security and tranquillity of the Company's adjoining districts, has also been a source of great satisfaction to the British Government. Your Excellency may rely with confidence on the discreet exercise of that power by the officers of this Government.

I cannot conclude this letter without endeavouring to impress on your Excellency's mind the solemn nature of the obligation by which you are bound to resort to the friendly advice and assistance of the British Government, not only in such extraordinary and important affairs as those which have formed the principal topics of my present address, but in the ordinary administration of your Government. By a careful observance of this rule, your Excellency will secure to the utmost practicable extent the easy, tranquil, and regular transaction of your affairs, and will be enabled to avoid those vexatious controversies and discussions which must inevitably be the result of a deviation from this salutary course.

I must always regret the necessity of addressing your Excellency in the language of complaint, remonstrance, and expostulation. It is my earnest wish that

Letter from
Governor-General.

Although a considerable time has elapsed since I was honoured by the receipt of your Highness's letter, the contents of it have always been present to my mind, and the instructions which I have issued from time to time to the Resident at Lucknow on the subject of your Highness's affairs will have manifested the interest which I have taken in them, while his communications, conveying to you my own sentiments on all points, have supplied the defect of a direct answer to your Highness's letter, which I have been prevented from addressing to you by a variety of circumstances, which it would be tedious to recite.

I am unable to express in adequate terms the extreme concern and grief with which I perused the afflicting recital of your Highness's distresses so feelingly portrayed in that letter, my sincere sympathy in your severe and unmerited sufferings, and the poignant regret with which I learned the failure of the utmost exertions of the Resident to effect a mitigation of them, and to mediate a reconciliation between your Highness and his Excellency the Vizier, which might have enabled you to continue to reside in his Excellency's dominions, and to enjoy the ease, security, and contentment to which your high rank and many eminent virtues so justly entitle you.

Your Highness having finally adopted the resolution to withdraw from the dominions of Oude and to fix your residence in the Company's provinces, all that remained to be done by the Resident, acting under my orders, and moved by his own personal respect for your Highness and sympathy for your sufferings, was to adopt such measures as were in his power to facilitate your journey, to accompany it with those marks of respect and honour, on the part of the British Government, which are due to your exalted rank, and to provide for your honourable reception at Elahabad, the place which your Highness had selected for your residence.

It has been highly gratifying to me to learn that Major Baillie's proceedings have given satisfaction to your Highness; and I request you to be assured, that it is the earnest desire of the British Government that your residence in the Company's provinces may prove a source of comfort and tranquillity to your mind, and may gradually diminish the acuteness of your mental distresses.

Since your Highness's departure from Lucknow, Major Baillie has been sedulously employed in effecting an arrangement for the commutation, on fair and just principles, of your Highness's jagier and khassa for a regular payment in money; and I have reason to hope that he has been able to effect that desirable object on terms which will prove satisfactory to your Highness. Major Baillie has also received my instructions to renew his requisition to the Vizier for the restitution of the possessions which your Highness has derived from your ancestors at Delhi, and their transfer from the hands of his Excellency's agents to a person to be appointed by your Highness to receive charge of them for your benefit. I trust that no unnecessary delay will take place in the adjustment of this point, on which you will receive a communication from Major Baillie.

(Signed) MINTO.

To Major J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.
